Union Responsibility.

D avenue, Cisco, Texas.

There is one statement in Judge Goldsborough's decision on the government's case against John L. Lewis and the United Mine Workers chological factors engendered by which goes to the heart of the controversy. He said that a union must the war." be held responsible for the acts of its members. He added that it was "ridiculous" to argue that hundreds of thousands of men would walk out of their own volition simultaneously

It is clear that the law is not yet capable of dealing effectively and swiftly with iron-clad labor monopolies. It is clear that som labor leaders are convinced that they are bigger than the governmen of the United States, the people of the United States, and the welfare and international prestige of the United States. And there is every reason to believe that attitude will prevail again in the future.

The first step must be to bring labor monopolies within immed ate reach of the anti-trust statutes. There can be no excuse whateve for continuing to exempt them from the same laws that protect th people against abuses of power by industry. This view has been taken by Senator Ball, among others, who recently wrote that the "tradition al American approach is to break up the concentrations of power b approaches similar to the Sherman anti-trust acts. In other words to make industry-wide agreements and strikes or lockouts subject t the anti-trust laws.' That was done in the House version of the Taf; Hartley Act, but it lost out by a single vote in the Senate

In any event, the power of a man, a group of men, or an organi zation to defy this nation cannot be countenanced.

Our Appetite For Oil.

If there is any limit to our appetite for oil it certainly isn't i of oil will be available to this nation during the coming year. Ye "the race to meet the enormous increase in consumption will be close That means that it will be up to the public to practice reasonable conservation in using oil products so that there will be the fewes possible dislocations between demand and delivery.

It is estimated that during the 12-months period which started April 1, we will have an available petroleum supply of 6,025,000 bar rels a day. That is about eight per cent bove the amount available in the preceding year. In other words, all former records will b

So large a production, it is pointed out, is conditioned on certain factors. There must be freedom from government interference and controls, which are always a deadening influence. The Bureau of Mines' forecast that imports of oil will exceed exports by 102,000 barrels daily must prove accurate. Expansion plans must not be slowed by strikes or other disturbances. And, finally, the flow o materials for new construction must be adequate.

There, in a nutshell, is the outlook for oil as it exists today. There is nothing whatever to indicate a serious shortage, or anything more important than occasional minor dislocations which usually occu when demand reaches 95 per cent or more of maximum supply capacity And a little cooperation by oil users will obviate that annoyance to
