FORTY-NINTH YEAR NUMBER 27

SUDAN, LAMB COUNTY, TEXAS

THURSDAY, AUGUST 23, 1973 10 CENTS PER COPY

—by Dalton

EVEN before this particular piece of writing was started, I had determined to discuss various living creatures, some of which you can eat, some of which you kill, and others which I wouldn't know what to do with.

Originally the idea was to write about snakes, then these fellows came along all enthused about rabbits and before the day was over, a news release introduced the intriguing subjects of coots and brants.

A fascinating program on rabbits was presented to a service club I attended last week, when the members and guests were put into the proper frame of mind by being served baked rabbit as the main entree for the noon meal. A fellow named Rick Haley told about a rabbit processing plant being planned in this area (it will be the only such plant in Texas), and he convinced all of us that this is a business with tremendous potential financially. (You start with just a little doe, and first thing you know, you've got a lot of bucks).

Rabbit meat is in great demand by hospitals and other medical facilities which are aware of the advantages of the food. It is low in cholesterol, low in calories and high in protein content. Major supermarket chains are interested in obtaining properly processed rabbit meat which is all white meat.

Besides that, it tastes great, they say. I don't know, because I didn't eat any of it. "I'll bet you thought it was chicken," the speaker said to the Lions Club queen and sweetheart. I thought it was chicken, too; that's why I didn't eat any of it. I don't like chicken very much. Actually chicken tastes okay, but it's so much trouble to get it separated from the bone that I'm exhausted by the time I get a nice big bite. (It's the same with pecans; I love them so long as somebody else shells them for me).

Anyway, the idea of eating a rabbit doesn't especially appeal to me, but apparently I am in the minority, because most of those who tried it like it. And this is great; I wish these fellows all the success and happiness in the world in their venture. Snakes also are eaten by some folks, but we'll skip that delicacy, too; thank you. So far as I am concerned, snakes are to be killed, regardless of race, color or creed. There is no such thing as a harmless snake, and anyone who says there is just doesn't know how badly scared some of us can be by any kind of snake. I have a friend who allows a pet snake the run of his house. We don't visit often.

Coots and brants? Well, these caught my attention in a release from the Texas Parks and Wildlife Dept. "Parks and Wildlife Dept. wildlife staff members presented their proposed duck, goose, coot and brant seasons and bag limits to federal authorities during the first week of August."

I hunt about like I grow trees,

Vows Exchanged

Miss Donna Danese Provence and Jeffrey Don Lynskey were united in marriage Friday evening, August 17, at 7:00 p. m. in the First Baptist Church of Sudan. Rev. Eddie Freeman officiated in the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Provence. The groom is the son of Perry Lynskey of Lubbock.

Vows were read before an archway of greenery and yellow gladiolas and candelabra featuring yellow tapers.

but even so this puzzled me. I'm aware that people who don't know any better get up at 4 a. m. in the winter and go duck hunting, and I know that a goose gets cooked. However, I thought a coot was a disagreeable old fellow, but hardly so much so that there was a season for legally shooting them. I never heard of a brant at all, and I have no idea how many bags one is allowed to shoot during a season.

Kathy Fisher, organist, presented wedding selections and accompanied Deanna-Phillips who sang "The Twelfth of Never" and "Wedding Song".

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a formal gown of polyester voile with re-embroidered lace trimmed in seed pearls over bridal taffeta. The gown featured cotton lace bands trimming the bodice and forming a deep ruffle flounce at the hemline. Her full-length veil of illusion fell from a headband of cotton lace set with pearls.

She carried a white Bible topped with a yellow orchid surrounded by miniature white and yellow roses.

For something new the bride chose her dress, something old was a handkerchief belonging to her grandmother, something borrowed, a necklace belonging to Debbie Ritchie, and something blue was the traditional blue garter handmade by Willie Mae Rice. She wore pennies of the years of their births in her

COTTON TALKS

The new cotton program which will govern the industry for the years 1974 through 1977, as it is being explained to High Plains farmers at county meetings around the area by officials of Lubbock-based Plains Cotton Growers, Inc., shapes up as "considerably less than is needed, but if properly administered a program with which we can continue as the nation's leading cotton producing area."

Major provisions of the program, with PCG comment as to their application on the High Plains, are as follows.

--A minimum national allotment of 11 million acres, compared to this year's 10 million acre allotment. Allotment for the 25 PCG counties surrounding Lubbock therefore should be about 10 percent more than this year's 1,485,145 acres. And, generally speaking individual farm allotments will be up 10 percent also.

--Price support payments equal to the difference between 38¢ per pound and the national average price paid to all farmers for all cotton during the calendar year in which the crop is planted, meaning all farmers will get the same payment regardless of the price at which their personal crops are sold. If the national average price paid to farmers for all cotton, January through December of 1974, for example, comes to 30 cents a pound, then all farmers would get a payment of 8 cents per pound times their projected yield times their base allotment. Of course if the average market price comes to 38 cents or more, there will be no payment. Projected yield is to be calculated as under the present program -- a three year average of actual yields adjusted for adverse weather factors.

Generally speaking, the average High Plains cotton runs approximately three cents a pound below "average of the crop." Therefore the total "guaranteed" return on the High Plains from allotted acreage should average in the neighborhood of 35 cents. PCG emphasizes, however, that this calculation is based on average market conditions and average crop quality and might be totally in error under a given set of conditions.

--Target price will be adjusted in 1976 and 1977 to reflect any changes in cost of production and/or production efficiency as evidenced by yields.

4-H NEWS

Some 146 4-H'ers put their years of experience and hard work on the line in district senior record book competition Tuesday, August 14, and when it was over, 34 winners had been selected to represent District 2 in state competition next month.
The winning books representing 30 4-H awards programs were announced by County Extension agents, Bobby Brunson and Lynn Bowerman.
The record books will compete at the state level against the best from 12 other districts of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service. 209 junior level record books also were judged. Blue, red and white ribbons were awarded.

For the young leaders of tomorrow, record book competition is the critical measurement of their achievements over the years, said the agents. Records reveal their consistency in achieving goals, their experience in 4-H projects and their growth and development in personal, community and civic responsibilities.

The senior 4-H'ers whose record books will compete in state competition from Lamb County are Glenn Branscum of the Earth-Sprinklake 4-H Club. Glenn won the Public Speaking records competition. Rodney Logsdon's record book won the Texas Sheep & Wool, Angora Goats and Mohair competition. Rodney and Glenn's books will go to state for judging.

Other senior records judged from Lamb County were: Jim Fields, Sudan; Sheila Lewis, Earth; Jennifer Templeton, Earth; Brad Walden, Littlefield and Aubrey Pitts, Pleasant Valley who placed 2nd in the Santa Fe Award judging.
