FOR THE SAKE OF POWER

Four retail food distributor groups, representing some 125,000 stores, including chains, independents and cooperatives, recently petitioned OPS to at once suspend price controls on two lists of foods. The first list covered foods which are in abundant supply, and which in most cases have been selling at below-ceiling levels. The second list consisted of specialized and luxury foods which have no influence on the cost of living of the vast majority of American families, such as capers, cummin seed, stemless maraschino cherries, and parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Kozso on

At various times, other retail groups in non-food fields have made similar requests of OPS, and for similar reasons. What makes this significant is the light it casts on OPS' policies and philosophies. For the most part, the bureau has fought every attempt to lift or change its controls, even nesday for a two weeks' vacation when it was evident that there was no justification for main- trip to New Orleans, La., Nashville, taining them.
