SOMEONE ASKED ME the other day how I go about writing a SET FOR APRIL 19 column every week. This is as close to an unanswerable question I have received lately. Actually, sometimes it's easy; at 19th at 7:30 p. m. times it is harder than digging ditches (or at least. I suppose it is -- actually, I don't ever recall digging any ditches).

I explained that quite frequently I just sit down at the typewriter and wait for a brilliant inspiration. After 30 minutes or so of this, someone invariably will come along and wake me up, at which time I discover the paper is still blank.

That's really an exaggeration, but truthfully, I have sat and stared at the paper for as long as 10 minutes trying to come up with something.

It's 1 p. m. on a Monday, the day I figure I have to have my column written, in order to get it set up in type, and not interfere with other cheduled activities. I sit staring at the typewriter, wondering what I'm going to write about, and wondering if I have a chance to write about it without being interrupted. I glance at the desk and spot a note I wrote to myself. I have to call this guy before 2 p. m. because he goes beyond reach of communications devices at that time. I wonder vaguely how he manages that. I make the call, postponing the interview until the next morning. (Pretty shrewd move. After all, who knows what can happen between now and tomorrow morning? Maybe something will develop which will make Again I stare at typewriter. Deep down in the recesses of mind an idea struggles for attention. Advertising manager enters office with 15 different ideas, smothering my single little column idea forever. He leaves. I sneak another look at my typewriter, and insert clean sheet of paper, Phone rings. Someone wants to take a picture of her nephew, who is visiting here from Weirdsville. Calif. but I love the companionship of those who do care for coffee -- or maybe they really don't like it either. Anyway, I rarely pass up a chance for coffee, because the conversation is always so stimulating. And some of the things you overhear from the next booth are really wild.)

At 3:30, I return to office and decide it's too late to go back to office today, so I figure I'll just wait and go down tonight and write a column. Supper is over about 8, and television set is too loud to allow concentration on column written at home (this is after I'd already decided it.was too late to go down to the office). Finally things die down, and everybody else gets to bed, and I lug typewriter into living room, with no idea of what I'm going to write. This, I say to myself, will have to be one of those times when I just stick a piece of paper into the machine and start writing whatever comes

I wish I could have recalled that idea I almost had once during the day.

The major purpose of the meeting will be to coordinate plans to intensify efforts to alert the American public to the fact that many menknown to be prisoners have not yet been identified.

A disposition will also be reached on the disposition of the bracelets which bear the names of returned POWs. VIVA is in the process of contacting every returning POW family to establish their desires as to the handling of their loved ones brace-

Until the families have had the opportunity to meet, we are asking everyone to continue to wear their bracelet with the appropriate star attached - a white star if the man is returning and a blue star if the man has not yet been identified. In this manner, they can help alert others that the task is not yet completed. These stars are being distributed by VIVA and are available at most POW-MIA offices around the country.
