PRICES HERE AND IN RUSSIA

A short time ago the wife of the American ambassador to Russia came home with some clothes she had bought in that wonderful "workers' paradise." She made known the price she had paid for them, along with the prices she would have had to pay for similar articles here. In Russia, the dress cost $123.20 — in the U. S. it would sell for $35. The hat cost $34.90 as against $16.95 in America. The gloves cost $18.10 as against $3.00 in one of our stores. Only the shoes were similarly priced in both countries — everything else cost two to six times as much in the U. S. as in Russia. The disparity is even greater when the take-home pay of Russian workers, which is far lower than that of their American equivalents in purchasing power, is considered.

Contrast this with capitalism — which is the economic system of competitive free enterprise. In every field of production, big and little factories are trying to sell more goods — and they must offer the best value possible or the trade will go elsewhere. Exactly the same thing is true of retailing, where hundreds of thousands of stores of all kinds and sizes are competing for the favor of public that can patronize whom it chooses in a free market. What system does the most for the people?

This is how matters go in a nation which has destroyed almost all private enterprise, and has put government monopolies in its place. The Russian factory belongs to the government, and produces only what some official decides it should produce. The Russian retail store also belongs to the government and the prices it charges are fixed by the government. The Kremlin dictators have deliberately kept prices high in many cases, in order to make sure that the great masses of the Russian people live on what Americans wouldn't even regard

Well Cared-for Manure Most Valuable Fertilizer

"Animal manure is by far the most valuable fertilizer on the dairy farm," says A. R. Midgley, in "Crops and Soils" for January. It not only supplies plant nutrients, but also adds great numbers of living bacteria—most of which are beneficial—to the soil. In addition, manure adds organic matter and provides food for a heavy population of soil bacteria and other organisms which help to maintain our soils in a good physical condition. Most manure is also a good source of important minor elements, such as boron, magnesium, copper and zinc.

- Farm Manure Contains Large amounts of potash and nitrogen Moderate quantities of phosphates Small amounts of minor elements Many beneficial bacteria and other soil organisms Value of Manure Enhanced by Liquid saving devices Adequate use of bedding Protection from wind and drying agencies Mixing with chemical fertilizers before spreading Care in applying on frozen ground

The actual quality, or analysis, of animal manure depends to a great extent on the kind of food consumed by the farm animals. On most dairy farms, the fertilizer contained in the grain or feed bag usually exceeds that in the fertilizer bag. Thus, grain has both feed and fertilizer value. For easy figuring, a ton of fresh dairy manure contains plant nutrients about equal to 100 pounds of 10-5-10 fertilizer. Of course, these figures vary greatly depending on feed used, but they roughly represent dairy manure at the time it is produced. However, many of these nutrients may be lost between the stable and the soil and before the crop is able to use it. Manure is a very bulky and perishable material. With careless handling, losses of plant nutrients may be higher than the total amount sold off the farm in the form of milk, meat and bones. About 97 percent of the potash, 50 percent of the nitrogen and 30 percent of the phosphorus is soluble and can be lost readily. Leakage of the liquids through stable floors that are not tight, soaking into barnyards and feedlots, leaching through the soil when piled out in the open or under the eaves of barns, and winter runoff after spreading on frozen ground, are some of the obvious physical losses. Even though manure is removed daily and spread on the field, much volatile ammonia nitrogen is lost into the air. Winter freezing also has a marked drying effect, because ice crystals develop and temporarily remove the water in solid form. This concentrates the ammonia in MUSIC FROM THE PAST—Made of 12th Century wood, a violin is held by a woman in Munich, Germany, near the church where rafters of the same wood once supported the roof. About 500 years ago, lumber from Bavarian forests was used to construct the church which was damaged by bombs during the war. A musician bought some of the wood and made this violin from it.

SOCIETY AND CLUBS

AND NEWS OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

Union Center Club Entertains At Party

Union Center Home Demonstration Club entertained the community Friday evening with a two-party. Refreshments were furnished by White. Cake and coffee served to the 22 families present, which was approximately 50 people. Hostesses for the evening were Arthur Wright, Mrs. Walter Mrs. Odus Criswell, and G. G. Crowell. The club will have a social meeting at the club house, five miles north of Rising Star, each first Friday of the month. Many have expressed their appreciation to the club for these gatherings.

WORD MEET POSTPONED

The Word Home Demonstration Club will not meet Thursday as previously planned. The meeting has been postponed until March 20. The club will meet at the home of Mrs. M. P. Farnsworth on that date for an all day meeting.

How to have a winning TELEPHONE PERSONALITY

by EMILY POST

We're often judged by the way we use telephone service. Good telephone technique and good telephone manners are important to a winning personality . . . and help you get the most from your telephone service.

Of all the many questions I'm asked about good party line manners, probably the most frequent one is "How long should my telephone conversations be?"

Answer: The length of your conversations will vary, of course. But purely for a selfish reason, it's a good idea to avoid long, drawn-out conversations. No incoming calls, however important, can get through to you while your telephone is tied up. And your party line neighbor can't make OR receive a call. You're displaying good party line manners when you hold conversations to a reasonably short length—consideration that folks on your party line will appreciate and return.

Recently, a friend visiting at my home noticed a small booklet titled "LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE NUMBERS" lying beside my telephone. My guest asked "Is there any advantage in making long distance calls by number?"

Answer: Indeed, there is. Long distance calls go through faster—often twice as fast—when you call by number. The smart, well-informed telephone user takes fullest advantage of today's fast long distance service by placing out-of-town calls by number whenever possible. Incidentally, if you don't already have one of those convenient booklets for listing out-of-town telephone numbers, you can get one free at the telephone company business office. That's where I got mine.

Here's another test of good telephone technique. When in doubt about a telephone number, should you look in the telephone directory . . . or call information?

Answer: You will usually save time if you look in the directory first. Chances are, you'll find the number there. The telephone company people tell me their records show that 3 out of 4 calls to information are for numbers listed in the telephone book. Why make two calls when one will do, three out of four times?

ALL IN A YEAR'S WORK

SCENE OF SALVAGE—More than 153,000 gross tons of vital iron and steel scrap were collected and shipped to steel mills throughout the U.S. by the General Electric Company in 1951. The pile of scrap in Schenectady, top left, is a typical reclamation scene. Workmen sorted and pushed scrap metal into chutes where it was crushed and poured into railroad cars, right. The huge, 70-foot waste chute weighing 30 tons, lower left, was dismantled in the drive in which the 55-inch-wide electro-magnetic hoist, right, lifted 1275 pounds of scrap at a time.
