LAST WEEK we talked about a fearful flower whose emotions registered on a polygraph, according to a report from Lifeline, the H. L. Hunt program. That experiment as reported was interesting, but perhaps unbelievable to some. This week, we're sure Lifeline won't mind if we discuss another experiment the program claims was true. It involves mice and rock music, and I find this result easy to believe, since it confirms our own experiences and reactions to rock music.

According to the Lifeline commentator, Melvin Munn, a teenage boy decided to test the effect of rock music on mice and plants. He took two mice and two plants and put a mouse and plant in each of two separate rooms. One mouse, Ralph, and a potted plant were subjected to music from a radio station which played only soft, gentle melodies. The other plant and mouse, Herky, were subjected to a pure rock station eight hours a day.

After one month, the student made a report. The plant living with Ralph had grown almost an inch and put out new leaves. Ralph was gentle, friendly and would walk up the hand and arm of his student friend. (Admittedly this is friendlier than most of us would want to be with a mouse). Ralph also was tested by running through a maze every day. At first it took him about 35 seconds to run the maze; at the end of the month he could do it in 20

Herky was angry and anti-social. He kept getting out of his cage, chewing up billfolds and books, and once bit the student's father when he was picked up. The plant had grown almost none at all. And it took Herky five minutes to go through the maze at the end of the month, as Herky got worse at it every day.

Well, now. Certainly I'm not surprised at the findings. I'm surprised that Herky and the plant lived at all, because if I were locked in a room and forced to listen to rock music 8 hours a day, I seriously doubt I could live a month. And if I did, I'd be a screaming lunatic good only for foaming at the mouth (perhaps by then I could be a rock performer myself).

Munn, of course, was trying to say that teenagers who surround themselves with noise while they're supposed to be studying or driving or whatever they're doing have reason for being anti-social and belligerent, as some of them are. It's a tremendous credit to our teenagers that so many of them still are courteous and composed despite listening to all that stuff (and we're talking about the soul and hard rock, hollering songs, not the softer

One thing can be said for rock music, though. It'll keep the mice out of the house.

The four Sudan High School basketball teams again lost all four games to Farwell teams last Tuesday night in pre - Thanksgiving holiday bouts.

The Farwell Steers defeated the Hornets 72-59. Danny William s led the Hornets with 17 points. Next was Richard Tamplin with 14. Game statistics were as follows with fig ures listed as field goals, free throws, fouls, and total points for the game, and standing point average for the game: 1 and 0; Kyle Martin 2, 0, lar 0, 0, 0, 0. In the Farwell game, the Homets comm itted a total of 15 fouls, nine bad passes, walked twice, double dribbled one time, and had one lane violation. Coach O'Rear stated, "On the plus side of the book, we had three steals, tied the ball up eight times, caused eight mista kes, had four offensive rebounds, and 16 defensive rebounds. If you were grading on the scale of minus one for all errors and a plus one for all the good things we did, we played with a grade of +11. Our opponents are averaging 65 points a game while we are averaging 57 a game. Offensively and defensively, we are starting to 'put it together' slowly and should have it all together by the time we get to district!! Scoring by quarters was 6-10, 24-18, and 32-27, Farwell all the way. Mary Ann Bellar netted 19 points for the Hornettes; Phyllis Ray had 9, Sharon Burton 4 and Kay Tamplin 5. Sharon and Kathy Booth each had 18 points, and Kathy White and Sheryl Woods two each for Farwell. The Hornettes have been in foul trouble in previous games but against Farwell, any one player did not have more than three fouls. They had a total of 17 for the game, and Farwell had 15.

per game during the season. The JV boys lost to Farwell 46-34. However, they are starting to put it together also according to Coach O'Rear. The score of this game does not indicate the closeness of the game. We still have a lot to learn and the bench has to give the starters more help than they are now doing. I thought they did just that against Farwell Tuesday night, and as we get farther into the season, it will be hard to tell the difference between the starting five and the substitutes.

Kamp Joins A&M Sea Grant Staff

Dr. Dan Kamp has been named project manager for marine education and advisory services with the Texas A&M University Sea Grant Program.

Kamp, an associate professor of recreation and parks, assumed his new position Oct. 15. He formerly was a Texas Agricultural Extension Service project leader with the Department of Recreation and Parks.

An essential part of the Texas A&M Sea Grant Program, advisory services brings the expertise of Texas A&M specialists in marketing, management, seafood quality, fisheries and environmental quality to bear on the problems of the wide spectrum of marine elated businesses and industries in the state.

'The scope of our marine advisory services activities is quite broad," Dr. John C. Calhoun, vice president for academic affairs and director of the A&M Sea Grant Program, said. "We actually have in operation the mechanism by which we can draw on the resources of virtually every element of the institution. Advisory services is an overall institutional undertaking."

Through advisory people located "in the field" in key areas of the Texas coastal zone, University research is translated into practical applications in the everyday concerns of the marine community, he said.

We are fortunate to have someone like Dr. Kamp who already is familiar with the state, who has been with the University and who has experience with people and problem-oriented activities such as advisory services." Calhoun said.

Kamp views the marine education and advisory services efforts as "a pipeline of information." Advisory services activities make the findings of ongoing research available to industry, and industry responds with additional ideas and problems, he said.

Although Kamp will perform administrative duties -determining funding and direction of projects-the individual project leader will still determine how a project's objectives are accomplished, he noted.

"My job," Kamp said, "will be to make sure that all our efforts are channeled toward a common goal-
