BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

Forty-nine years ago today a bouncing baby boy was born in Hornell, N. Y. (All babies are supposed to be bouncing. If you don't believe it, drop one, and hear the echoes.) The proud parents wanted to be sure that it would be different from the ordinary run of babies and they pondered long on how to distinguish it. Ultimately three Christian names were prefixed to the surname and, in the course of time, J. E. T. Peters became secretary of the Cisco chamber of commerce.

EASTLAND COUNTY MAN TELLS OF QUAKERS AND CATHOLIC

Writer Does Not Expect to Vote for Smith or Hoover; Condemns Religious Hatred

To the Editor of the Daily News:

Dear Sir and Friends: In a recent issue of your paper I read a two or three column article commencing upon the Quaker religion under the following heading: "Eastland County man gives definition of Quaker religion." To me this title is revolting. I will quote but little of this article, but the writer, it would seem, manifests religious intolerance now being manifested against Governor Smith of New York, makes the mistake of attacking the past history of the Society of Friends, Quakers. I had better make a few comments upon this article, to show the same intolerance and religious intolerance which this man and Catholicism manifest.

Not expecting to vote for either Mr. Smith or Mr. Hoover and having considerable knowledge of the past history of both Catholics and Quakers, I had better make a few comments upon this article, to show the same intolerance and religious intolerance which this man and Catholicism manifest.

Regarding the article you have made against Governor Smith, an account of 14 religious attacks, I would not have been surprised to find in the "Daily News" My Quaker father, residing in the first settlement in a large state of citizenship, I have heard him say that he thought the religion that made a man a better man than the best religion for him, and that he thought the religion that made a man a better man than the best religion for him, and that he thought the religion that made a man a better man than the best religion for him.

The writer in the article referred to, says that the Quakers originated about the middle of the fourteenth century in New England under the ministry of George Fox. This is an error, this religious persecution originated in England under Fox's ministry at about that time. Fox, who was born in 1624, at about the age of 20 became much persecuted regarding religious matters in England.

To get a better idea of conditions at that time, one should go back a few years earlier in church history. It was about sixty years (1564) before the birth of Fox when King Henry VIII of England broke with the Pope of the Catholic church.

The history of his life and work shows him to have been one of the most distinguished of all the English ministers. He broke with the Catholic church and his establishment of the Church of England was for the purpose of securing a divorce from his wife, the Pope having refused to grant one on account of the King's people's greed.

His divorce from the Catholic church was accomplished by his death in 1533 and was followed by the re-establishment of Catholicism as the state religion, and in the reign of five years succeeded many of convict persons guilty of heinous crimes. Above all they preached the doctrine of non-resistance, believing that when Christ instructed His followers, that when their enemies should smite them on their cheek to turn the other one, He meant what He said "I will not be smitten."

In the article referred to above, it was charged that Quaker women appeared in public "stark naked." I had never heard before of this being charged against Quakers, and I do not know as to the truth of the charge, but in times of great religious excitement and persecution, it would be strange if some fanatic did not accuse them, especially where there were thousands of persons involved. If those three women in Massachusetts in 1682 committed this act, we may rest assured that it was for no immoral purpose, but possibly through the misinterpretation of the degree of their modesty.

It was only seven years previous to this date when the first Quaker came to America, being in the summer of 1657. At that time Anne Austin and Mary Fisher, two Quaker missionaries, landed at Boston. Before they had made any public announcement they were seized and thrown into prison. Their bodies of religious nature being about a hundred in all were condemned and ordered by the magistrates to be publicly burned by the "official hangman."

In 1648, some eight years before these Quaker women arrived in Boston, that city celebrated its first public execution for "witchcraft."

Just a few months before our missionaries arrived a second victim suffered the death penalty under the same charge. The newly arrived Quakers were accused of "witchcraft" and being seriously believed by many at that time that all "witches" bore regular marks upon their bodies.

Not finding these marks, three women were confined in a dirty jail for five months and then deported to the Barbados Isles.

The story of "witchcraft" just referred to, reached its climax a number of years later after the death penalty had been exacted upon numerous men and women.

The first woman condemned, was an old Indian woman, living in the home of a minister, whose daughter was attacked with convulsions. The Indian woman being suspected of "witchcraft" was tried by a supernatural court and convicted. Because the unknown that suffered the death penalty, each other persons were condemned. Fifty-five escaped by confessing. One hundred and fifty were in prison, charged with "witchcraft." Several hundred other persons were under suspicion.

A number of dogs were charged with "witchcraft," two of which were convicted and publicly executed.

Most of the early victims were poor and friendless, but finally suspicion rested upon more influential people. A sudden check was given to this mania, when one of the judges and the wife of an influential clergyman were accused. In all these prosecutions or rather persecutions of "witchcraft," the religious leaders of the established church in New England enthusiastically assisted the civil authorities.

It was these same people who persecuted the Quakers as "heretics."

The darkest page of America's history is that regarding the persecution of the Quakers during the first 100 years of their missionary work in this country.

After the two women mentioned above were deported New England was invaded by the Quakers from England. The only place that they were received with any great degree of kindness was in Massachusetts. In that colony they were not only confined in prison and starved, but they were publicly whipped, tortured by tests and finally as a culmination of the indignities heaped upon them, four of them in the years 1638 and 1639, were publicly burned upon the Boston Common—three men and one woman.

It is not pleasant to dwell upon these persecutions, so let us turn to another page of history that records in the years of 1677 and 1678 the first and only visit of George Fox to America, where he was received as an honored guest in some seven or eight states, and was entertained by two governors, who were members of the Society of Friends. At one place, he remonstrated over the personal attention paid him, saying that the religious light he imparted came not through him, but from the great God, to whom all reverence was due.

In 1689, one year before the death of George Fox, the English parliament passed that famous mandate, known as the Toleration Act, which largely did away with religious persecutions. Historians give the Society of Friends much credit for the influence that caused the passage of that act of parliament.

If time and space would permit, I would be glad to dwell upon the beneficent works of the Quakers in the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries, but I realize it is not necessary for me to do this for either two insidious articles written in the heat of political argument can do harm to any extent, the splendid reputation of the early Quaker struggles for religious liberty.

Thanking you for your permission to set your readers right in this matter, I remain with kindest regards, your friend,

W. D. STARR.

15 PERCENT OF PRISONERS ON PAROLE FAIL

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Oct. 8.—Do paroled prisoners make good after they gain their freedom or do they continue to be a menace to society? This question forms the basis of a study just completed by the Illinois State Penitentiary, the result of an investigation of the Illinois prison and parole system in 1934. The study was made by the Illinois State Penitentiary, and the results were made public today.

The study shows that 15 per cent of the 1,000 men released on parole last year failed to make good. The study also shows that 85 per cent of the men released on parole last year made good. The study was made by the Illinois State Penitentiary, and the results were made public today.

RECORD MAKERS—Both of Them

Eleanor Smith, seventeen, aviatix, who recently established an American altitude record for women when she soared 11,661 feet over Long Island, is shown about to leave the airport in her Chevrolet. Just a few weeks later the Chevrolet Motor Company built its five millionth car, which happened to be a coach model, similar to the one used by Miss Smith.

OIL WORKER FOUND
BANKIN, Oct. 8.—Simon C. Rankin, 62, oil field worker, died here Sunday several hours after being found seriously ill. A note found in his pocket read: "Where is Texas?" Rankin was credited by a passport issued at Burma, India, where he had spent three years. He is said to have been connected with oil companies in Roumania. A picture found among his effects bore the address, 470 Rosewood avenue, Los Angeles, Cal. Friends are being made to locate relatives.

ILL. DIES AT RANKIN
The records of what these returned prisoners have done were checked over by members of the faculty of the University of Illinois, University of Chicago, and Northwestern university. Charges that the harmful offender, due to his knowledge of "the ropes" makes the broken parolee more dangerous than the new inmate is in fact. Of the 2,000 men, 15 per cent of those paroled were first offenders, 11.9 per cent were second offenders and only 1.5 per cent were professional offenders. Classification in the rest of 1-10 of 1 per cent could not be made.

"and don't forget the Chesterfield."

Mild enough for anybody... and yet they Satisfy

WHEN we purchase over 100 million pounds of choice tobacco from one crop, it means that regardless of cost, we are going to be sure of the quality of the tobacco in Chesterfield cigarettes. In this way we insure Chesterfield's Millions of dollar's worth of fine tobacco, ageing, maturing and sweetening in store is no better safeguard than this.
