HOW ARE YOU VOTING ON THE AMENDMENTS

There are five constitutional amendments to be voted on Saturday, and in order that the readers and voters may kindly rehearse the amendments that were published in these columns some time ago, we give them in brief so that the voter may vote more intelligently:

BALLOT.

FOR the Amendment to Article 17 Section 58 of the Constitution, abolishing the Board of Prison Commissioners.

AGAINST the above amendment. FOR the amendment to Section 5, 21, 22, 23 of Art. 4, providing for the raising of salaries of State officers.

AGAINST above. FOR the amendment to Section 51 of Article 3 authorizing the Legislature to grant aid to Confederate soldiers and sailors and their widows who have been residents of this state since January 1901.

Against above. FOR the amendment to Section 24 of Article 3, relating to millage and per diem of members of the Legislature.

Against above. FOR amendment to Section 2 of Article 6 of the Constitution, providing that only nativeborn or naturalized citizens of the United States shall be qualified electors in this State, and providing that either the husband or the wife may pay the poll tax of the other and receive the receipt therefor, and permitting the Legislature to provide for absentee voting.

Against the above. The Herald will support the one for the increase in Confederate pensions, the one knocking out the foreign voters, and would support the one for increased pay of State officials if it had any idea it would have any influence toward providing better officers at Austin. The going away of the Board of Prison Commissioners might also save money.

HOUSE PARTY

On Saturday afternoon, July 9th, a jolly party left Brownfield for T. C. Ivey's ranch ten miles west of Plains, where they have a beautiful ranch home. Arriving we were greeted and made to feel at home by Mr. and Mrs. Ivey, who are past masters in the art of entertaining. Next morning we were called to the dining room, where a delicious breakfast was served.

Later in the forenoon the entire party left for the lake, where amid much fun and hilarity on the part of the merry-makers and woe and distress among the finny tribe, enough were drawn to the surface for a bountiful feast. In the afternoon the entire crowd enjoyed a delightful plunge in the bathing pool. It might be mentioned here that one member of our party was followed throughout the day by a series of accidents, which resulted in much laughter by all but the party concerned. He being a good sport took the teasing good naturedly and says "there will be another day." Later in the afternoon, supper was served picnic style. No better repast was ever spread for the "fatted calf" had been killed. The special dish prepared by Messrs. Ivey and Renfro is well known to cowboys and has many names. Music and dancing prevailed throughout the evening, and it seemed the crowd was endowed with a sense of humor and one lady with an acute sense of smell detected some foreign odor, which suggested apples, thus—apples is now the standing joke of the party.

We enjoyed a delightful drive over the ranch looking over Mr. Ivey's registered cattle.

Tom Ivey is a cowboy of the old school type, big hearted, broad minded and chivalrous and as full of fun as a boy in his teens. Mrs. Ivey has charming wife, numbers her friends by her acquaintances.

The house party consisted of Messrs. Hall, Rutherford, Renfro, Snodgrass and Mathis; Misses Hamilton and Payne; Messrs. Snodgrass, Renfro, Mathis, Rutherford, and Hall.

REDUCED RATES ON CATTLE TO CONTINUE

The Santa Fe Railway has decided to continue in effect the emergency live stock rates from New Mexico and Texas until September 15, 1921, announces T. E. Gallaher, general freight and passenger agent of the Panhandle lines of the Santa Fe. The reduced rates made in the spring expire on July 15th.

The rates apply from points on the Santa Fe in New Mexico and Texas to Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana and Idaho. The rates were made at the earnest request of the live stock growers to enable them to move their stock to summer pastures.

Through much stock was moved in the spring under these low rates, other conditions were unfavorable at the time, making it difficult to move all the stock as planned. It is expected as the crops move to market more money will be available for the stockman. Idaho, Montana and Wyoming stockmen are anxious to increase their herds and flocks that were so seriously reduced by the drought conditions last year. They look to the southwest for stock to restock their ranges.

To meet these conditions the Santa Fe Railway decided to do its share by continuing the emergency rates on live stock. The northwest has had a splendid season so far and will have an abundance of feed, but more live stock is needed to turn this feed into money. The low rates will give the New Mexico and Texas stockmen a better market for their surplus stock in the northwest.

The ladies met about 10:30, and after an hour spent in very pleasant conversation, dinner was spread in "picnic fashion," in the beautiful little grove near Mrs. Shelton's home. The dinner consisted of fried chicken, and more fried chicken, and all the various good things that go with it, and was served at 12:30 to about 40 person, including the families of the Missionary ladies and several invited guests.

The Missionary ladies had their regular weekly lesson-program in the afternoon, and after a social half hour, the guests departed for their homes, each voting Mrs. Shelton a very royal hostess.

The College of Industrial Arts, at Denton, is making a campaign for the privilege of demonstrating the Smith-Lever Food Act in Texas, with the home demonstration extension service. This is one place where departmental lapping is being done, as both the C. I. A. and the Agricultural and Mechanical College are doing home demonstration service. In the name of economy, this ought to be cut out of one of the colleges, and that one should be the boys' college. What business has a boy with home economics?

Jack Johnson "checked out" of the Leavenworth Federal Prison at 6 A. M., July 9th. The former world heavy weight boxing champion had served his sentence of one year and a day for violation of the Mann Act, and was square with the government, he having paid late yesterday a fine of $1,000 which was imposed with the sentence. Needless to say that his white wife, who has a taste for roughness and a sense of smell that runs to garlic, met him at the prison doors with open arms and a well-filled purse. Such a woman!

A parrot who had been taught to say "sic em!" had escaped from his cage, and was perched upon the upper branches of a tree; two dogs came along; the parrot said "sic em" and the dogs began to fight. Pleased with the result, he kept saying "sic em" and climbed down through the tree so as to get a better view of the fracas. Finally he got down to the ground, and said "sic em" again. One of the dogs suddenly turned his attention to the parrot and shook a few thousand feathers out of him. The bird climbed back into the tree and thoughtfully remarked to himself: "The trouble with me I talked too d—n much."—Ex.

It seems that people cannot stop at reasonable things, but must run everything "ragged." Over in Michigan recently, a number of the fashion plates of the city appeared on the streets of the town in their bathing suits, and of course a number of the "close followers" appeared also, and the police had to inform them that they would not allow them on the street with so little clothes on and told them they must put on a bath robe if they came to town in their bathing suits. This of course happened away up in Michigan, but it does not take long for styles to travel, and who knows, but another week that some of the Lubbock people will be parading the streets in a bathing suit. Here's hoping they do not, but you can't always tell.—Lubbock Avalanche.

HON. JOHN WANAMAKER John Wanamaker has completed thirty years of service as a merchant. Wanamaker was the first big merchant to discover the potentialities of regular systematic newspaper advertising. It would require police details to keep him out of newspaper offices. And the only reason under the sun why he likes advertising is that it increases business for his stores. Whether times are good or bad, Wanamaker advertisements always appear in New York and Philadelphia papers.—Hunt County Times. Mr. Wanamaker became a merchant before he became an advertiser. He began as quite a small merchant, but was unwilling to remain small. He experimented with advertising at a time when most of his competitors, themselves small merchants, were convinced that advertising didn't pay. John Wanamaker was not willing to give his valuable time and valuable brains and unusual business capacity to a store which depended upon the "drop in" rate or upon the handshaking methods then in vogue. Wanamaker believed there was a better and bigger way to attract customers than by standing in his door and intrigue the passers-by. So he began advertising—putting little announcements in the newspapers. The public responded in a faint but perceptible way. Therefore he put in more ads. Soon he employed a man to do nothing but look after his advertising. Everybody knows the rest of it. Everybody knows that John Wanamaker not only showed his competitors how to sell goods but how to advertise. To imagine John Wanamaker running a store which carried no goods that would bear advertising, or prices that he performed the public not to know, is to conceive of the Egyptian pyramids swimming in the Nile. All merchants can't be Wanamakers. But it looks like all merchants would wish not to be like Wanamaker's first competitors who disappeared into unadvertised obscurity a generation ago.—Ex.

SYNOPSIS. CHAPTER I—Graham Norcross, railroad manager, and his secretary, Jimmie Dodds, are marooned at Sand Creek. Dodds is with a young lady, Sheila Marrae, and her small cousin, Jimmie, they write a special car is carried off.

CHAPTER II—Norcross recognizes the car when he was to meet at Fort City. He and Dodds rescue Chadwick, the engineer, and Norcross, the manager, in the hands of eastern speculators, headed by Frederick L. Durgin, president of the line. Norcross, learning that Sheila Marrae is stopping at Fort City, escapes.

CHAPTER III—Dodds overhears conversation between Rufus Hatch and Gustave Henkel, Fort City manager, in which they are plotting to kidnap Norcross, their object being to keep Chadwick from attending a meeting of directors to reorganize the Pioneer Short Line, which would jeopardize their interests.

CHAPTER IV—To curb the monopoly controlled by Hatch and Henkel, the Red Tower corporation, Norcross forms the Lubbock Storage and Warehouse company. He has been to market a few days in Sheila Marrae. Dodds learns that Sheila is married, but living apart from her husband. Norcross does not know this.

CHAPTER V—Hatch, aware that Dodds has knowledge of his and Henkel's plot, orders the Chickadee, adding up on his job, to take Dodds to the office. He is to be kept there, recovering consciousness. He is believed to have regained and gone east.

CHAPTER VI—Norcross, aware that Dodds has knowledge of his and Henkel's plot, orders the Chickadee, adding up on his job, to take Dodds to the office. He is to be kept there, recovering consciousness. He is believed to have regained and gone east.

CHAPTER VII—With Kirgan, the road's master mechanic, Dodds gets a line on Norcross' disappearance. He follows a clue given them through a missing locomotive.

CHAPTER VIII—The rescue party finds and releases Norcross from captivity to a little town in New Mexico. He regains control of the Pioneer Short Line. Dodds is given a job to find whom Durgin has sent to take charge.

CHAPTER IX—Dodds follows an emissary of the Red Tower people, spying on Norcross, to a coal yard, where he overhears a plot to kidnap Norcross out of business, and at the risk of his life frustrates it.

CHAPTER X—At the home of Sheila Marrae Dodds is witness of strange doings of man and woman. He regains signs on the life of his friend and boss. He prepares to defend him.

CHAPTER XI—The sudden return of Sheila's uncle drives the intruder away. Later Dodds recognizes him as Howard Collingwood, nephew of President Durgin, of the Pioneer Short Line. A series of wrecks on the line, impossible to explain, cause alarm to the management.

The second minute passed, and then a third, and yet there was no word from Bertram. "Call him," snapped the boss to Tarbell, but before the ex-con's hand could reach the key, the sounder began to rattle out a string of dots and dashes, and again Morse it was, but we could all read it only too plainly.

"Too late—nude three me and I had to crawl and drag a game leg—five passed full speed at ten-eleven—couldn't make it." I saw the boss' hands shut up as though the finger nails would cut into the palms.

"That ends it," he said, with a sort of swearing groan, in his voice; and then to Tarbell: "You may as well call Kirgan and tell him to order out the wrecking train. Then have Perkins make up a relief train while you're calling the doctors. Van Britt, you go and notify the hospital over your own office wire. Have my private car put into the relief, and see to it that it has all the necessary supplies. And you'd better notify the undertakers, too."

"Great Joss!" but it was horrible for us to be hustling around and making arrangements for the funeral while the people who were to be gathered up and buried were still swarming along live and well, half of them in the crookings among the Timber Mountain foothills and the other half somewhere in the desert stretches below Sand Creek!

Tarbell had sent Dishrow to the phone to call Kirgan, and Mr. Van Britt was turning away to go to his own office, when the chair in the corner by the car-reel table fell over backwards with a crash and Durgin came staggering across the room. He was staring straight ahead of him as if he had gone blind, and the sweat was running down his face to lose himself in the straggling beard.

When he spoke his voice seemed to come from away off somewhere, and he was still staring at the blank wall beyond the counter-rolling. "Did I—did I hear somebody say you're sending for the undertakers?" he asked, with a dry rattle in his throat; and then, without waiting for an answer: "While you're at it, you'd better get one for me. . . there's the money to pay him," and he tossed a thick roll of bank bills, wrapped around with a rubber band, over to Tarbell at the train desk.

"None in the least—only I wish we had a little better proof of it." "Where did he live?" "He boarded at Mrs. Chandler's, out on Cross street. Morris boards there, too, I believe." "The boss turned to me." "Jimmie, go and get Morris." I carried the call and brought Morris back with me. He was a cheerful, red-headed fellow, and everybody liked him. "It isn't a 'sweet-hot' session, Morris," said the boss, quietly, when we came in and the relief operator sat down, sort of half scared, on the edge of a chair. "We want to know something more about Durgin. He roomed at your place, didn't he?" Morris admitted it, but said he'd never been very chummy with the dispatcher; that Durgin wasn't chummy with anybody. Then the boss went straight to the point, as he usually did. "You were present and saw all that happened in the other room. Can you tell us anything about that money?" pointing to the pile of bills on my desk. Billy Morris wriggled himself into a little better chair-hold. "Nothing that would be worth telling. If things hadn't turned out just as they have," he returned. "But now I guess I know."

The Wreckers

By FRANCIS LYNDE

Copyright by Chas. Scribner's Sons

I left Mrs. Chandler's this evening about eleven o'clock to come on duty, and Durgin was just ahead of me. Some fellow—a man in a snuff-colored overcoat and with a soft hat pulled down so that I couldn't see his face—stopped Durgin on the sidewalk, and they talked together.

"I didn't hear what was said, but I saw the overcoat man pass something to Durgin and saw Durgin put whatever it was into his pocket. Then the other man dodged and went away, and did it so quick that I didn't see which way he went or what became of him. Durgin must have run after he left the corner, for I didn't see anything more of him until I got to the office."

"He was there when you came in?" It was Mr. Norcross who wanted to know.

"Yes. He had his coat off and was at work on the train sheet. I don't think Durgin left his chair, or said anything to anybody until he jumped up and began to walk the floor, taking up and saying that he'd put Four and Five together on the single track."

There was silence for a little time, and when the boss said, "Do you think you would recognize the man in the snuff-colored overcoat, if you should see him again?"

"Yes, I might, if he had on the same coat and hat."

"That will do then. Keep this thing to yourself, and if the messenger party come after you, send them to Mr. Van Britt or to me."

After Morris had gone, Mr. Van Britt shook his head sort of vaguely.

"It's h—l, Graham," he ripped out, bounding to his feet and beginning to tramp up and down the room. "To think that these devils would take the chance of murdering a lot of totally innocent people to gain their ends! What are you going to do about it?"

"I don't know yet, Durgin; but I am going to do something. This state of affairs can't go on. The simplest thing is for me to throw up the job and let the Short Line drop back into the old rut. I'm not sure that it wouldn't save a good many lives in the end if I should do it. And yet it seems such a cowardly thing to do—to resign under fire."

Mr. Van Britt had his hand on the door-knob, and what he said made me warm to my finger-tips.

"We're all standing by you, Graham; all you understand—to the last man and the last ditch. And you're not going to pitch it up, you're going to stay until you have thrown the barroom into these high-binders, clear up to the hitches. That's my property. The trouble's over for tonight, and you'd better go up to the hotel and turn in. There is another day coming, or if there isn't, it won't make any difference to any of us. Good-night."

CHAPTER XIII

What the Pilot Engine Found

For a time after the suicide of the off-trick-dispatcher the wreck epidemic paused. Acting upon Mr. Norcross's suggestion, Mr. Van Britt called his men in, a crew at a time, and gave them the straight tip; and after that the hoodoo died a natural death, and a good many pairs of eyes all along the Short Line were keeping a sharp lookout for the trouble-makers. In the meantime, Tarbell, still digging faithfully, managed to turn up a few facts that were worth something. In the Perolite case he found a lone prospector living in a shack high up on the farther side of the canon who told him that late in the evening of the day preceding the wreck he had seen two men climbing the slope from which the boulder had been dislodged, and that one of them was carrying a pick. Also, further investigation seemed to prove that the rail which the blow of the rock was supposed to have knocked loose had been previously weakened, either by drawing some of the spikes, or by unscrewing the nuts on the bolts at the joints.

In another field, and this time under Ripley's instructions, our ex-cop-punch had been able to see and half a trap. By diligent search he had found the man Marbury, the Clanahan benchman, who, under pressure, had given away the Timber Mountain plot which had climaxed in the kidnaping of the boss. This man had been deliberately shot in a bar-room brawl and left for dead. But he had crawled away and had got out of town to live and recover at a distant cattle ranch in the Limberton hills.

When Tarbell discovered him he had cut out the booze, had grown a beard, and was thirsting for vengeance. Tarbell brought him back to Portal City, and presently there began to be developments. Murphy knew all the ropes. In a little time, Ripley, with Tarbell's help, was loaded for bear. One chilly October afternoon the lawyer came down to our office to tell Mr. Norcross that the game was cornered.

"All you have to do now is to give the word," was the way Ripley wound up.

"You refused to do it on a former occasion, because we couldn't get the men higher up. This time we can nail Clanahan, and a good few of the political gangsters and bosses in the other towns along the line. What do you say?"

The boss looked up with the little horse-shoe frown wrinkling between his eyes.

"Can we see Hatch and Henckel?"

"No, not yet."

"Very well; then you may look those papers up in your safe and we'll wait. When you see your way clear to a criminal trial, with Rufus Hatch and Gustav Henckel in the prisoner's dock, we'll start the legal machinery; but not before."

By now we were right on the eve of the state election. As far as anybody could see, the railroad had traveled free and clear of the political fight. The boss had kept his promise to maintain neutrality and was still keeping it.

At the appointed time the big day dawned, and the political wind-up held the center of the stage. So far as we were concerned, it passed off very quietly. Along in the afternoon the newspaper offices began to get out bulletins, and by evening the result was no longer doubtful. For the first time in years the power of the political machine had been smashed decisively at the polls, and on the following morning the Mountaineer announced the election of Governor Burrell, with a safe working majority in both houses of the legislature for the Independents.

It was on the third day after the election, rather late in the afternoon, that the boss had a call from a mining promoter named Duves, representing a bunch of mine owners at Stratheona who were having trouble with smelter. The smelter, one of the few Hatch monopolies which hadn't been shaken loose as yet, was located in the single six miles below Stratheona, and it was served exclusively by its own industrial railroad, which it was using as a lever to pry an excessive hauling charge out of the mine owners. Wouldn't Mr. Norcross try to do something about it?

The boss said he'd do anything he could, and asked what the mine owners wanted. Duves said they wanted help that they were going to hold a mass meeting in Stratheona the following morning at nine o'clock. Would it, or wouldn't it, be possible for Mr. Norcross to be present at that meeting?

Of course, the boss said he'd go. Duves went away, and before we broke off to go to dinner at the railroad club, I was given a memorandum order for a special.

At the club I found that Mr. Norcross had an invited guest—Major Kendrick. For a week or two Mrs. Sheila had been visiting at the state capital, and the major's wife and Maizie Ann were with her. So the good old major was sort of unattached, and glad enough, I took it, to be a guest at anybody's table.

For a while the table talk—in which, of course, Jimmie Dodds hadn't any part whatever—circled around the late landslide election, and what Governor Burrell's party would do, now that it had the say-so. But by and by it got around to the railroad situation.

"You're putting up a mighty good fight, Graham, my son, but it isn't over yet—not by a far, wh—!" This isn't just the way the major said it, but it's as near as I can come to his soft Southern drawl with the smothered "rs." "I've known Misteh Rufus Hatch for a good many years, and he has the perseverance of the very devil. With all that has been done you must never forget, for a single hour, that youh admirable reform structure stands, as yet, upon the life of a single man. I won't lose sight of that, Graham."

The boss looked up kind of curiously.

"You and Sheila seem to think that point needs emphasizing more than any other," he commented.

The major's fine old eyes twinkled gravely.

"You are mighty safe in payin' strict attention to whatever the little gnat tells you, Graham, my boy," he asserted. "She has a way of gettin' at the heart of things that puts us men men to shame—she has, for a fact, son."

"She has been very helpful to me," the boss put in, with his eyes in his plate. "In fact, I may say that she has herself suggested a good many of the moves in the railroad game. It's marvelous, and I can't understand how she can do it."

They went on for a while, singing Mrs. Sheila's praises over in a good many different ways, and I thought, wherever she might happen to be just then, her pretty little ears ought to be burning good and hard. To hear them talk you would have thought she was another Portia-person, and then some.

The dinner was itself out after a while, and when the waiter brought the cigars, the boss was looking at his watch.

"I'm sorry I can't stay and smoke with you, major," he said, pushing his chair back. "But the business grind never lets up. I'm obliged to go to Stratheona tonight."

I don't know what the major was going to say to this abrupt break-away; the after-dinner social cigar was a sort of religious ceremony with him. But whatever he was going to say, he didn't say it, for at that moment a telegraph boy came in and handed him a message. He put on his other glasses and read the telegram, with his big goggle looking more than ever like a dagger and the fierce white mustache twinkling. At the end of things he folded the message and put it into his pocket, saying, sort of sobberly:

"Graham, there are times when Sheila's intuitions are mighty neat uncanny; they are, for a fact, son. This wire is from her. What do you suppose it says?"

Of course, the boss said he couldn't suppose anything about it, and the major went on.

"She tells me, in just seven words, not to let you go to Stratheona tonight. Now what do you make of that? How on top of God's green earth did she know away off round at the capital, that you were meaning to go to Stratheona tonight?"

Mr. Norcross shook his head. Then he said, "There are two ways—both kinds—though I don't know why anybody should telegraph or telephone the capital that I expect to attend a mine-owners' meeting tomorrow morning in the big gold camp. That's why I'm going, you know."

"But this warning," the major in-tered. "There's a reason for it, Graham, as sure as you are born."

Again the boss shook his head.

"Between you and me, you and Sheila, I'm due to acquire a case of nerves. I don't know what she has heard, but I can't afford to dodge a business appointment. Sheila has merely overheard an echo of the threats that are constantly being made by the Hatch sympathizers. It's the aftermath of the election, but it's all talk. They're down and out, and they haven't the nerve to strike back, now."

That ended matters at the club, and the boss and I walked down to the headquarters. The special, with Buck Chandler, was waiting, and at the last minute I thought I wasn't going to get to go.

"There's no need of your putting in a night on the road, Jimmie," said the boss, with the kindly thought for other people's comfort that never failed him. But after I had begged a little, telling him that he'd need somebody to take notes in the mine meeting, he said, "All right," and we got aboard and gave the word to Maclise, the conductor, to get his clearance and go.

A few minutes later we pulled out and the night run was begun. Like every other car the boss had ever owned, the "507" was fitted up as a working office, and since he had me along, he opened up a lot of claim papers upon which the legal department was giving him the final say-so, and we went to work.

For the next two hours I was so busy that I didn't know when we passed the various stations. At half past nine Mr. Norcross snatched a rubber band over the last of the claim files, lighted a pipe, and told me I might go to bed if I wanted to; said that he was going himself after he'd had a smoke. Just then, Chandler whistled for a station, and looking out of a window, I saw that we were pulling into Bauxite, the little stubble-junction from which the Stratheona branch led away into the northern mountains.

Wanting a lot of fresh air before turning in, I got off when we made the stop and strolled up to the engine house. Maclise was in the office, getting orders for the branch, and Chandler was squating in the gangway of the 815 and waiting. Up ahead of us, and too far away for me to read the number on her tender, there was a light engine. I thought at first it was the pusher which was kept at Bauxite to help heavy freight up the branch grades, and I wondered what it was doing out on the branch "at rest in our way."

A PROBLEM

A new pair of shoes cost $9.00 and wear 90 days, and can be repaired for $5.00 so as to wear 90 days more, how much does the wearer save by having the shoes repaired?

ANSWER.—$9.00 divided by 90 equals the cost of new shoes per day—10c. $5.00 divided by 90 equals the cost of repaired shoes a day—5 1/3c. Saved per day on repaired shoes—6 2/3c. Take the job over now, for our price on the above repair bill will be less than $3.00.

UNIVERSITY FURNISHES HOME ECONOMICS STUDY

Austin, July 10.—Women's Clubs or any group of people interested in the study of home economics may secure a group study course in this subject from the extension department of the University of Texas. A series of sixteen programs with reference books and study outlines for papers are furnished by Miss Edythe P. Hershey of the home economics department of the University. No degree credit is given for this course for it is planned primarily for club work.

Arrangements may also be made for a series of lectures by Miss Hershey in connection with the group study work, but this is optional on the part of the club. She is an extension lecturer in home economics, and goes into communities at their request to deliver lectures on budget making. Her first series of lectures in the fall will be delivered in Houston.

The group study work in home economics includes a discussion of the responsibility of the woman as the purchasing agent of the home in connection with efficiency methods and time budgets. Constant social and economic changes in society have so effected the institution of the home that a careful study of the factors involved in these changes is considered appropriate for club work. The courses consider the historical development of the home and its present status with constructive suggestions for the reorganization and readjustment of modern conditions. The household budget is the foundation for a study of home activities, and an extensive study will be made of the important items of food, clothing, shelter and other necessities of the family budget from an economic, hygienic and sociological viewpoint.

THEY ALL COME TO TERRY

The frog story from Panhandle is not so remarkable, after all. This frog exodus from the North Plains follows closely after the story about the sheriff of Terry County out into the sand of Brownfield's streets 470 quarts of 100 proof hooch. The frogs were headed south, and their destination is a foregone conclusion. In Amarillo, Hereford and Brownfield don't quit their activities in the moon shine game the North Plains will lose all the frogs along the Canadian river. All Canadian has ever been able to show was three or four quarts of poorly brewed home brewed hooch and the rest of the towns have done little better. Even Waggoner, of the Miami Chief can shed crocodile tears over the unfair advantage the South Plains towns are taking over by saturating their soil with Three Fingers and Four Roses.—Canadian Record.

PANHANDLE FLOUR SOLD TO HOLLAND

The Great West Mill and Elevator Company has sold 10,000 barrels of Great West hooch flour for export to Holland, during the month of July. The sale was made to the Luchsinger-Meers Company, one of the largest flour brokerage firms in Europe, and the flour will be distributed throughout the country.

The flour will be exported through the ports of Galveston and New Orleans, and its movement to these points has already been started.

Beginning Tuesday night the plant of the Great West Mill will be operated full time, or twenty-four hours per day, which will give a daily output of about 800 barrels. The sales have been increasing at a very satisfactory rate and officials of the local mill confidently expect a steady growth in the business in the next few months.

Orders on file now practically take the output of the plant for July and August, running at full capacity.—Amarillo Tribune.

HOGVILLE

By Dunk Bots

Zero Peck who is planning to give an ice cream supper at the Wild Rose school house, and who this week had some circulars printed to be used in advertising the event, has discovered that the printer at Pumpkinville made quite a mistake and he is going back over them and make him print them over without extra pay. He says the printer seemed to be a kind of smart Ellick anyhow. He added a line to the circular which said, "Everybody cordially invited." Zero says this will have to be corrected, if everybody should come he would not have near enough cream. He wants it to read, "You are invited."

Hank Potts, who some time ago traded for a fine looking dog to be used as a companion until he could find a wife, has settled down and seems quite contented. He has even quit going to see a widow over about Pumpkinville.

The Old Miser gave the Dog Hill preacher a nice looking walnut yesterday.

An enlarged picture of Jesse James has been hung on the wall at the new Putnam Ridge moonshine still house to preserve order and bluff the revenue officers.

Dag Smith was in the tools again this week, but by agreeing to plead guilty to the charge he was allowed to go free. He was arrested Tuesday morning on a charge of having stolen the only mule the Blind Man had. The trial was set down for Thursday morning and on account of the Blind Man being unable to see the court appointed for him an interpreter in the person of Prof. Gape Allison, in identifying the defendant.

The Mail Carrier attended the magic lantern show at Bear Ford Saturday night. He took his mail pouch along with him, and when the door keeper stopped him he pretended to have him arrested for interfering with the U. S. Mail.

Buiger Smothers has entered society and since doing so has put white wash on his buggy, insect powder on his mule and greases his buggy with vaseline.

Bill Hellwanger heard of a marriageable widow with three children and a cow, living over near Bear Ford, but after a visit to that place he decided to take only the cow.

A large yellow mule hitched to a cart lately occupied exclusively by Alexander Mosley, ran away the fore part of the week. The runaway was headed toward Bear Ford and might have resulted disastrously had not Alex had the presence of mind to hasten on ahead and let down the fences.

This ghost was a 1921 model

LAST MONTH, on a bet,
WITH THE boys up home,
I SPENT a night,
ALONE IN the old,
HAUNTED HOUSE,
AND WHEN I heard,
MOANS AND groans,
I SAID "The wind,"
AND TRIED to sleep,
I HEARD rappings,
AND SAID "Bats,"
AND ROLLED over,
THEN I heard steps,
AND IN the light,
OF A dying moon,
A WHITE spook rose,
I WASN'T scared—much,
BUT DIDN'T feel like,
STARTING ANYTHING,
BUT THEN I caught,
JUST A faint whiff,

OF A familiar,
AND DELICIOUS smell,
WHICH TIPPED me off,
SO I gave the ghost,
THE HORSE laugh,
AND SAID "Oh,
YOU FAT guy,
MAKE BUM ghosts,
BUT BEFORE you fade,
LEAVE WITH me oop,
OF YOUR cigarettes,
THEY SATISFY."

THAT spicy, delicious aroma of fine tobacco, both Turkish and Domestic, makes you almost hungry for the "satisfy-smoke."
And there isn't a ghost of a chance you'll ever find its equal anywhere—for the Chesterfield blend is an exclusive blend. It can't be copied.

Here you see the new
AIR-TIGHT tin of 50?
