FINE PEACHES ARE GROWN IN CISCO YARDS

And still they come, meaning peaches. In spite of the late frost that killed much of the fruit crop last spring, Eastland county has produced the best peach crop since 1919 when the fruit rotted by the hundreds of bushels in the orchards. Even the city orchards have produced some of the finest peaches ever grown in any country. This was proven when a batch of very fine cling was brought to the Daily News office by W. P. Pulley, who secured these samples from those grown by his neighbor, Mrs. W. L. Harrell, of 849 West Second street. Mrs. Harrell was canning as Pulley passed by her home this morning, and the fruit was of such excellent quality that he picked a few from the culls left over from the canning and brought these down to show what can be grown in Cisco and Eastland county.

THE TEACHER.

A man once owned a setter, a splendid hunting dog. Her nose was keen, so was her brain; she could find a bird if there was a bird, and she never flushed until told to do so.

This setter had a pup; and when it was old enough the man took the mother and pup into the field. The mother dog began to range for birds, the pup at her heels. Soon she scented a partridge and pointed. The pup scented the partridge, too, and was for going for it and getting it right then; but as he neared his mother's flank, she turned her head and looked at him. He stopped; then inched forward. The mother again turned her head and looked at him. The pup stopped. But he was impetuous. He must get that bird. Again he started forward. Again the mother turned her head and looked at him. This time she growled. Then the pup "froze" and pointed the bird just as his mother was doing.

The reason that the owner of the mother dog had her to train the pup was because she was a splendid teacher. No intelligent trainer of bird dogs would let an unqualified dog train a young dog.

But intelligent persons will permit unqualified persons to train young persons. That is amazing, isn't it? But it is true. Day after day, all over this country, children are being sent to school to learn from teachers who are not competent to teach. Some of the folk holding educator's certificates are word indeed. They are neither mentally nor culturally fitted for their work. There are teachers holding grade positions who do not know the difference between anecdote and antidote; who pronounce "modern," "modren" and "children," "childern;" who call "geometry" "jomtry" and "geography" "jogfry;" and speak of "us Americans" and the "seekatery of the sosayshun." The double negatives they use freely.

How can children be correctly educated by incorrectly educated teachers? Can the ignorant give the ignorant knowledge? Can the crude lead the crude out of crudity? And not only do some teachers fall short mentally and culturally, but they miss the mark morally.

The progress of the world in every direction depends upon the instruction of the world's young people. No greater responsibility, nor greater opportunity is society's than the proper training of the minds of the young persons on whose shoulders must soon fall the burdens, and in whose hands be placed the problems of the nation.

AIR PERIL.

In the recent army air operations over London, it is said that 50 per cent of the theoretically hostile aircraft raiding the city "reached their objectives." That is, they were in position to rain down poison gas and explosive bombs. They might have wrecked the city and destroyed great numbers of people.

Lloyd George, who ran the British end of the World War, draws the obvious conclusion. A city, he says, cannot be defended against air attack. He doubts whether it ever can be, for defensive improvements are countered with more effective attack.

Wherefore the obvious need is not for air armament, but air disarmament.

"The Kellogg pact and the Locarno pact," he declares, "will be of no use unless we ruthlessly cut down armaments."

Not only is it impossible to defend cities, but "as long as countries are building airplanes for bombing men, women and children, and shelling their habitations, it is idle to talk about improved housing."

Without regulation or abolition of air armament, civilization "is bound to end, sooner or later, in a smash."

Here is the practical side of peace work. Treaties are essential, to lay down principles and commit nations legally and morally to peaceful conduct. But as long as national armories are stored with such implements of devastation and death, capable of use by lawless and ambitious statesmen, international agreements are no more than pious resolutions.

The way to peace is not to say, "We will have murderous weapons, and not use them." The way is to give up the murderous weapons.

UNPROVED MERGERS.

The outstanding industrial feature of the present age, according to Roger W. Babson, is the change, during the past six years, to larger units in industry and trade. History will call this change an industrial revolution, although persons now living in the midst of it are aware merely of a widespread merger movement.

A number of factors have helped to bring this about, among them over-capacity, narrow margins of profit, scientific discoveries and inventions, keen competition, and a tendency to eliminate the weaker units in industry. Inventors have come to have a tremendous faith in the profit-making advantages of a merger, forgetting that size alone doesn't mean success.

This tendency to mergers, whether from necessity or from belief that two successful concerns will be more successful if combined, is an interesting phenomenon. Public acquiescence and enthusiasm in the situation are equally interesting and remarkable. Babson reminds his readers that many of the larger industrial consolidations have yet to prove their value. It is too soon to be sure how they will turn out and it is very hard to say what would happen had they not taken place.

VOTELESS VOTERS.

One of the national party chairmen remarks that in 1920, for every 100 voters who went to the polls there were 96 who stayed away, and in 1924 even the winning presidential candidate, with a tremendous majority, received little more than one-fourth of the whole qualified vote. Here is good ground for the appeal made for a bigger vote in 1928. There are estimated to be 56,000,000 eligible voters now. The campaign is attracting more interest, from more different classes of citizens, than some recent national campaigns did. Facilities for learning about candidates and issues are better than ever before. Big interests are involved, going home to every American. There should be a more adequate polling of votes.

SNOW IN TURKEY.

A dispatch from Trebizond, Turkey, informs us that snow is falling there for the first time in history. The people are frightened and look upon it as an expression of Allah's wrath at the official substitution of the Latin letters for the Arabic alphabet in which the Koran was written. From this point of vantage it is hard to regard simplification of written language as a sin. Just the same, it would be interesting to know how the weather experts and meteorologists explain this first snowfall.

IMMIGRANTS' AGE

Premier Ferguson of Canada says he prefers young people for immigrants. That is because "they assimilate better. The youthful tree transplants best." We make no distinction of age in our immigration policy. Perhaps we shouldn't. A "haven" should welcome the old. But sometimes it seems as if the United States is getting more than its share of them, from a selfish point of view. It depends on whether immigration is meant for philanthropy or utility. The economic, political and social superiority of youthful immigrants is unquestionable.

UNIVERSAL BUS SERVICE.

The merging of the Capital Terminal of New York with the new American Motor Transportation company opens a new era in American transportation. Eastern cities will be linked up with western. When contemplated extensions are made and 150 small interior companies are brought into the combination, operations will cover 70,000 miles a day. It will soon be possible to ride from the Atlantic to the Pacific in a continuous chain of motor busses. Similar connections should soon be made on almost any north-and-south route from Canada to Mexico. It will be easier than ever to get around.

CHANNEL SWIMMING.

Miss Ivy Hawke of London, recovering from her ordeal of swimming the English Channel, says: "After I had been swimming four hours I experienced a bad time. The darkness was trying. I did not feel any exhaustion during the closing stages, but it was very difficult getting ashore. We had 27 independent witnesses on the tug." A bored world-critic yawns and remarks: "Well, what of it?" The glory of Channel swimming is over.

CISCO FIRM TO BE AT SESSION OF RADIO MEN

DALLAS, Aug. 29.—The Cisco Battery Co. will be known radio dealers, is expected to be well represented at the third annual convention of Atwater Kent radio dealers which will be held here Sept. 5.

Announcement of this visit was made here by Guy E. Smith of the Harrison Smith Co., Atwater Kent distributors for Texas and Oklahoma. This convention, which is considered one of the largest gatherings of radio dealers in the Southwest, will bring more than 500 radio dealers here.

Nationally known speakers from the Atwater Kent factory at Philadelphia will attend the sessions to discuss technical and lay problems of radio progress. An active program of business and entertainment has been prepared for the dealers who attend the meet.

One of the features of the program of interest to both dealers and the general public will be the discussion of the development of radio broadcasting and the potential development of radio activity in the United States within the coming year.

Atwater Kent, in a recent interview, declared that last year radio passed its critical stage. It is now stabilized, he believes, in every phase of the industry.

"The federal radio commission," he said, "is working out the very

Rogers Says Farmer Will Get a Punch in the Jaw

"I can hand the farmer a couple of subway tickets and Houser can slip him a blue print, and that's all either one can really deliver," says Will Rogers, the "cow-boy candidate" for President in this week's life, where the cowboy humorist is making his weekly appeal for support. Rogers discusses on his rivals' short comings as follows:

"Now that the Notification Ceremonies is over, with no refusals, we can just sit down and figure out 'What was it all about anyhow?'"

"The object of these Notification Ceremonies was to tell Hoover and Smith what the Delegates did at Kansas City and Houston. And what DID the Delegates do at Kansas City and Houston? They made a couple of things called platforms, and there is no more difference in the two platforms than there is in two musical shows. How could there be? They are both catering to the same voters."

"They both want the Farmer's vote. So what can they do but promise him in payment for it that they will do something for him?"

"I am the only Candidate that is running on either side that has ever looked a Mule in the face (to others) down a corn row. I know what the farmer needs, but I can't give it to him. But I am going to tell him being election that I can't give it to him—and not afterwards."

"A vote for me means you will be disappointed earlier than you will if you vote for either of the other two recent farmers."

"I can tell you in a few words what the Farmer needs. He needs a punch in the jaw if he believes that either of the parties cares a damn about him after election!"

"That's all the Farmer needs, and that's all he'll get."

GLORIOUS BETSY
NOVELIZED BY
ARLINE DE HAAS

Copyright 1928, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.
"GLORIOUS BETSY," starring Dolores Costello, is a Warner Bros. production of this novel. Based on the play by Rida Johnson Young.

SYNOPSIS
Captain Jerome Bonaparte, brother of Napoleon and his ambassador to America, masquerades as a tutor to win the love of the bewitching Betsy Patterson. At a banquet given in her home his identity is revealed and they become public enemies. Jerome's aides fear the consequences of his engagement. They take Jerome aside and warn him against upsetting the Emperor's plans. Jerome marries Betsy and they sail for France. When they arrive in port Betsy is not allowed to land. A messenger arrives on the boat summoning Jerome to Napoleon's presence.

"Oh, Jerome, I'm afraid." She was looking at him, her eyes misty with tears. "I wouldn't let the others know, but I'm afraid of Napoleon." He placed her hand over his mouth and said: "Ah, but I must talk. You can't help it. A moment ago when that man St. Pierre was here he was cold with terror. A feeling came into my heart that was almost a prophecy—that that he, your father, was going to take you away from me. Oh, he is so powerful, so cunning. Before the others I can believe I had no fears, but I can't trust Jerome. It wasn't true, it was just pretending. I'm afraid!" He had dropped on Jerome's knees. "Do you not trust me, cherie?" he questioned, kissing the red curls blindly into her cabin. But even as Jerome stepped over the railing and on to the ladder there came a call that halted his retreat and brought Betsy to sudden attention. "Throw a line! The Emperor would board you!" The voice came from below as the sound of a body mounting along the side of the ship could be heard. The order brought all deckhands to attention; the captain came running from below. "Framed in the door of her cabin Betsy stood, her wide eyes staring. "The Emperor?" she breathed. "Over the side of the vessel stepped the muffled figure that had been seated in the boat below. Behind him marched two soldiers. From beneath the caked hat, gleaming eyes glanced hastily over the deck and then rested on Betsy. For an instant the girl gasped, fascinated at the sight of the man she had dreamed of meeting, but even the sudden shock of this long waited-for encounter could not take from her her presence of mind. She curtsied low and rose, smiling that winning smile that had brought the beak of America to her feet. It was her own chance to win over the Emperor and she intended to make the most of it. Napoleon gazed at her searchingly. He even smiled slightly as he appraised the beautiful figure, revealed as the gray cloak slipped from the beautiful shoulders of his brother's wife. "I wish to speak to Mademoiselle Patterson alone," the Emperor of France gave his command and motioned his soldiers to fall back. Jerome, however, ignored his brother's order. He stepped forward hesitatingly as he caught the warning glance in Napoleon's eyes. "Sire!" he exclaimed. "Captain Bonaparte!" The words shut off any further objection that Jerome might make. Cold, harsh, commanding, Napoleon glared at his brother. "I wish to speak to Mademoiselle Patterson alone," he reiterated his command. "But Sire, I—" The words came haltingly and Jerome glanced appealingly at St. Pierre and Dufresne as they quietly swung about the ship. "Captain Bonaparte, would you force me to place you in irons?" The haughty voice cut off the words sharply. "Leave us!" Jerome looked sullenly between his brother and his wife. For a moment he did not stir, but Betsy's words brought him to attention. "Go, Jerome, for my sake, go!" She did not intend to be so forceful and commanding; rather, she was making an appeal, but the very presence of the famous figure lent her a touch of royalty, and Jerome, realizing that he was only interfering, saluted and started off towards the mast with Major Patterson. "Hm!" Napoleon cleared his throat, choosing his words carefully. "Mademoiselle," he began, "when you want a man to do a thing, you go to the woman he loves. He passed considering the effect of his statement. Then he continued: "France wants Jerome Bonaparte—So I come to you." Betsy's smile faded slowly. She realized that the Emperor spoke in all seriousness. She knew now that she was not free to face with one of her Baltimore beaux who would bend the knee at her slightest gesture. Instead she was playing a part in a game as big as any of historical significance. She drew herself up haughtily as though resenting the intimation that she was holding Jerome from his duty. "Sire," she bent her head and she gazed with straightforward glance at her opponent. "When France needs the services of Captain Bonaparte I shall be the first to buckle on his sword." Napoleon nodded approvingly but his voice was curt. "That right may never be yours, Mademoiselle. In order to assure the alliance of the House of Wurttemberg I have affianced my brother to the Princess Friedericka." Betsy looked searchingly at the Emperor. The cold, stern figure frightened her. "You do not know— you do not understand," she burst out. "We love each other. He will never abandon me. I am his wife!" she raised her head proudly, the very words, the reminder that she and Jerome were already married, bolstering her courage. Napoleon shrugged his shoulders. "Then, Mademoiselle, it is for you to abandon him. The marriage of a commoner to one of royal blood is a union most easily dissolved." Betsy gasped. She shrunk back. "But, Sire," she spoke in all simplicity, "he is my very life." "Mademoiselle, beneath the destiny of every great man the heart of some woman lies crushed." Napoleon's words were stern and unyielding, but his eyes were sympathetic, and he sighed as though regretting that his duty made it necessary to hurt this lovely creature. "Then you will listen to me?" Betsy pleaded. (To be continued)

He placed his hand over his back. He nestled close on the white neck. "I love you, Jerome, but you must remember," she lifted her head and looked into Jerome's face, "that I am of sorrow must come to me through my love. You must remember I don't hold you." "Betsy, Betsy, you break my heart a thousand times a day," Jerome chided her gently. "Ah, but your heart is dreadfully easily wounded," she pulled away from him, stifling the fear that was rising in sudden shooting pains in her breast. "And what of my feet? What do you think I make of them? To be called 'Mademoiselle'—that Bonaparte sort of way? And you expect, too. Didn't I love you when I thought you were only a tutor, and didn't I promise to marry you before I even knew that you were the brother of the First Emperor of France—let alone the Emperor? And I love you now, every moment. Deep in my heart you're nestling, Jerome, you'll be there forever, and no forever is over you'll still be there." "Mademoiselle Dufresne makes his bed up over the railing. "Yes, yes, of course, you must—you must go, Jerome," Betsy said, her laggard husband to the side of the vessel. "Betsy, if you do not believe that I am stronger than anything else in the world I will not go. Jerome might hear in his arms once more, saying her to him. "You must see how we always get," she laughed, but her laughter was feigned. "You say you love me, and I say you will. Oh, I know we are going to fight suddenly when you return." "But you must promise me never to have any fear again," Jerome said, his fingersingering. "Promise me." "I promise. I won't be afraid any more. Fate's a darling and I know she has nothing but dear, adorable things in store for Betsy Patterson. Good-bye, my darling, or perhaps we should say au revoir." She kissed him, and pushed him from

Proposed Highway from Strawn to Dallas Would Eliminate 50 Miles of Distance, Help Several Towns

STRAWN, Aug. 29.—With the building of a proposed highway extending almost straight between Strawn and Dallas, it is claimed that the trans-continental automobile tourist would have about fifty miles less to travel between Dallas and points along the Bankhead highway or the West Texas section of the Broadway of America. This highway would pass through some of the finest farm lands in West Texas and open up some semi-sterile territory, and at the same time would be instrumental in developing a number of splendid towns and fine sections that have a right, because of geographical location, to be on a national highway, but have been left to one side because the proposed road in one or two places would have to be built along lines heretofore only slightly traveled. Among the towns that would be on or near the route of the proposed highway are Miquon, Gordon and Judd in Palo Pinto county; Granbury, county seat of Hood county; Crescen, Burleson, Mansfield, the two later in Tarrant county; Cedar Hill and Duncanville in Dallas county. All are thriving and prosperous towns and it is believed the people along that route would work earnestly for the building of a straightaway highway that would give them direct transcontinental affiliation. While no definite steps have yet been taken for the designation and building of this shortcut highway that would connect Dallas with West Texas towns and cities along the Bankhead highway and the Broadway of America, there has been considerable discussion of the project and it is said that something is likely to be done very soon. Transcontinentals' tourists wishing to visit Fort Worth could turn aside at Mansfield, if headed west, or at Crescen if headed east, and pick up the highway again at either place. Besides it would provide another highway between Dallas and Fort Worth that would be only a little longer than the present road connecting the two cities and would relieve the congestion that frequently occurs along the one highway. Between Judd and Granbury there is a small section that is not so populous as yet, but it is fertile land settled by prosperous farmers, and the new highway would do much towards its further development. In these days of rapid travel, when time is money more than ever before, there is a growing desire to build roads that will follow the most direct routes between pivotal points. This proposed shortcut between Dallas and West Texas points has been discussed before, but it seems now to be nearer reality than ever.

"Mighty easy to like - Chesterfields"
Mild enough for anybody . . . and yet they Satisfy*
To blend tobaccos is one thing . . . but to blend and cross-blend tobaccos so as to give both mildness and taste is the Chesterfield way!
Chesterfields satisfy. They have a full, rich, rounded-out taste that makes a merely mild cigarette taste flat by comparison. They're mild . . . and yet . . . they satisfy.

GOOD TIME GUY—"It Won't Be Long."

Caroline Cookey introduced Guy to a broker friend, Longan Short. He's going to handle Guy's account.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Aug. 29.—Claiming sufficient electoral college votes to assure the election of Governor Alfred E. Smith as president, John J. Raskob, chairman of the Democratic national committee, is conferring here with party leaders from eight Mississippi Valley states.

"I prophesy that Smith and Robinson will poll the greatest popular vote ever accorded a presidential candidate in the history of our country," he said in a formal analysis of the campaign.

Never has the outlook for the Democratic party been better," Raskob characterized Smith as "the human element."

"The people of the nation," he said, "are developing a great sense of security in him and in his ability to get things done. The result is a ground swell sweeping across the whole country."

In the heart of the agricultural West, the Democratic chairman attributed "great credit and satisfaction throughout the form left" to the "understandable" support of the Populist party in 1908 and 1912.

Problems Re-It. "Governor Smith has promised relief," he said. "Governor Smith has a record of never breaking a promise. The people of New York state know this, and love and trust him."

He made no reference in his forecast to the issue of prohibition. Raskob claims 346 electoral votes, or 59 more than enough to elect Smith, and believes that out of the 185 remaining votes in the country, Smith "should corral 100 more."

Twenty-seven states with 309 electoral votes which he asserts "any reasonable prudent business man" would include in the Smith column today are:

Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Nevada, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Texas, Virginia, Wisconsin and Tennessee.

"There seems little doubt," he said, "that six more states with an electoral vote of 37, should be classified for Smith and Robinson. They are Connecticut, Delaware, Indiana, North Dakota, South Dakota and Wyoming."

Conference Today. The conference called into conference here are Missouri, Illinois, Kansas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Iowa, Kentucky and Tennessee, of which Raskob includes all but Illinois, Kansas and Iowa in the Smith column.

Discussing the farm situation, the chairman said: "Big business and our best economists appreciate the fact that continued prosperity in our country is absolutely dependent upon increasing purchasing power of the farmer."

"The Republicans have failed to appreciate this, with the result that the farmer and the small business man dependent upon him have suffered unnecessarily. Governor Smith has promised relief."

Raskob en route to Hot Springs, Ark., for notification ceremonies for Senator Robinson, the vice-presidential nominee, was accompanied here by U. S. Senator Peter G. Gerry, Rhode Island, chairman of the advisory committee; Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, in charge of women's activities; Joseph S. Shouse, Kansas, member of the advisory committee; and Mrs. John A. Warner, daughter of Governor Smith.

GOOD BUSINESS FOR CAMPAIGN YEAR IS SEEN

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—The election year of 1928 will show increasingly better business, it is predicted in the economic and business review of the Union Trust company of Cleveland.

This big mid-western bank affirms a similar prediction made by the National City bank of New York. J. H. Nott, treasurer of the Republican national committee, is president of the Cleveland bank.

The Cleveland review says that the first half of 1928 may prove to be a better business period than was believed. It cites extra cash dividends by 37 firms amounting to $168,000,000, including General Motors' big net gain of $34,800,000, an average increase in earnings of 8.7 per cent for 169 firms over the first half of 1927.

MERGER OF LUTHERAN SYNODS IS APPROVED

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Aug. 29.—Consolidation of the membership of all Evangelical Lutheran synods in the United States, comprising about 2,000,000 members, was approved Monday by the Evangelical Lutheran Joint Synod of Ohio and other states in conference here. The Ohio Joint Synod will merge with the Iowa and Indiana synods, which have themselves approved the merger. The merged body will be called the Evangelical Lutheran Synod of America and will control some $10,000,000 in property. A commission has been appointed to work out the details.

Big Oil Operators of Southwest Take Lead in Airplane Building, Lured by Love of New Adventure

WICHITA, Kan., Aug. 29.—Fully a score of oil operators throughout the oil fields of the southwest are engaged in the manufacture of airplanes.

Perhaps it is because the industry is so new and promising and so a challenge, the love for adventure possessed by some of the manufacturers is undoubtedly attractive to them.

Nevertheless, regardless of the reasons why the airplane manufacturing industry is a strong magnet for the oil producer, many oil operators and producers are interested in it, either directly or as a sideline, for the reasons given by some of the manufacturers for their products.

One of the most prominent men in the industry is W. M. Moore, Wichita, Kan., 36, is president of the Southwest Airplane Co., the oil manufacturer of commercial planes in the United States. Moore is reported to be one of the largest owners of airplane operations in the United States. He is known to be a heavy investor of stock in the Texas Air company.

Then there is W. H. Richey, Moore's partner in the oil business in the firm of Richey & Moore. Although an associate of Moore's in the oil business, he is a competitor in the airplane industry as president of the Swift Aircraft company.

Dwight J. Marshall, who was a shoe clerk in 1916, traded a Ford car for an oil lease and made a million dollars, is vice president of the Red Bull Aircraft company. Marshall, however, like the others is still actively engaged in the oil business.

One of Kansas' best known oil producers, Harry H. Patton, president of the Casaday Oil corporation, is engaged in the manufacture of airplanes. His factory is in Wichita, where manufacturers the Quik, a 9-cylinder air-cooled radial engine.

G. A. Stearns, of the Stearns-Kreitzer company, a concern that has done more to develop western Kansas oil resources than any other operator is a director of the Texas Air Manufacturing company, one of the three largest manufacturers of commercial airplanes in the world.

W. G. Skelly of the Skelly Oil company, Tulsa, Okla., is building the Spartan. The Oklahoma Republican national committee is said to have a fine plane there.

The Phillips Petroleum company at Bartlesville, Okla., manufactures regularly a corporation organized to engage commercial aviation, and is reported to be conducting experiments in the manufacture of aircraft.

Show Their Interest. Some list of prominent oil men who are interested in the airplane industry is given below.
