The People's Market Place

The Gay Philosopher By J. W. S.

THE BUSINESS of quitting cigarettes is one that virtually all smokers consider or undertake from time to time as their smoking years tick off. At least, that was our experience during the some 20 years that we smoked cigarettes. And it has now been one year and one month since we put away half a package and brand new cigarette lighter and stopped smoking.

HOW DO YOU stop smoking? That's a question we're asked from time to time. We definitely decided that we should and would stop smoking two or three years before we did. After smoking a package a day for 20 years, we felt that the best plan to stop would be via the gradual method.

Our cigarette package was left in a desk drawer or an inaccessible place to discourage the practice of picking up one and lighting it habitually. In this manner, we endeavored to cut cig-Te arette consumption to not more than one per hour. Also, we assed a "no cigarettes before oreakfast rule." It just didn't seem to work out, however, as consumption still amounted to about a package a day. We tried all the filter tips and the new models, looking for the cigarette that wouldn't leave us at day's end. Cigarettes never quite satisfied our taste or, pernaps, what we thought one should taste like. The smell of tobacco smoke and the taste of it are two very different things.

THE FIRST of the year, we caught a cold and a

DO WE FEEL better? Is our health better? We're often asked our imagination, but we feel betpeared.
