MEXICAN REFUGES.

The easiest way out for the Mexican rebels is to cross the Rio Grande. Uncle Sam offers to let them shot against a wall.

This is in harmony with the old practice and tradition by which America has been made an asylum for political refugees from other lands. The tradition has not been lived up to as faithfully as it might have been, since the war. It is reassuring to have it applied now, even in the case of Mexican malcontents with whom our people have no great amount of sym-

Asylum in this case, however, is not to be perma nent. The rebels, it is said, are to be deported to some other country after the present revolt is suppressed.

That may be the best way. We can't have Mexicans plotting revolution on our side of the border. Yet it might be a good thing all around if they could remain at least long enough to see how we, with all our political faults, conduct pretty fair elections and acquiesce in them. Mexicans need political education.

RE-NAMING CLASSICS.

A rose by any other name may smell as sweet in, instead of turning them back at the border to be but E. Haldeman-Julius, publisher, believes that the plays of Shakespeare, by other names, will sell a lot faster. He proposes, therefore, to write good titles to replace the "dull" ones given the plays by their authors. It is said that "Romeo and Juliet" will be called "Passion's Storm," "Macbeth" will become 'The Murder Racket," and so on. It is not an untried stunt. The same publisher had great success renaming works of Gautier and Tolstoy. The "Redemption" of the latter gained in popularity at once when the one word "Love's" was placed before the true title. Lovers of Shakespeare may be shocked by this action. The publisher expects others who never even heard of the Stratford playwright to be moved to buy his works, and even to read them. The schools should get Haldeman-Julius to try his naming skill on Caesar's "Commentaries" and other textbooks,

CREOMULSION

The other day a customer of ours worked for a man here in town one day and received $2.00 for his work, and he came into the store and paid us one of those dollars on account and we in turn paid it to one of the boys on salary, he paid it to his groceryman on his grocery bill and the groceryman paid it out to the farmer for produce and it stayed in the Cisco territory where we will prob ably see it again. The other dollar he carried to the post office and placed in an envelope and sent to a mail order house and all of that dollar that remained in Cisco was the 2 cents that he paid for the postage stamp. Let's keep them at home where we may get a chance at them again for if we send them away they are like most of our new year resolutions, gone never to return.
