CREDIT

Don't get the wrong impression of the word "credit." Your credit record on a little white card in a credit bureau may not be classified by the word "good," "bad", or "indifferent," but in the minds of the merchants, that is definitely the way it reads.

If all people met their obligations as they should, why have credit bureaus, both retail and wholesale?

If you want to find out how easy credit would be made for any consumer, just get out of a good paying job or some source of income and make application for credit in any town or city. What could merchants say? You must not dream too sweet a dream that the world and all there is in it belongs to people on a credit - you may be disappointed, or else the merchants have gone to scattering merchandise as John D. Rockerfeller scattered dimes.

Buying on a credit is a convenience, but unless we have serious intentions to meet the obligation promptly, the second phase of the transaction has to be with Mr. Bill Collector.
