CHINESE AT SEVENTY.

Why does one's memory fail as one grows older? Because, usually, as one grows older one stops exercising one's memory.

"When I was in school," said one man, "I had an excellent memory, but by the time I reached my terous day and observe perched hans to let me know that it was forties I had a poor memory; then I went into a new business and had to learn a lot of new things, facts, round about by a raw, high wind. by saying in substance, "Are we figures. There was a manual of instruction with which I was obliged to acquaint myself. I sat up nights trying to make those things stick in my mind. They didn't do it; it seemed as though the ability to memorize had left me completely. But I persisted memorize had left me completely. But I persisted and eventually my memory began to improve, slowly at first but increasingly. I could see then why my memory had become inactive; I had not been using and faces the consequences. memory had become inactive; I had not been using and faces he consequences.

It enough. After that I made a point of keeping it limber. Today I have a better memory than I had a cat's mouth, though if his bushing it was call a cat's mouth, though if his bushing in a tree then realizing it when I was a boy in school, and believe me, I never intend to let it get sluggish again."

The habit of jotting down everything that one wants to bear in mind is one of the greatest enemies of memory; dependence is put upon pencil and paper instead of on the retentive quality of the mind; consequently the memory is allowed to grow stiff and rusty. Any mechanism that is not used is apt to get stiff and rusty.

There are enough instances of mentally active old men and women to refute any claim that the mind necessarily gives out as age comes on. The body may lose snap and strength but there is no need for the mind to do so. In fact as the years accumulate the mind should improve if it is kept tuned up.

Circumstances required one old man of seventy years to move to China. A NEW KING OF PEACE.

Fourteen nations have set their signatures to the Kellogg-Briand anti-war treaty and 46 have been in vited to do likewise. There is rejoicing on every hand in many different nations. There is strong belief and hope that this treaty really does "strike at the roots of war," as Briand has said. There has been other 'peace pacts," but this one seems to convey a new meaning to the people of the world. In his address of welcome to the other signatories, Briand explained what the difference is.

For the first time, on general plans accessible to all nations, a congress of peace does something else than settle, politically, the immediate conditions of a particular peace " " " For the first time, on a comprehensive and absolute scale, a treaty is truly devoted to the very establishment of peace, initiating a new law and freed from all political contingencies. Such a treaty is a beginning and not an end in itself."

He quotes from the treaty itself: "'For the first time in the face of the whole world, through a solemn! covenant involving the honor of great nations * war is renounced unreservedly as an instrument of national policy.

It is a fit subject for rejoicing and thanksgiving. It is now up to the peoples of the earth, and their leaders, to see that the "beginning" so auspiciously made be courageously and honorably followed to its planned end.

GOLD.

The world's gold famine is relieved. The federal reserve board reports that the central banks of the world have increased their gold holdings $1,-070,000,000 in the last four years. The total is now nearly $10,000,000,000. The increase represents mostly excess of production over consumption by the arts, together with the flowing of gold from private

The United States has not shared in this gain, While other countries, notably France, Germany and great Britain, have increased their stores by $1,500, 000,000, this country has lost $363,000,000.
