that has been received so far this are assured that there is some chance year, was accompanied by very little wind and that the fall has been slow and steady in all of them. Unless something unusual occurs, we are going to harvest one of the best crops ever produced in the county and another unusual occurance, that there was very little if any replanting necessary upon account of being blown out. Fact is, this is an unusual year from many angles and one of them that we have experienced the hottest weather ever known. The writer has been here 20 years and believes last Sunday was the hottest on record. His folks spent the afternoon at the "air-cooled" Rialto and we had the house to ourselves and "shucked" everything in the way of clothing and then came near melting down.

We have been expecting the highway commission to advertise for bids on the hot topping of highway 51 and the loop thru Brownfield but it is getting along toward the shank of the month and nothing has been done so our county judge, commissioner Lyon, a representative of the city and the writer are arranging to appear before the highway commission at its regular meeting and undertake to convince them that the work should be done this summer as the roadbed would be badly damaged if it is not completed before next year. Fact is, this contract will have to be let during the next few weeks if the work is completed before cold weather and as it has already been approved, we do not see any good reason for the delay in arranging for the acceptance of bids for work upon

Official Safecracking

FORTY years from now there's going to be an "official safecracking" in the United States Capitol at Washington. Thereby hangs the tale of a woman's dream of doing something for posterity and how it didn't work out as she had planned.

She was Mrs. C. F. Deihm and in 1876, when other Americans were looking back over 100 years of American history, she was looking forward a century. Her idea was to install a "centennial safe" in Memorial hall at the Philadelphia Centennial exposition to be filled with articles which would be interesting to Americans of 1976 when the safe would be officially opened. But chiefly her idea was to put in it great albums containing photographs and autographs of celebrities of the day. Also there was one large album with a blank space below the name of each person who wrote his name in it so that the direct lineal descendant of the signer might record his name below his ancestor's, when the safe was opened in 1976.

Mrs. Deihm sent leaves from this album throughout the country and gained concessions from the express companies to transport them free of charge. She received an endorsement of her idea from the chief justice of the United States and other high officials, who called upon all Americans for co-operation in the plan. But for some reason the idea was not received as enthusiastically as Mrs. Deihm had hoped. The safe was to have been locked up and sealed on December 31, 1876 but when the number of signatures in the albums was found to be far short of the number she desired,

Encourage the Independent Producer and Wildcatter

By breaking the stronghold of Monopolistst, rapid development of oil producing lands in every section of Texas would be brought about. Necessary financing for this purpose would be made easy. Revived activity in the oil business would afford honest jobs for thousands now unemployed. Royalty owners would receive larger checks. Lands now under lease would be explored for oil and many receiving only paltry lease money would be getting substantial checks from the sale of oil produced on their lands.

The scheduled "closing for 100 years" didn't take place until 1879. Then It was sent to Washington where she hoped to have it placed in the rotunda of the Capitol where its doors were to be closed with great ceremony and where it was to remain until 1976. The authorities, however, would not permit its installation in the rotunda but did allow it to be set up in one corner of Statuary hall, formerly the chamber of the house of representatives. Then the closing of the doors "with great ceremony" proved to be a disappointment. President Hayes, who was expected to be present, sent his

A short time later congress decided that this big iron safe was out of place in a hall devoted to statues of American notables and ordered its removal So it was taken to the place where it now stands-a secluded spot under the great steps in the center of the east front of the Capitol. Thousands of tourists have passed within a few feet of it without ever seeing it or knowing its history. Since that time the front has rusted and one of the two handles on the out er doors has been broken off. But it members the combination to the safe. anyway. Moreover the key to the inner doors of plate glass has disappeared, no one knows where.

So that is why an "official safe cracking" is due to take place in 1976. It will be the only way to open this treasure house of relics. Inside one of the outer doors is an inscription which reads "It is the wish of Mrs. Deihm that this safe may remain closed until 1976, to be opened by the Chief Magistrate of the United States." One wonders who that man will be and if he will fulfill her wish or disappoint her as President Haves did.

oath of office, Hayes took it on Sunday as a precaution against there arising any question of the legality of his taking it on March 5. He took It again the following day in the formal inauguration ceremonies. The story of how the oath of office was administered to Calvin Coolidge in the lamp-lit Vermont farm house of his father, Col. John Coolidge, upon receipt of the news of the death of President Harding, is a familiar one to all Americans. But it is not so well known that a few days later a second oath was administered to him in a room in the Willard hotel in Washington by A. A. Hoehling, a justice of the District of Columbia Supreme

Harry M. Daugherty, then attorney general, had questioned the validity of the first oath administered to Coolidge. As a justice of the peace, Colonel Coolidge was a state officer and therefore presumably had authority to swear in state officials but not federal officers. So Daugherty secretly arranged the ceremony in the Willard and on a hotel Bible Calvin Coolidge took the oath of office a second time. C Western Newspaper Union.

Actually, in a given scene the same images reach the eye as the lens but while they all reach the camera film some of them do not register on the brain. Does the eye betray us? No, it is because the mind tends to select from images received by the eye those in which it is most interested and to reject or disregard the rest.

This is something to remember when you get ready to take a picture. Neither the lens nor the film selects. Together they record every thing the light transmits. Hence, the disconcerting things that often appear in a photograph because the mind disregarded them when the shutter was snapped-objects that in the print stand out with startling emphasis and which you would almost swear never could have been there.

For example, so many snapshots of landscapes are marred by the appearance of telegraph wires streaking across the sky, not to mention the telegraph poles, or by sign boards and unsightly buildings that went unnoticed when the picture was snapped, jarring a compo that would be otherwise app because of the natural b the scene.
