Top Film Stars To Have Veto Over Ads On Their TV Shows

By ERSKINE JOHNSON NEA Staff Correspondent

HOLLYWOOD - Hollywood on TV: Ginger Rogers, it now can be told, jumped into a $1,000,000 TV contract with her eyes open much wider than Hollywood suspected. There will be no Ginger caught between a burping beer can and the nasal spiel of a used car salesman. Her CBS contract gives the star the right to veto any objectionable

The same clause, I hear, will be in the contract of other top fflm stars when they move into the TV Ginger's first show will be in

Voice Of The People

At a recent news conference President Truman dropped a remark about wishing we could have a direct national primary for the selection of presidential nominees.

No one can be sure the President meant what he said, since he gets pretty flippant in these bouts with the press over his 1952 intentions. But it might well be argued that there is some sound sense in this proposition.

In only 16 states of the 48 is there now a "presidential" primary, and in several of those 16 the popular expression of sentiment'is purely advisory instead of binding on the delegates to the national convention. The other 32 states select delegates in state conventions, where the people's voice is heard only indirectly.

Anyone who understands the workings of politics knows that state party conventions largely are under the control of the party machinery. The slate of delegates which emerges from such conclaves is in almost every instance the product of party organization decisions.

The successful rebellions against organization control are relatively rare. '

Actually, the convention method of choosing delegates, representatives and even nominees is a carry-over better than the men who are running it. This applies to about half the secrecy of the committee he

Warren does not intend to invade Ohio, although Harold Stassen of the control of the contro declines to observe this gentlemen's agreement and hence then you don't have to worry about he is going into Taft's bailiwick and possibly Warren's.

But can't it be fairly argued that this hands-off policy in favorite-son states simply nullifies the value of the service for their country and for primary? Of what purpose is a resort to the polls if there future peace, by cooperating with the is to be no real contest among the leading contenders?

move generally was accepted as a gesture of conciliation toward the Mossadegh government. It appeared the British were ready to start afresh, to lay the ground for renewed negotiations.

But Premier Mossadegh declined to accept the new ambassador. Coming on the heels of his sharp order closing nine British consulates, his action can only be viewed as one of extreme, almost irrational hostility.

Just how this benefits an Iran which currently is producing little oil, has no market for a larger product and is financially on the rocks is not plainly evident.

Indeed, here is no consistent thread of concern for Iranian security and welfare running through Mossadegh's

The only consistency is his apparently unshakeable determination not to deal with the British unless they yield 100 per cent to his demands.

But stubborn inflexibility and blazing hatred for the British "interloper" hardly are enough to sustain a country in Iran's precarious position. How much longer can Mossadegh indulge his emotions without plunging his country into economic ruin?

our team owed its victory mostly to better bidding methods. Just the same, they had to play their cards with great precision to bring home the Bermuda Bowl for the secon year in succession.

In the hand shown today, Howard Schenken of New York held the West cards, and John R. Crawford of Philadelphia held the East cards. Their successful defense against four hearts was a combination of cold skill and warm imagination. Schenken opened the three hearts, reasoning that dummy's bidding showed ruffing power. The Italian declarer won in his own hand and went after the spades in order to provide a discard for one of his low clubs.

Schenken took the queen spades with his ace and led a second trump. Declarer won in his own hand, and Crawford discarded the deuce of diamonds even though he held such great strength in the suit. He had already foreseen the course of the play. Declarer got to dummy with the

Tale Of The Coonskin Cap Tops Kefauver Campaign Lore

By PETER EDSON Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON-The real story on Estes Kefauver's original coonskin cap now has been revealed by George M. Clark, president of the Pioneer National Bank of Chattanooga, Tenn.

On a river trip to Paducah, Ky., Clark happened to meet the young out from behind every tree and rock engineer, who gave him the cap, Clark took it home as a souvenir and thought no more about it until shortly after Memphis Boss Ed Crump published his now-famous full page ad, blasting Estes Kefauver as a candidate for the U.S. have been a serious-minded good Senate, and likening him to a pet

Kefauver then paid his tribute to the coon. "A coon can lick a dog four times its size. He is somewhat canism, that can be forgiven. Davy Crockett, Sam Houston and all of our great men in that era of early Tennessee history wore the familiar ring-tailed coon-skin cap.

The Tennessee Bar Association stories kicking around.

But H. L. Callahan, now mayor time. As one of the entertainment of Kefauver's home town of Moundsville, Tenn., and formerly Estes' high school teacher, has come up with what probably is the eriginal cute-kid Kefauver quote.

Callahan relates that four-yearold Estes Kefauver was one day watching his aunt's dog Laddie, chase a rabbit.

In baby-talk the boy remarked: "If Laddie would quit ba'king so much an save his bwef, he could wun faster and catch the wabbit." The moral of this drawn by Kegot to Estes Kefauver who was cam- fauver's backers is that this is the way their man is running for the presidency. He doesn't bark, he saves his breath, and they think he's going to catch the rabbit.
