

"SPOTTED FEVER" MAKES APPEARANCE IN TEXAS

AUSTIN, Texas, July 6.—Appearance of the dread Rock Mountain Fever in Texas was evident this week when two cases of the disease reported in Southwest Texas, were officially diagnosed as such by Dr. R. R. Spencer, spotted fever expert of the United States Public Health Service. Dr. Spencer, vacationing in San Antonio, was pressed into service by State Health Officer Dr. Geo. W. Cox, to diagnose the two cases, one of which proved fatal.

Dr. Spencer's diagnosis is the first official recognition of the presence in Texas of spotted fever, a disease transmittable to men by the bite of infected ticks. Although many wood and dog ticks are not infected with the fever, the disease in man is serious enough to warrant the practice of precautionary measures. A person with spotted fever will develop the disease within 2 to 12 days after receiving the infection.

When the ticks appear, they are unfed and are seeking some animal to attach themselves to and suck blood. When the tick drops on an animal, including man, it does not start feeding at once, but usually spends some time searching for a suitable place. Experiments have shown that a previously unfed tick will attach itself to the body and feed for a few hours before transmitting the infection but it then becomes highly infectious.

Three measures may be used to prevent spotted fever; avoid ticks, remove ticks from person as soon as possible, or be vaccinated. Vaccine to prevent spotted fever is not readily available so precaution should be used to avoid or eliminate ticks from the person immediately.

ALARMING

"I've just been bit by a dog and I'm worried. I hear whenever a dog bites you, whatever the dog has, you get."

"Boy, then you have a right to worry."

"Why?"

"That dog just had eleven pups!"

Capacity for big responsibility is acquired by faithful performance of small tasks.

Things would have been different if they hadn't been like they were.

$75,000 Pan American Lock

Here is the costliest lock ever made. Wrought by Arthur A. Everts, Dallas jeweler, it was presented to the Pan American Exposition for its opening ceremony June 12. The lock, valued at $75,000.00, contains nearly two pounds of platinum and white, green, yellow and red gold, and 1,056 gems—diamonds, sapphires, pearls, zircons, emeralds and rubies. The large diamond weighs 14 carats. Only by the insertion of all 21 keys, each representing one of the Pan American nations, was the lock opened, throwing wide the Exposition gates while representatives of the 21 nations looked on. The original diamond-set keys were sent as gifts to presidents of the Pan American nations.

Plainview Herald: A feller by the name of Hogue has painted some pictures of desolate scenes and they have been printed in "Life." In mentioning them we're doing just what the publishers of that intriguing journal crave—giving publicity which will excite curiosity. . . Well, those pictures are not worth spending much time looking at There's one of them that shows a couple of spotted, dead cows in a sand drift in the corner of a fence. The barb wire looks as big as a sand pile—bigger than a lariat. The picture of the dead cows isn't half good. Never saw a dead cow with folds in the skin. They always bloat and puff up. Maybe he meant these for cow mummies. . . Anybody that can't find anything better to paint in Northwest Texas than dead cows is just about out of something to paint in a land that abounds with interesting subjects. . . A skunk is a lot prettier. . . As a matter of fact if it wasn't for the bad reputation he has, the skunk might be used for muffs and neckpieces more than he is. Actually he's a pretty animal, if you ever take time to look him over. If Hogue painted those dead cows "from life" he had to do a lot of hunting to find them. They are not typical. . . If it's all right to make a little bet in Texas now, we'll bet fifty dollars against a plugged dime that Mr. Hogue or anyone else can't take us to such a genuine scene in the Texas Panhandle in the next nine months, and we'll pay transportation there and back and sit on one of those cows, if he finds it, and eat a ham sandwich—and that's a powerful bet. It is no more a typical scene than a purported picture of a duststorm that was sold by the thousands several months ago. It was so unusual that even people here on the Plains bought them, so they could show about the fog of black dust that had followed on the heels of a saffron hued billow. Picture papers print the sensational and the unusual. If everybody gets to hollerin' like we are foolishly doing about "Life" printing those pictures "Life" will get a quarter of a million dollars of free publicity. . . Just after a big rain we're bold to denounce anyone who says unkind things about the dust of Northwest Texas which is always exaggerated by people who talk so glibly about the dust bowl. But at that we don't feel any too secure, because the dust may be blowing before this paper gets into circulation. . . This dust bowl talk isn't doing Northwest Texas any good at that. It's hurting us more than we imagine. . . Isn't it strange how we howled about the geographies saying our country was a great American desert, and as soon as the gray train started running to save the dust bowl from Mother Nature's inroad, we got to clamoring that we were in the dust bowl so that we could get some more federal checks? . . . For chamber of commerce purposes we don't want to be in the dust bowl. For getting our slice of the federal pie we want to be in it and submit facts and figures to prove that we are. . . This dust business is funny that way.

The editors of a number of our exchanges have been stretching the blanket badly of late about the size of hail that fell in their communities and other things. Why not organize an Ananias Club boys? We could name several in this section subject to be charter members without question. Evidently there are citizens of some of these towns that are simply ruining the morals of the newspapermen.—Terry County Herald.

It seems that Editor Stricklin did not believe our hail story. Well, we were afraid they would be a bunch of doubting Thomases like him so we held our story down as much as possible. Now we will turn loose on him. One man told me he found a big chunk of ice in his yard with a string already tied around it. Another man told about stones falling at his place as large as automobile lamps. Talk about morals, I think one editor has lost his morals when he doubts another editor's story.—Ropes Plainsman.

RIDING THE CHUCK LINE

In the not distant old days of the ranch country there were those who preferred a change of scenery rather than to settle down to a steady job. Single men whose home was wherever their hats hung. Many of them were ambassadors of good will, jokesters of wide reputation. In traveling from ranch to ranch they carried the information that might, by a stretch of the imagination, be regarded as news. They were 'tramps of the range,' so to speak, but skilled men as a rule in handling stock. Others were excellent cooks. Occasionally one would take a job with a questionable rancher and place a brand on a maverick, or even burn a brand. Eventually, he was wiped off the range either at the point of a gun, or through the orderly processes of the law. A cow thief in the old days was generally regarded as a criminal of the first waters. Murder then, as now, was a mere incident. Riding the 'chuck line' through the heat of summer was a favorite pastime of the unemployed. Summer was the dull season on the ranches. His mount usually consisted of a saddle pony which he rode, and a pack. The 'pack' consisted of a 'hot roll' tied to a pony's back with a rope in a "throw" that insured security and safety of contents however much he might buck. Few men learned to tie a "throw" like the Mexicans, a tribe that often 'hauled' the entire family effects upon the back of a burro. But the load never came loose. With the passing of the old-time ranches, the chuck line rider became a matter of history.—Clarendon Leader.

STATE OWNED CEMENT PLANT PROPOSED BY PETSCH

Construction of a State owned cement plant as one way to beat an alleged monopoly of the cement companies was proposed in the Texas House last week in a resolution by Rep. Alfred Petsch of Fredericksburg. The session adjourned without action on the resolution.

The resolution asserts that companies selling cement have formed a combination inimical to the interests of the State which in its High-

Department uses approximately a million and a half barrels annually. The resolution also proposed that cement be purchased by bids made three months in advance, and that the low bid be awarded the contract regardless of the fact that it might be made to a foreign company. The Highway Department meanwhile would be instructed to investigate the cost per barrel of producing cement and the feasibility of a state owned plant.

JOHN GARNER'S VACATION MAY BE SIGNIFICANT

John Nance Garner is back home in Texas—home on vacation, but for the first time in his Washington career, a vacation taken while Congress is in session, and a Congress fairly boiling over with political situations, important enough to be almost grave.

There may or may not be significance in this vacation, but more than one Washington writer has strongly intimated that the President and the vice-President are not in agreement over the proposal to "pack" the Supreme Court.

That disagreement also exists with many other party leaders and congressmen who have been otherwise friendly almost 100 per cent with the administration in nearly every other instance.

Thus far President Roosevelt has shown no sign of yielding or weakening. Debate in the Congress has intensified the issue, and now the President is asking for a record vote, a thing which Congress prefers to side-step if possible, as it will put every Congressman and every Senator on the spot, to the extent that they have got to vote with or against the President.

It may be the heat of summer that takes Garner back home to fish, but many political writers, believe that the real reason is the "heat" generated by the Supreme Court issue.—Amherst Argus.

EX-KAISER SENDS BOOKS TO KERRVILLE YOUNGESTER

Casper Wilhelm, 12, of Kerrville was proud and happy when he received a package containing four books from the former Kaiser of Germany. Young Wilhelm, who lives with his parents in the Turtle Creek community, wanted to know the origin of his name and many more things than busy parents find no time to explain. Finally his mother gave him permission to write the exiled ruler.

Casper received a registered letter from the former Kaiser an autograph photograph and four books. One of the books is the Kaiser's autobiography.

ALWAYS WORKS

"How do you manage, on your small salary, to have such well-cooked delicious meals?"

"The secret is simple. Every day I kiss the cook and do all I can to make her happy."

"But doesn't your wife object?"

"Not a bit. She's the cook."

Mrs. Ike Breedlove and daughters, Mary and Irma Tom, are visiting the former's parents in Dublin.

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Stell and children spent the Fourth at Justiceburg.

"A Country Sandwich Goes to Town" is the slogan advertising a new sandwich spread, "Barbalona," which was formulated and is being successfully marketed by Smiley Burnette, cowboy comedian featured in the popular Gene Autry musical westerns.

"I have five demonstrators working in food stores," explained Smiley, "and the spread is going like hot cakes. Already I have recovered half the investment which I put into the business only three months ago. I'm on the road to a solid financial success which is entirely independent of my screen career."

Burnette set up his "Barbalona" factory out in San Fernando Valley, where he employs three people making the new spread. As soon as "Barbalona's" popularity has increased further, Smiley plans to open up a chain of Southern California sandwich stands, to feature the concoction, which is made chiefly of pickles, bologna, mayonnaise, ground and mixed. Three other ingredients are secrets of the formula.

This is added another "sideline" industry to the large and varied list of investment vocations into which the saner stars put their money.

The school vacation season annually brings to Hollywood a drizzle of students from all over the country hopeful of crashing the movies. Timely, therefore, was a factual statement of the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce this week. It reported that for the past film production year (which ends June 30) the 12,000 movie extras and bit players listed at Central Casting Bureau had an average of Only Twenty-One Days work apiece. That should be warning enough to any young hopeful against making the long trek west in search of work.

Lew Ayers, who has not clicked heavily since "All Quiet on the Western Front," at least is going to be in a position to look down on Hollywood when he retires. He has just purchased the top of Lookout Mountain, a noted sightseeing spot in the Hollywood mountains from which one can see a thrilling panorama of all Los Angeles, Hollywood and Beverly Hills. It's an especially inspiring sight at night, with millions of lights of many colors flashing like a sea of diamonds.

The purchase is proof also that Ayers, as both actor and director, has hung on to enough of his earnings to safeguard his future.

Anyone who wants to get Andy Clyde on the phone always gets the answer: "He's out in the backyard." That is the comedian's favorite haunt—either weeding flower beds, setting out plants, building rock walls or just lazing in his sunny patio. One other hobby quite goes with his Scotch blood—golf. Between making pictures under his Columbia contract right now Clyde is playing in most of the amateur invitational tourneys.

Last week he was in the one at Jacumba Hot Springs, and this week he's going to join Bing Crosby's game at Del Mar.

"Small Town Boy," Stu Erwin's first starring picture since he recently went out on his own as a free lance player, gave it's preview audience a fast succession of laughs last week. In one scene the workings

"WILD BILL" CUMMINGS ESTABLISHES TWO NEW RECORDS AT INDIANAPOLIS

PUSHING A HEAVY FOOT against the accelerator of his silver racing car, "Wild Bill" Cummings, spectacular idol of the speedways, required just twelve minutes and nine seconds to break two Indianapolis Speedway records during his twenty-five mile qualification run last Saturday. Using the same Gulf No-Nox Ethyl gasoline that can be bought in service stations all over the country, Cummings made one lap at an average of 125.13 miles-per-hour which cracked the all time Indianapolis record of 124 m.p.h. set nine years ago by Leon Duray. His average of 123.4 m.p.h. for the twenty-five miles was the fastest qualifying time ever made on this track.

The oval picture is a closeup of Cummings and the other photo shows him with his car immediately after the exciting run.

Flirting with Death

These daredevils, known as the Paroff troupe, will be seen this Summer when they perform in the "Flirting With Death" free show at the Fort Worth Frontier Fiesta, opening June 26. The attraction will be staged in the arena where "The Last Frontier" was presented last Summer. The Paroffs do their act on 20-foot ladders, at the top of a platform 55 feet above the ground. Their own skill keeps the ladders from falling.

of a guilty conscience on the part of Erwin and his "Dad" Jed Prouty, was done to perfection. They wash and wipe the same plate repeatedly while they listen to "Ma" talking behind their backs about a thousand dollar bill which Stu has found and supposedly kept secret. It gave this reviewer one of his heartiest laughs in many moons.
