Just to show how bad the college in Emporia proposes a golf course for prospective teachers who may be required to teach the game along with their regular educational work. Golf may take its place in the high schools along with English literature, Latin and algebra. Maybe the drives will be worked out by trigonometry. So it goes, more or less, everywhere. Golf farming probably pays better too, than some other kinds. And golfing is healthful even restful, for the tired business man. An old-fash ioned person, though, sometimes looks back longingly to the day when a fellow who wanted a little fresh air and sunshine could simply go out and take a walk, without being stared at as a curiosity.

MONOPOLIES

Now that the price of crude rubber has gone down to about half the cost or production, East India growers who rejoiced in a government-backed monopoly find their monopolistic profits wiped out. The loss is not merely transient. They find also vast rubber plantations being developed in Africa, Brazil and the Philippines, which in the future will hold down the profits they might have enjoyed without any monopoly if they had not forced this defensive competition. It is coming to be an old story, so quickly is the lesson learned in one industry. Will other industries take this lesson to heart? Will Brazil drop its export restrictions on coffee, and Cuba its artificial control of sugar production? FINANCIAL CANYON ROMANCE

Some financiers make their money by "hard work," and others have it left to them to play with. Here is one who was just plain lucky. "Barney." as his patrons know him. Herman Tiros is a waiter in a Brooklyn, N. Y., hotel about four minutes from Wall street, where fortunes are made and lost. Barney doesn't know Wall street personally, but has been playing the market for years. Well, these last few hectic weeks of violent activity on the big board have made millions of dollars for him. You see, however, he is still at his old job of waiting on table at the old stand. We wonder what tip he is giving his boss who he is is serving? (International Newsreel)
