MORSE LAWYER HELPED WRITE TECH'S LAW BOOK

Lawyers and/or layment who stand as "Andorians" or "Anti-Andorians" may read a comprehensive discussion of the problem of "and" and "or" or either in the newest issue of the Texas Tech University Law Review. Law Prof. Maurice B. Kirk writes on "Legal Drafting: the Ambiguity of 'And' and 'Or'" in the Spring, 1971, edition distributed this week (week of July 4). Heading the Board of Editors was Editor in Chief Tom Womble, a 1971 graduate from Morse, Tex., now practicing in Dalhart.

Dr. Kirk introduces the problem with the arguments of both Andorians and Anti-Andorians, including an often reprinted anecdote about the Canadian who received a letter from a lawyer who spent most of his life writing trust-deeds.

"I am coming up to Montreal, the lawyer wrote, 'to have a chat with you and a few drinks of good sound Scotch' and/or Canadian whiskey."

His friend wrote back that the "stores do not seem to keep Scotch and/or Canadian whiskey, what is its other name?"

Kirk writes that the Andorians have lost to the Anti-Andorians, "but that has not ended the problem of 'and' and 'or,'" he said.

Instead, today's legal draftsman must be aware of uncertainties in the use of 'and' and 'or' which are more subtle and difficult than and/or.

Forbidden Flowers

To the nature-loving judge, the prisoner's offense—picking flowers in a public park—was something horrendous. Counting each picked flower as a separate crime, the judge imposed a fine of $720 or six years in jail.

But when the prisoner appealed to a higher court, the sentence was thrown out. The court said it was so harsh that it violated the United States Constitution's ban on "cruel and unusual punishment."

As a rule, when we use the expression "cruel and unusual punishment," we think of physical chastisement like flogging or maiming.

However, a too-severe jail term may also be held unconstitutional on the same grounds. In recent years, courts have shown a growing concern for humanitarian considerations in the field of sentencing. As one judge put it: "What constitutes cruel and unusual punishment is to be judged in the light of developing civilization, so that what might not have been cruel and unusual yesterday may well be so today."

Nevertheless, even the longest possible sentence—life imprisonment without possibility of parole—will be upheld where reasonably related to the crime that has been committed.

Thus, in the case of a brutal kidnapping, such a sentence was held not to violate the defendant's constitutional rights. Calling attention to the nature of the offense, the court said the sentence was "not so severe as to shock the moral sense of the community."

What about an open-end sentence, like "one to twelve years"? When that punishment was imposed on a convicted burglar, he complained that the very uncertainty was a kind of cruelty.

But the sentence was upheld on appeal, where the court pointed out that the flexibility might well work out to the prisoner's advantage by speeding his release. The court said it was merely a device, within reasonable limits, to put his fate in his own hands.

NEW CHARM TEST FOR WOMEN: "PLEASE CHECK THE TIRES"

Here's a real test of a woman's charm: can she persuade a service station attendant to check the air pressure in her car's tires with a smile?

If she can, she is well on her way to success as a driver, says the Tire Industry Safety Council. If she can't she should learn how to check the tires herself to head off trouble before it arrives.

"Two of the most important rules in tire safety and mileage are maintaining the proper air pressure and regularly examining for excessive or irregular tread wear," says Ross R. Ormsby, Chairman of the Council.

Checking a tire's air pressure is an easy task that any motorist who can bend over can handle. The Council recommends the pressure be checked at least once a month, preferably with a personal hand gauge. You can't always rely on the gauge in the service station air towers. Government surveys have found those towers are often inaccurate. Check the pressure when the tires are cool, before starting out on the road. Your car owner's manual will tell what the correct pressure should be, and then add the needed amount at the service station.

Checking the tires for proper tread depth is even simpler. Take a Lincoln penny and insert it upside down into the tread groove. If the top of Lincoln's head is visible in two or more adjacent grooves, the tire needs replacement. Safety experts consider a tire as "bald" when the tread depth is less than 1/16th of an inch or less. After this point, the tires are 44 times more likely to suffer disablement than new tires.

Removing nails, small stones or bits of glass embedded in the tread will help prevent costly tire damage which can lead to failure. This preventive maintenance is normally done at the service station when the tires are rotated (every 5,000 miles), the oil changed or the car lubricated. But there is no substitute for periodic personal inspection for greater assurance.

The Tire Industry Safety Council is offering a "Tire Safety and Mileage Kit" containing their own personal air pressure gauge, four valve caps and a 16-page copy of the Consumer Tire Guide. Price of the glove compartment size kit is $1.50 and can be ordered by writing to "Tire Safety," Box 736, New York, New York 10010.

FOOT NOTES

DOWN BY THE SEASIDE

With beachgoing season coming up, you're probably looking forward to leaving your footprints in the sands of summertime.

If so, health experts have a word of advice: Keep your eyes on your feet. It's true that going unshod on a beach is one of the best of foot exercises. But there are hazards. One is the danger of cutting yourself

THEY CAME FROM SPAIN

The story of these men and their march across the plains. Wherever they went, they saw the land with new eyes and recorded their observations in diaries and letters and reports which are complete and vivid. Here is one quotation from the JOURNEY OF CORONADO by Pedro Castaneda, one of his men:

"Who could believe that 1000 horses and 500 of our cows and more than 1500 friendly Indians and servants, in traveling over these plains, would leave no more trace where they had passed than if nothing had been there, nothing so that is was necessary to make piles of bones and cow dung now and then so that the rear guard could follow the army. The grass never failed to become erect after it had been trodden down, and although it was short, it was fresh and straight as before."

Audiences who have seen "TEXAS," the musical romance of Panhandle history which plays in this same theatre in the Canyon during July and August are familiar with the great storm recreated each evening. Visitors to THEY CAME FROM SPAIN in September and October will have even more opportunities to realize what the great clashes of nature were like in the days when the Spaniards came.

Fall weather in the Panhandle is delightful, and the magnion broken glass, a sharp-edged can or other litter. Judicious use of sandals can reduce the risk.

Another common peril is the fungus infection that causes athlete's foot. It's easy to pick up the infection in the public showers and dressing rooms that are part of the beach-holiday scene. Luckily, athlete's foot can be self-medicated without interfering with your enjoyment. A fungicide favored by specialists is Tinactin (cream or solution) until recently available only by prescription but now on sale across-the-counter at drug stores.

Athlete's foot afflicts 75 percent of Americans at some time in their lives. Danger signals include between-the-toes cracking, peeling or itching. Watch for these signs. Treating the infection at the beginning can make the difference between a happy or a spoiled vacation in the end.

EDUCATION NOTEBOOK

School financing gets a lot of attention

By KENNETH J. RABBen
Copley News Service

There isn't a state legislature that hasn't been besieged with pleas about paying more and more for public school systems seem to produce less and less.

Legislative study groups and material commissions are springing up from New York to Alaska, all trying to find a better education that is less painful to pupils, parents and taxpayers.

In most cases, these investigations concentrate on financing. State commissions of all educational fields are the most recent development. It provides an easy way for local politicians to get their names in the national spotlight.

The nation's first to try to identify all factors influencing the financing of education, to study their relationships and to propose concrete, alternative ways to pay the school bill.

In Maryland, the Citizens Commission on Maryland Education has tumbled into every current education controversy.

At the beginning of the year, the commission is studying the state of public education in the Free State with computer-assisted research by prestigious universities about the country with the aid of a five-man national advisory panel including U.S. Education Commissioner James E. Allen.

The hearings are being held. It is the most comprehensive project of its kind in Maryland, a state whose activities are watched closely in nearby Washington.

Commission members — the citizens — are studying, hearing testimony and debating the interrelationships between paying for schools, improving their performance, their structure, accountability, performance contracts, cash vouchers, teacher tenure and teacher negotiations.

The project's grass-roots origin, its scope and emphasis on providing proposals that can be implemented rather than filling a file drawer apparently are major factors that convinced the Ford Foundation to provide $62,100 to help pay for the study.

If its recommendations result in legislative reorganization of the fiscal and operational structure of the public schools, the study will have national impact. The odds are in the commission's favor. Maryland legislators have been most sympathetic to the suggestions of their own study groups and those formed by the governor.

Although the recommendations will be tailored to Maryland, other states can benefit from its experience and methods of research. Maryland's situation is the same as other states.

Although the dollar amount of education expenses continually rises, the state has been paying a smaller share of those costs while the subdivisions have been paying more. Great disparities exist in money spent for schools in subdivisions.

The commission theorizes similar disparities exist in the quality of education. In 1969, for example, per pupil expenditures in Maryland's 24 subdivisions ranged $541 to $876.

The commission's primary effort will be to recommend ways to provide equality of educational opportunity statewide, a commodity as nonexistent in Maryland as elsewhere, and to offer quality education.

Mrs. Janis A. Riker, the commission's executive director, says there are strong indications that taking the financing of education out of the hands of subdivisions may be the best way to achieve these goals if they are defined in terms of money. Education is viewed as a state, rather than a subdivision responsibility according to this theory. It is not clear how individual responsibility fits in here.

"School finances now are based on a subdivision's wealth and its assessable property," Mrs. Riker explains.

"Some are wealthier than others and thus can spend more for schools. State financing would provide other options, make the system and the taxes more equitable and provide wider tax sources based on the entire state's wealth, rather than the subdivision's."

She notes that state financing need not result in loss of local control of schools.

At-home clothes now gadabouts

By BETH MOHR
Copley News Service

At-home clothes have been liberated. Through with hiding their beauty in the dim glow of the fireside, they are getting into the wider, brighter world.

The first break was away from the lounging limits of robes, housecoats and pajamas. New at-home designs look enough like other fashions to be their doubles. They don't have to stay in and they don't.

Country dresses found in lingerie or robe departments can double for patio and informal party wear. Teen-agers add them to the country styles they wear for day.

Long dirndl skirts are among the most versatile of the gadabout loungers. In country calicos, they team with pretty feminine blouses.

Bolder prints make them smart partners for clinging matte jersey or rib-knit tops in white or dark shades. Skirts closed only at the waistline are designed to open on jumpsuits with mini or full-length pants. Gowns frequently take the open-skirt approach and slashes may open on pants or legs sheathed in colorful hose. All are popular partygoers.

Pants costumes are soft, usually in brightly printed jersey, to move lightly toward the body in tunics and flare easily in fuller pants.

One of the noticeable differences in at-home fashions is price. They usually cost less than look-alikes offered in other departments.

Elvis' daughter 'toys' with school dilemma

By NANCY ANDERSON
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Little Lisa Presley, who has led an abnormally sheltered life for most of her three years, now attends nursery school and has already encountered a problem.

Her teacher has asked mamma Priscilla not to let Lisa bring so many toys to school, so now the Presley puzzle each morning is: which playthings shall Lisa share with her friends today?

When Elvis was a young'un, he and his mother didn't have to worry about this. He got his first guitar as a Christmas present in place of the bicycle he wanted but his parents couldn't afford.

This goes to show you that humble beginnings need not be an insuperable handicap, but may, in fact, lead to a glorious future. If the senior Presleys had been able to afford a bicycle instead of a guitar, just think what Elvis' life might be today. Or, to put it another way, do you think he'd be paid a million dollars a month now to pedal a bike around the stage of the International Hotel show room?

Connie Stevens writes from London where she's taping a television series that her daughters are enrolled in an English country school where Tricia, the younger of the two, is doing "spectacular paintings."

Proud mother Connie boasts that Tricia's paintings are so good she is submitting one to an art exhibit.

Connie's show began hiatus May 23, and, during the break, she was planning a holiday in Norway.

She received one of her greatest thrills in England when two young men told her they had just paid $30 for two of her records and had traveled 100 miles by motor scooter to watch her tape her series.

Connie invited them to join her for champagne before they jumped on their scooter for their 100-mile ride home.

Backstage after the show, Kay told Rod, "I've heard about you all day from my mother."

Jamie Conkling, daughter of Donna King Conkling of The King Family, and Michael Miller will be married in July. No, he's not in show business

MAN AND MEDICINE

This is season for summer colds

By IRWIN J. POLK, M. D.
Copley News Service

Summer cold season is here. Every year around the beginning of June, "summer cold" is a popular complaint at doctor's office.

Everyone knows, summer colds are especially common. They hang on and sometimes through the summer and into the fall.

Happy is the patient with a "summer cold," a cold which occurs at other time of the year, only once. The nose is red, stuffy and puffy. The throat is scratchy, tight and sometimes painful.

There is often a cough with a "summer cold," a cough which may be caused by pollen in the throat, a dry, cough which sometimes develops into a heavy, moistening cough and wheeze. Summer colds are very much like winter ones, but they tend to be more severe and longer lasting.

Patients develop these colds at the very beginning of summer and continue to have them through the first nip of frost. Others may have their symptoms in April, May and June, and some from mid-August to the end of the year.

It is because, for the most part, summer colds seem to be due to the flowering of different kinds of plants. In early spring, these colds are often due to the pollen of the early trees, such as maple, birch, oak and sycamore.

Like the others, but it is in some time in June that "summer cold" really blooms. At the time of blooming of the roses, the colds are really red. So in summer cold, we have something called "rose fever" is just another name for "summer cold." Symptoms are the same, nuisance value the only difference is in the name. But both of these illnesses are misnamed. Summer colds are not colds and rose fever is not a fever. These diseases are in the family with the much better known sickness called "ragweed hay fever." All three of these conditions are in fact caused by an allergy.

Tiny plant particles called pollen have the ability to cause cold symptoms in susceptible people. Pollen comes from a plant as it is flowering and is the substance by which plants reproduce.

Pollen grains are microscopic in size, thus can rise and fall with air currents and travel for miles. When they fall upon susceptible tissue, they are quite irritating and cause much discomfort.

They make the eyes red, itching, teary. They bring about sneezing fits, nasal stuffiness and discharge. In the chest, pollens can cause coughing, secretion of mucus and even wheezing. Pollen can and in fact does cause all of the symptoms of "summer colds, rose fever and hay fever."

Pollen grains can cause all the symptoms of "virus colds," although, unlike viruses, they are not infectious or contagious. Doctors call diseases such as those caused by exposure to plant substances, allergies.

Treatment for summer allergies is available. For mild cases, sometimes a simple tablet such as the ones advertised on TV and in magazines are a help. More severe problems may require the attention of a doctor who will have stronger medicines available.

In some cases, relief from summer allergies can be obtained by reducing or avoiding exposure to the offending substance. Tests are available which help identify the cause of symptoms for each patient and specific treatments are available too. Once the problem has been identified, there is good relief available for most patients.

LONGEST CAVES

The Flint Ridge cave system in Kentucky, 72.2 miles in length, is the longest in the world while the world's deepest cave is the Gouffre de la Pierre Saint-Martin on the Franco-Spanish border, which has been explored to 3,782 feet.

Girl flees East inside mattress

A young man smuggled his East German fiancée to the West by hiding her inside the mattress of a railway sleeping car bunk.

The couple had slit open a mattress, hurling the stuffing out of the window, after which she climbed in. The young man then threw a blanket over her and laid down on the bunk.

Prehistoric fish discovered on Malta

Workmen have found the skeleton of a large reptilian carnivorous fish, believed to be between 15 and 25 million years old, near Valletta, Malta.

The fish, whose skull and fin vertebrae alone measure almost six feet, was discovered 25 feet below ground in a limestone quarry.

PATTON TO HEAD MILITARY GROUP

The Mile High Retired Officers Association recently installed new officers in a special ceremony held in Denver, Colo. Named president was Lieutenant Colonel (retired) Tommie L. Patton, son of Mr. and Mrs. G.L. Patton of Spearman. Patton retired recently after serving 20 years with the U.S. Air Force. He and his wife, Frances, live in Denver.

Old Days In Fashion

You hardly have to be a sociologist to conclude that the mysterious pendulum of human behavior, which has appeared to oscillate so violently in recent years, is now swinging back toward an extremely lively interest in the 1920's and 1930's in fashion, food, art and music.

It's almost as though, during the past couple of wild and hectic decades, we'd lost something in all the excitement, and had decided to go back and have a look at it.

We seem to be approaching a mood similar to that of a fellow who might have lost his grandfather's old umbrella during a wild and crowded day before the hootchy kootchy tent at the circus midway and now, having had time for a little quiet contemplation, has admitted the sentimental value of the old family heirloom and has decided to wander back there on the off chance that it might still be lying around somewhere. Persons of a more mature vintage will probably agree that this "new" attitude might not be such a bad idea, at that.

One of the things about the so-called hip generation, that has sometimes given the older generation certain misgivings is its apparent view that nothing at all ever really happened before it was born and to every try to find out was a vast waste of time. So on with the building of the bright new world, minus all those tiresome inhibitions which lessons of the past might create!

But a land surveyor will tell you that before he can effectively plan a new road to where he wants to go, he must occasionally swing his transit 180 degrees to check where he's been. A road that isn't mapped in this way can turn out to be a mighty peculiar road indeed.

The first reaction of those of us who knew the Thirties and Forties will be one of warm satisfaction at the thought that the age in which we kicked up our heels and made whoopee—as it was then called—is finally receiving some proper attention from the present generation of young whippersnappers. Goodness knows we tried often enough to tell them about it, and our efforts were usually dismissed with a bored smile.

And yet, and yet now that this new wave of interest is being directed toward those great old days, some of us may find ourselves feeling vaguely jittery about it. You know the nervous feeling like when the kids are digging through a dusty box of old snapshots. When they learn more about how we actually looked and spent the days of our glorious youth, some of the youngsters are bound to start questions for which we may not have ready answers.

The violence and corruption of the gangster era, for instance. And the giant fiasco we created when we tried to prohibit booze. And all those guys who jumped out of high windows during the stock market crash because they valued little figures on paper more than life itself. And a whole generation that was cast adrift for lack of intelligent planning.

On well. Where's that old phonograph record of "I've Something to Tell You (So Linger A While)"? Maybe we'll play it as mood music while considering some suitable replies.

On the other hand we might just sit down with the younger generation of age and enjoy a drink or two of something that will be equally soothing to both of us like Wild Turkey Bourbon, which in itself is ages old, and still as modern and with-it a drink as any generation could possibly ask.

Wild Turkey with its 8-year old flavor, full body and gentle nature has impeccable credentials to bridge a generation gap for a sensible, fruitful discussion.

Let Me See by Sybil...

What's good about the "good ole Sumer time"? The livin' sure ain't easy! I tried my best to find out when the last day of summer is--so I would have some sort of "look-forward-to" date, but my calendar does not list it. And this makes me feel even worse--like maybe it might just last forever. I am ready for it to be DONE, OVER, FINISHED. It's too hot for man or beast. My Siamese cat P.C. has the right idea--she's pulling out all her hair. This makes her look mighty scroungy, and it worries me to death because my faithful vacuum cleaner is about to choke to death on cat hair. I looked in my Cat book for some suggestion as to why P.C. was de-hairing herself and the know-it-all author reasoned it was all due to "hot spots." I figured this all along, and P.C. knew it for sure. If there is a medication for hot-spots I don't intend to use it. After all, who wants to run around in this kind of weather with a fur coat on. Anyway, it's all working out for her good. She's cooler. And she doesn't resemble a cat in any way--the stray dogs don't even bother to chase her, and the birds just fly down on her drinking dish and help themselves. On the other hand maybe it's too hot for the dogs and birds.

I hate summer time. Always have. I've tried to figure out just why I do and I came to the conclusion its probably because I am so envious. I read about all these people who take one week-two week, and some even three week vacations. Imagine that! How must it feel to be able to take off for one whole week with nothing to do but look for places to go and fun things to do. Or just simply relax. If my boss ever let me off for one week he would have a hospital bill to pay. We took off for 2 weeks once, back in 1948. I can't remember for the life of me where we went, or what we did. Maybe I dreamed it all.

I surely do qualify for mid-stream, but if I didn't I sure would change horses. I would love to be a school teacher. They have a most wonderful set-up. Paid 12 months a year. 3 months vacation, 2 weeks off for Christmas, Thanksgiving, Easter, and every other legal holiday. Come to think of it, School teachers and students are probably the only people on earth who enjoy summer time.

I've always believed the Good Lord sandwiched in June-July and August to give us a taste of what the hot place might be like.

There are too many chores to do in the summer time. Like keep the air conditioner running. Our pumps itself to death often. Like mowing the yard, so you can water it again and make it grow so you can mow it. Today at noon I went I went home and found the garden hose had suffered a heat stroke. The sun had softened it up so, it burst open. Plastic!

Gracious Taste
By Marian Marsh
Onaida Silver Consultant

It is considered gracious taste, when entertaining a friend, to invite whoever originally introduced you. An invitation must at least be referred. If it is refused, a friend without the others be present.

When a couple elope--with parental blessing--it is not necessary for the bride and groom to send formal announcements, although they may. If they do send them, place and date of the marriage should be included. If a ceremony was performed, the name of city need appear. If the couple married in church, it is optional whether or not the church is mentioned.

THE NEW MORALITY

By DAVID JOHNSON.

Our present generation of young people have brought many new words into our vocabulary. One of these phrases is "the new morality." This is a phrase that demands our attention, for it simply states that what used to be wrong morally may not be wrong for society's standards have undergone a complete change.

To understand the meaning of the new morality, one must know what the word "morality" means. It is defined as conformity to the rules of right conduct. Since society determines what conduct is acceptable and what is not, then it is true that it can change them if it so pleases. Therefore, the possibility of there being a new morality is entirely possible.

This is all well and good for an entirely secular society. However, a Christian society is different and Christian people should be different. Their moral rules are determined by standards set in the life of Christ.

The Ten Commandments have not changed. What is spiritually right and wrong has not changed. The principals of Christian living as stated in the Bible have not changed. For a worthwhile life the new morality is far surpassed by the Christian morality.

Three birds which cannot fly are the emu, kiwi and ostrich.

COUNTY AGENT'S REPORT

... by Robert Adamson

Corn leaf aphids are common in grain sorghum each year. These insects are different from the green but in appearance, habits and nature of damage. Corn leaf aphids are greenish blue in color. The wingless females are somewhat ovate in form and about 1/12 inch long. They have black legs and antennae. These insects reproduce by giving birth to living young which become adults in a few days. There are several generations annually.

The young and adults suck the plant juices, which frequently cause yellowish mottling on the leaves. Since corn leaf aphids feed primarily deep within the whorl of the middle leaf, some brown or reddening along the leaf edges and tips may be visible as the leaf emerges from the whorl. These insects do not inject toxins into the plant during feeding as does the greenbug. Honeydew, common with the greenbug, is also excreted by corn leaf aphids.

Even though corn leaf aphids often appear to severely affect sorghum plants, research conducted on this insect on the High Plains has not shown an increase in yield following insecticide application. Poor control is often obtained, and this is generally attributed to the fact that these aphids feed primarily deep within the whorl where they are protected from insecticides. Research data have shown that even when corn leaf aphid populations were significantly reduced by insecticides, there were no increases in yields.

Corn leaf aphid infestations are usually heaviest during the preboot stage, but generally decline rapidly during the boot stage.

Careful consideration of all the factors that might be affected should be made before controls are initiated for corn leaf aphids. Attempting control of corn leaf aphids may result in more serious problems later in the season. This statement is based on the following reasoning. Corn leaf aphids serve as an excellent food source for beneficial insects and allow for early development of predators and parasites. Once a field is completely eliminated of its beneficial insect population it is subject to rapid buildup of other pests with no means of defense other than additional insecticide applications. Controls initiated early for corn leaf aphids allow greenbugs to build rapidly with no beneficial insects to suppress them; consequently additional insecticide applications may be required. Based on past observations, buildups of secondary pests, such as the Banks grass mite and corn ear worms in sorghum heads, have most often occurred in fields of grain sorghum which received more than on application of insecticide.

GREENBUG- Greenbugs which are beginning to increase are also aphids, but are light green or yellowish in color. Usually they have a dark stripe down their back. Their legs are green except for the tips which are black. Greenbugs give birth to living young, and all offspring are females. Newly-born greenbugs begin reproduction in about 7 days. One female can produce about 80 offspring during a 25-day reproduction period. Greenbugs thus can develop enormous populations in a short time.

Greenbugs suck plant juices as well as inject toxins into the plant during the feeding process. Greenbug infestations in sorghum are detected by reddish spots on the leaves caused by small greenbug colony feeding on the underside of a leaf. The reddened leaf area enlarges as greenbugs increase. Finally, the leaf begins to die, turning brown from the outer edges toward the center.

Due to the nature of damage caused by greenbugs, heavy populations may result in yield loss. However, experience and research data have shown that greenbugs can effectively be controlled with available insecticides. Decisions to apply control should be based on field inspections so that chemicals are applied only when necessary. When greenbug populations begin to increase, predators are generally abundant due to their buildup on corn leaf aphids. Maximum benefit should be taken of these beneficial insects. If insecticides are needed, proper timing of the application is very important in order to avoid multiple applications. More than one application of insecticide for greenbugs may result in a buildup of banks grass mite or bollworms as discussed previously.

GENERAL GUIDE FOR DETERMINING NEED FOR GREENBUG CONTROL
Plant size-Emergence to about 6 inches high
When to treat-Visible damage with colonies of greenbugs on leaf surface
Plant size-Larger plants to pre-
-boot
When to treat-Before any entire leaves are killed
Plant size-Pre-boot and larger
When to treat-When greenbug numbers are sufficient to cause death of more than two normal-sized leaves.

SEEDS FROM THE SOWER
By Michael A. Guido, Metter, Georgia

The human body is so admirably constructed and so wonderfully complex. It is amazing to think about it—especially the ear. The workmanship is marvelous.

The outer ear, capable of receiving 73,700 vibrations of sound per second, catches the vibrations and funnels them through the auditory canal until they strike the eardrum. The hammer, anvil and stirrup bones transmit the vibrations across the air-filled middle ear like a telegraph key sends dots and dashes. Then the spiral cochlea with its tiny hair cells connects the sound and the brain like a telephone-switchboard operator connects one telephone to another.

Oh, the ear! None but God could plan it and build it. And the sacred historian wrote of Him in Psalm 94:9, "He that planted the ear, shall He not hear?"

Jupiter of Crete was always shown in statuary and painting as without ears, suggesting that He did not want to be bothered with the troubles of this world. But our God has ears, and He hears.

How terrifying it is to know that God hears all our wicked words. But how comforting it is to know that He hears the cries of the needy. And in hearing, He helps. No one ever cried to Him in vain.

Mrs. Faye Womble Lynch returned home Monday from Shattuck where she had been a hospital patient since July 8.

Mr. and Mrs. Bill Gandy went to Plainview the past weekend to visit her niece Mr. and Mrs. Louis Amick and family.

Gary Papay from Spearman High School is among some 25 student and novice photographers bringing their picture taking skills and knowledge into focus during a special workshop being conducted on the campus of Texas Tech University through Friday (July 16).

The workshop is the first of two extra photography training sessions preceding the 14th annual Summer High School Publications Workshop soon to begin at Texas Tech.

According to Ralph L. Sellmeyer, Tech journalism professor and director of the annual workshops, training offered in the photography sessions is aimed not only at high school students and advisors who may be working on their school newspaper or yearbooks but also at other students and adults who simply want to learn how to take better pictures and correct processing and printing methods.

The session consists of four days of intense study and work on the basics of using a camera and doing darkroom work. Participants will also learn how to develop their own film and how to make their own contact prints and enlargements.
