F. L. SPRING AND FAMILY IN CAR CRASH AT FARWELL; BIG TRUCK STRIKES FAMILY CAR HEAD-ON

A car crash which was very painful to the occupants of one of the cars and might easily have been fatal to all, occurred just east of Farwell last Sunday.

F. L. Spring of Friona, accompanied by Mrs. Spring and their children, were enroute to Farwell for a day's visit with relatives, there, when their car was struck in a head-on collision by a truck loaded east. The accident occurred near a filling station a quarter of a mile east of Farwell.

It appears that the truck in rounding the corner upon which the filling station was located, failed to keep to the right side of the road, but cut angling across the corner, and the building kept Mr. Spring from seeing the truck until he was so close upon it that there was no time to dodge, even if there had been room to do so, and the truck was traveling at such a rate that the collision was inevitable.

Each occupant of Mr. Spring's car was more or less injured from the shock. Lydia Marie, the small daughter, was the most seriously injured, being knocked unconscious for a few minutes, during which time it was thought the shock had been fatal. Miss Mary, who was in the seat with her father, received several small cuts from the shattered pieces of the windshield. Mrs. Spring received a few cuts and bruises about the head and Mr. Spring had one wrist badly bruised and received a small cut just over his left knee.

A woman in the truck got out and assisted with the little girl until she was revived, and while Mr. Spring was after a car to carry his family to the home of Mr. Aldridge, the driver of the truck took his departure from the scene and was not heard of afterward. He was followed as far as Bovina, but no trace of him was found. It cost Mr. Spring $140 to have his car repaired.

SHORT FOR SHERIFF

In last week's issue of the Star appeared the first announcement of A. B. Short, of Friona, as a candidate for the nomination for sheriff of Parmer county.

Mr. Short has been a resident of the Plains country for many years and knows the Plains country and Plains people and is thus equipped to successfully serve the people of the county as a law executive.

He has been a resident of Friona for the past six or seven years, having been in business here during that entire time, and well and favorably known to everybody in the eastern part of the county and to many people in all parts of the county.

If nominated Mr. Short proposes to give the people the best service within his power as a public servant.

HAD A GOOD HUNT AND GOOD TIME

The group of hunters which left here two weeks ago, returned on Wednesday from a two weeks' happy vacation.

They did not all succeed in taking their limit of deer during the outing, but four deer were killed by the group and all report a most enjoyable time and well satisfied with the experience. They were located about seventy-five miles west of Magdalena, New Mexico.

TO HAVE FARM SALE

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Hilton and family were in Hereford Saturday afternoon attending to business matters pertaining to their farm sale to be held on the Hilton farm three miles northwest of Friona, on Friday, November 29 at 1:30 p. m. when Mr. Hilton will offer all his farming equipment, live stock, household goods, etc. at public auction. Practically all the Hilton farm machinery is new and many bargains are in store for prospective buyers.

Logan Simpson and Homer Bennett spent a few days this week doing plumbing work at Bovina.

STREET IMPROVEMENT

Street Commissioner F. W. Reeve has had a force of men with tractors and teams employed loosening and removing the dirt along Main Street from the places where it is too high to the low places, thus making it of an even grade in all places.

It is Mr. Reeve's plan to thus level the street, then make it perfectly smooth with grader and drag and thus get rid of the bumps and chuck-holes and allow the water which falls to be carried away by the gutters.

This being done, it is planned to treat the entire business portion of the street with a thick covering of caliche and then give it a thorough packing, followed probably with a coat of tarvia or some cheap oil filler.

If this can be accomplished Friona's main street will then be in A-1 condition and should last several years at the end of which time the city should be able to pave all the most used portions of her streets. Everyone interested in the welfare of the city should give Mr. Reeve their unstinted support in his efforts to give us some good streets.

HAD SUCCESSFUL HUNT

Carl C. Maurer and R. T. Gischler, who spent last week in the wilds of New Mexico hunting deer returned last Saturday bearing evidence of their success as ninjas. They state that they secured a good location for their hunt and found plenty of game. Each secured the limit and returned well supplied with choice venison. They had an abundance of sport and express themselves as well pleased with their outing.

FARM SALES.

The C. J. Paddock farm sale is set for Monday, November 25, at 11:00 o'clock a. m. Mr. Paddock will serve lunch at the noon hour and wants all to come. He has sold his farm and is moving to Hereford just as soon as his house is completed. Mr. Paddock is offering a number of Jersey cows and several Anxiety breeding Hereford bulls, along with a lot of farm machinery, horses and household goods. The Paddock farm is located about five miles southeast of Hereford.

J. W. Hilton is going to hold a public farm sale on his place, three miles northeast of Friona on Friday, November 29. The sale begins at 1:30 and Mr. Hilton is selling his entire farm equipment, including many articles of farm machinery that are practically new.

The J. B. Phillips dairy and stock sale will be held at the home place about a mile north of Hereford near 25-Mile Avenue. Mr. Phillips will sell about fifteen or twenty Jersey cows, a good male, some hogs and a few barred rock cockerels, and good bronze turkeys.

STORK-O-GRAM

Born to Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Russell, November 18, a daughter, Rena Pearl, at their home nine miles southeast of Friona.

REV. C. C. PORTER TO DALLAS

Rev. Carter C. Porter, who has been pastor of the local Methodist church for the past year, removed with his family to Dallas last Friday. Rev. Porter will enter Southern Methodist University at Dallas, where he will complete a two year course, and plans to go from there to the Yale Divinity school, which institution he will attend until he has received his degree. He is not leaving the ministry, nor has he any such intentions, but will spend these few years in earnest study in order that he may be more fully equipped for the service in his chosen profession, the ministry.

During his brief stay of one year in Friona, Rev. Mr. Porter made a host of friends among our people, not within his own congregation alone, but among people of all denominations and of all the various walks of life, and it is with very sincere regret that those friends see him depart from among us, since he and his noble wife are people no community can afford to lose, and by their going our entire community is made poorer.

Brother Porter is a young man of rare intelligence, broad and progressive ideas and an exalted vision of life, and his great ambition is to give to the world the best that is in him by a square, progressive and whole-souled devoted religious service.

It is Rev. Porter and all such men, by their sincerity of purpose, love of accomplishment, devotion to the cause, power of deep and correct reasoning, breadth of vision, persistent effort and exalted intelligence that are destined to bring about the millennium so devoutly expected by all true Christians.

During Rev. Porter's stay in Friona the writer had the pleasure and honor of an intimate acquaintance with him and this intimate association has been an experience of rare mental and spiritual worth and will be fondly cherished throughout the years to come. It is an honest opinion, honestly expressed, that should his life be spared for the carrying out of his present plans, Carter C. Porter's influence will be felt throughout the land.

LOST PINT OF BLOOD

G. W. Turner, one of our highly esteemed citizens, had a rather distressing experience Tuesday evening, caused from a severe spell of nose bleeding.

After using a number of simple remedies without result and after waiting for the bleeding to cease, a physician was called who administered remedies that stopped the flow of blood. According to the doctor, Mr. Turner apparently had lost nearly a pint of blood. He was apparently in his usual condition Wednesday morning.

DON'T PARK SO DEEP

Much complaint is being heard from various citizens regarding the method of parking used by many people who come in to town on some evenings each week, more especially on Friday and Saturday evenings, supposedly to attend the shows.

It appears that when all the parking space is taken up along Main street, other cars come in and park in the rear of these cars but further out in the street, so that it is difficult for moving cars to get through. Then, it is reported that some are careless of the rights of others, and will park right in the middle of the street. Thus it is that when those who have properly parked at the curb are all reasonable people should do, are ready to move on they find it impossible to do so on account of the cars parked just behind them.

The city has been asked to provide a traffic officer to prevent such promiscuous parking.

CROPS LOOKING WELL

I. W. Barnhouse, one of the most progressive farmers living southeast of Friona near the Syndicate Hotel, was in town Monday. While here Mr. Barnhouse dropped into the Star office to renew his subscription to the Star and stated that people in his locality had been having enough moisture in the form of rain and snow, but not too much. He said that there is still quite a lot of row crops to be harvested and that the crops are good. Wheat in his neighborhood he said is looking fine.

ROW CROP THRESHING

Threshing machines are again busy in the fields of row crops near town after having been stopped several days on account of wet weather. One of F. N. Welch's machines has been threshing north-east of town and is at work now south of town. It began threshing for C. V. Goodwine on Rose Hill farm Monday morning and put in a large part of the week there.

Other machines, both combines and regular threshers are busy in various localities out from Friona and farmers are wishing for several days more of fair weather in order that all the grain may be threshed before more damage is done their crops.

GIN BUSINESS GOOD.

Over three hundred bales of cotton have been turned out by the Friona gin this season, with prospects indicating a total business of around 1200 bales by the time the season is closed. Cotton is coming from a greater distance than has heretofore been the case.

SOME THINGS THEY SAY

Some of our subscribers in renewing their subscriptions express their desire for some of the things they are especially interested in out in the Plains country.

A man in Iowa says: "Keep us posted on weather and crop conditions."

Another from Texas says: "Don't stop the paper—let her come on. We like to read what is going on on the Plains. Is there any wild ducks out there?"

PANHANDLE—PLAINS MAN IN FRIONA.

P. C. Bennett, representing the Panhandle-Plains, Inc., of Amarillo, was a business visitor here Wednesday afternoon and Thursday night.

Mr. Bennett was one of the men in charge of the agricultural exhibits which were shown at a number of the largest fairs in Iowa, Missouri and Nebraska during the past fair season.

Mr. Bennett said that during the exhibits he gave away over three million pieces of Panhandle literature and secured a list of about ten thousand names of persons interested in the Panhandle country and seeking further information from the various localities.

This large and strong organization proposes to follow up the advantage thus gained for bringing settlers into the Plains country by undertaking even a larger undertaking next year.

These plans of course will require funds for financing, and since the entire Plains country will benefit by the experiment, it is thought no more than just that all sections and towns of the Plains shall contribute to the enterprise, and it was for this purpose that Mr. Bennett was in Friona.

POULTRY SHOW FOR FRIONA WILL BE PAYING INVESTMENT, THINKS S. F. WARREN, CHICKEN FANCIER

OUR DISPLAY WINDOWS

Quite a number of the display windows in Friona are already presenting a sight calculated to bring the Christmas urge to those who pass by.

The large display windows in the Blackwell Hardware and Furniture store are being put in readiness to receive a sample display of the many pretty and interesting toys and games for the children and young folk, and of many useful articles so highly prized by the older ones. It will be a great Christmas store this season.

Then crossing the street to the City Drug Store we find both windows literally filled with some of the most handsome as well as useful articles which will surely tempt the lover, the husband, the father to let loose of his hard-earned dough for the sake of pleasing those whom he holds dearer than life itself. These windows are also most beautifully decorated in the Christmas colors of red and green, strewn with imitation snow and frost. Do not look too long here if you don't want your purse strings to loosen.

Drifting south on Main Street we come next to the office of J. J. Horton Insurance Co., where we behold the table piled high with samples of the snowy white lint from the cotton gin, Mr. Horton being in the cotton business also.

Then comes the windows of T. J. Crawford's general store, which are not particularly arranged as a Santa Claus home, but are filled with articles that will tempt the mind of both young and old. One contains a most beautiful radio cabinet all ready to Glenn music and other entertainment from the air, while the other window contains a display of handsome downy looking blankets that almost make one feel warm just to look at them.

Continuing south to the next block we come to the Rushing grocery, one window of which is piled high with a display of the most appetizing and hunger-tempting things to eat, while the other attracts the eye with soft fleecy blankets in plaids of the most charming colors, also delicate silk hosiery and dresses.

Then we come to the Wentworth Variety Store, which windows are literally packed with all kinds of beautiful and useful articles and toys.

Going on southward we next find ourselves lingering and peering through the windows of the Fashion Shop and Bella Donna Beauty Shop. While the display in these two popular windows is not so extensive as some of the others, right here is where one is most likely to linger longer, viewing the dainty articles, dresses, coats, millinery and hosiery, which so strongly tempt one to give full sway to the Christmas spirit.

Farther southward to the corner of the next block we find the largest display windows in the city, in the Maurer Clothing Store. These windows are always attractive, although they are not yet especially decorated for the holiday season. They are attractively decorated with pretty dresses, hose, shoes, hats and other articles of ready-to-wear goods.

Turning and wending our way northward again, we cross again to the east side of Main Street and are attracted by the splendid display of guns and ammunition such as will fill the sportsman's heart with joyful anticipation for the next hunting season. Here again we are tempted by another handsome radio cabinet, all in the windows of the B. T. Galloway hardware store.

Then, adjoining the Galloway store on the north we stop before the windows and almost wish we could eat forever when we behold the wonderful display of fresh and cured meats, neatly arranged cans of all kinds of groceries and fresh fruits and vegetables in Bill Hall's M System store.

Having gone this round with us and viewed the wonderful assortment of merchandise displayed in

S. F. Warren, one of Friona's most successful poultry raisers, was in the Star office Wednesday afternoon and expressed his opinion that Friona should by all means have a poultry show this winter.

Mr. Warren says that good poultry and plenty of it will keep the home fires burning through close times better than any other one thing that the farmers can invest in on the Plains.

Mr. Warren knows whereof he speaks, as his knowledge of the fact comes through pees-taking experience and he knows that his fine flock of Rhode Island Reds have been his main stay during the time he has been breaking out and otherwise improving his now productive farm four miles west of town.

He says poultry is easily raised in this country and that they pay beyond any possibility of a doubt. It is one of the means by which a new settler can begin to receive an income within a few weeks after his arrival if he so desires and with a modest amount of effort may keep it coming indefinitely.

In his opinion there is no better way of promoting and increasing the interest in good poultry than by means of a community poultry show and the writer of this article most heartily joins him in that opinion.

If the writer remembers correctly our poultry show last year was held on the last Friday and Saturday in January. That may be little late in the season, but using that same date again, there will be time enough, if we get busy, to arrange for a splendid show again this year.

The writer suggests that every one interested in such an event shall meet in Friona at 2:00 p. m., Saturday, November 30, to appoint committees and make definite arrangements for the show.

BAKERS RETURN

Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Baker returned to their farm home northeast of town from their trip to their former home in Southern Illinois, last week.

Mr. Baker says he had a most enjoyable time mingling with relatives and former friends and neighbors and that they had a very pleasant trip. The weather being mild and the roads mostly in good condition, but the more he sees of that country the more he loves the Plains of the Panhandle land.

He visited in Johnson and Union counties and says that the farmers are having a hard time getting by on their farms and that many farmers have been obliged to let their farm loans lapse for lack of funds to meet their payments and that the government is unable to get bids on these loans for the amount of the unpaid payments. He is a staunch booster for the Plains country.

TRUCK BURNED

Tuesday morning about six o'clock, while it was yet dark, while V. E. Hart was on his way to Amarillo his truck caught fire about a mile from his home. The fuel line parted just over the hot exhaust pipe and the escaping gasoline soon burst into flame, which soon enveloped the front end of the truck, while the continued flow of gasoline made any effort to extinguish the fire utterly futile.

When the fuel for the flames was exhausted, it was found that the cab of the truck had been burned away and the windshield glass was mangled.

Mr. Hart succeeded in rolling the truck back from the pool of gasoline which had formed on the ground beneath it and thus saved the tires from burning.

The trailer on which he carries freight and a considerable amount of freight which it contained were undamaged, but it is thought the motor will be a total loss. Mr. Hart has secured a truck from Trullitt & Landrum in which he made his scheduled trip to Amarillo and return.

"THAT HAPPENS, SOME TIMES"

Capt. Myles Standish of Plymouth

Capt. Myles Standish

Standish's Grave, South Duxbury, Mass.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THANKSGIVING approaches, and as our thoughts turn to the Pilgrim Fathers, none is more worthy of remembrance than Capt. Myles Standish. For he was the first military commander of our country and the greatest example of protection and preparedness that ever existed. The compact which he and his associates signed on board the Mayflower was the foundation of our form of government. The law-abiding, God-fearing Pilgrims could not have existed without the strong arm of Capt. Myles Standish.

Such was the tribute paid to him recently by Major Myrick, captain of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston, in dedicating a simple boulder in Duxbury, Mass., which marks the site of Myles Standish's home. Associated with him in dedicating the memorial and decorating the grave of the Pilgrim captain nearby were Myles Standish, eighth lineal descendant of the colonial leader, Winthrop Winslow, a direct descendant of Captain Winslow, of the Pilgrims, and more than a hundred members of the artillery company.

The Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston was an offspring of the Honorable Artillery Company of London, organized in England in 1537. It was founded in New England in 1638 by Robert Keyne, who had previously been a member of the London company. The only time in its history in which it engaged in war as a unit was in 1645, when it joined Myles Standish and his company in a campaign against the Indians, and today it is the only link which exists between the present United States army and the first colonial company which defended this country from the first Indian attacks.

It is probable that most Americans, when they think of Capt. Myles Standish at all, think of him in terms of Longfellow's famous poem, which is unfortunate, for as a recent writer has said: "The poet Longfellow has set an example of inaccuracy in dealing with our Pilgrim ancestors, which has been widely followed." Among those inaccuracies are first of all the spelling of his name, which was "Myles" and not "Miles," as Longfellow had it, and calling him a "Puritan leader." There was a difference between the "Separatists," who called themselves "Pilgrims" and who founded the colony at Plymouth in 1620, and the "Puritans" who founded the Massachusetts Bay colony in 1630. More than that, Standish was not a member of the Separatist faith, but he was "a dissenter from the dissenters." But the principal mistake about the captain which the poet has given us is in his having Standish use young John Alden as his mouthpiece in wooing Priscilla Mullins. "There is not a scintilla of evidence that the fearless captain, who was small of stature and red-headed, but every inch a soldier, had any desire to win the affections of Priscilla Mullins," says the writer previously quoted. "It seems too bad that so brave and unselfish a man as Standish was should now be regarded before his descendants as a rejected suitor. He deserves a better fate."

There seems to be considerable mystery about the ancestry, religion and early life of Myles Standish. It is believed that he was born about 1584, the son of the Standish family of Duxbury hall in Lancashire, England. The name is an ancient one and Froissart, describing the meeting between King Richard II and the rebel, Wat Tyler, at Smithfield in 1381, tells how the latter was killed by a "squire of the kynge called John Standysse," who was knighted for this act. This furnishes some historical basis for the words put in Myles Standish's mouth by Longfellow that "One of my ancestors ran his sword through the heart of Wat Tyler."

Standish Monument on Captain's Hill, Duxbury, Mass.

The association of the name of Duxbury with that of Standish is based upon authenticated copies of deeds of the Fourteenth century which show that Ralph de Dokesbury made over his Lancashire estates to his lawyer, Ralph Standish, who took up the mortgages and thereby dispossessed the Dokesbury or Duxbury family. It is significant that one of the later Pilgrim settlements, which became the home of Myles Standish, was named Duxbury. Within the last year the sale of Duxbury hall near Chorley, Lancashire, recalled the fact that in 1846 descendants of Myles Standish in this country subscribed a large amount of money and sent an expert to trade the claim of their ancestor to this estate, of which it has been asserted, he was unjustly deprived when he emigrated from England to America.

In his youth Myles Standish entered the English army and served in the wars on the continent, thus furnishing the authority for Longfellow's having him tell about "the sword of Damascus I fought with in Flanders" and the breastplate which once saved his life from a bullet "fired point-blank at my heart by a Spanish arcabucero." Just how Standish came to join the Pilgrims is not known. He apparently was serving in the Netherlands when the Separatists went there from England, and one historian asserts that the Merchant Adventurers, who financed the Pilgrim emigration to America, expecting them to settle in the region of Virginia, sent Standish as their salaried servant to defend them and teach them to defend themselves. At any rate, Standish joined the Pilgrims at Leyden and sailed with them from Plymouth, England, in the Mayflower on September 16, 1620.

Myles Standish was one of the signers of the Mayflower Compact on November 11, 1620, for the government of the proposed colony, but his military career did not begin until November 21, when the Mayflower was anchored in Cape Cod bay, and the captain with 15 men went ashore. "When they had marched about the space of a mile by the sea side, they espied 5 or 6 persons with a dogg coming towards them, who were salvages." But the Indians "rane up into the woods" and that night Standish and his men camped on the shore "& set out their sentinels." On November 25, sixteen armed men, "everyone his Musket, Sword and Corset, Under the command of Captain Myles Standish," were sent ashore for a second exploration. They marched through what is now Provincetown, where they saw several Indians, followed their tracks about ten miles and spent the night in the woods. Three more expeditions were sent out later, and on the third near Nauskeket they were surprised by the Indians upon whom Standish fired, but the skirmish was slight.

In February, 1621, Standish was officially made military captain. During that first terrible winter when disease wiped out half of the colony, among them his wife, Rose Standish, who died on January 21, it was to the ministrations of this fiery little fighting man and the gentle Elder Brewster that many of the survivors owed their lives. But he was to prove his worth to the colony in many other ways, and to justify the statement that the "Pilgrims could not have existed without the strong arm of Capt. Myles Standish."

In 1622 the planting of a new settlement at Weymouth angered the Massachusetts Indians, who formed a plot to destroy not only these Englishmen but the members of the Plymouth colony as well. The plot was betrayed by Massasoit and Standish with a force of only eight men marched to the relief of the settlement at Weymouth. Standish enticed the hostile chiefs, Pecksuot and Wituwamat, and a half-brother of the latter into a room where the Indians were killed after a desperate fight, marking the first shedding of Indian blood by the Pilgrims. A general battle with the Indians followed but Standish and his men routed the savages. The news of his battle spread terror among the Indians, and as a warning against further depredations, the head of Wituwamat was cut off and exposed on a pole in Plymouth.

In 1625 Standish led an unsuccessful expedition against the French who had driven a party of Plymouth men away from Penobscot, Maine. In addition to being the military leader of every exploit of importance in the colony, Standish's counsel was often required in civil affairs. For many years he was treasurer of the colony, and in 1625, when the colony was in trouble with its partners, the Merchant Adventurers, Standish was sent to England to seek relief, bearing a letter from Governor Bradford to the council of New England urging their intervention in behalf of the Pilgrims. On account of the plague in London, however, Standish could accomplish nothing.

After the death of his wife, Rose, the captain married her younger sister, Barbara, and to them were born four sons, Alexander, Myles, Josias and Charles, and a daughter, Lora. In 1632 Standish made his home at Duxbury on Captain's hill. There he died on October 3, 1656. Today a tall monument stands on Captain's hill. On top of it is the statue of a military figure, looking eastward. Its right hand, holding the charter of the colony, is extended toward Plymouth, its left rests upon a sheathed sword. It is a fitting memorial to Capt. Myles Standish, the first military commander of our country and the protector and savior of the Pilgrim Fathers.

crossier, and the name "la crosse" was suggested. As played by the Indians, lacrosse was almost a part of their religion. Days of fasting preceded the games played by two teams of rival tribes, and the players subjected themselves to tortures of the severest kind, inflicted by the medicine men.

SALLY, THE SCRUB WOMAN MODEL

(© by D. J. Walsh)

IN HER well made dark blue suit and small, jammed-down hat, with just the right amount of hair pointing out and her cheeks showing a vivid splash of pink, Sally Field made an enticing picture—enticing enough to cause more than one male head to turn for a lingering glance.

A girl with less courage and ambition than Sally would have given up long ago, but she had infinite faith in her ability to become a successful illustrator. She studied at the art school when there was money enough and worked as a model of sorts for other illustrators when her funds were low. Engrossed in her thoughts, she headed up the avenue. Some one called her name and she turned to see Sara Childer, the only girl from her old crowd who felt any sympathy with her ambitions.

"Hello, Sally! Whither bound at such a gallop?"

"I'm on my way to Paul Westfield's studios to pry him loose from a job."

"My dear! Not Paul Westfield? Why, I've heard dozens of people say that he is the hardest man in the city to work for. Have you ever seen him?"

"No, I haven't but I mean to today, if I have to pretend I'm the leaman to get in."

"Sally, Sally, there's no one like you!" laughed Sara. "Goodby, dear girl, and the best of luck."

At the viaduct Sally stopped, pretending to look down, but in reality poking desperately at a cinder that had lodged in her eye. A pleasantly impersonal voice made her turn, the injured eye swimming in tears.

"Can't I be of assistance? My friends call me the best amateur cinder-remover in town."

"Oh, if you could do something I should be very grateful." Even in her one-eyed state Sally could see that he was young and far from unpleasant to look at.

A moment of tense silence, a deft twist with the corner of a white handkerchief, and the stranger announced triumphantly that that particular lump of coal would bother her no more.

She thanked him and turned quickly, giving him no time to make social advances, but he followed determinedly at her side.

"I say," he pleaded, "what's your hurry? Couldn't we walk along together?"

In a panic she turned on him, saying sharply:

"I suppose you strike up acquaintances with girls every day by making yourself an indispensable hero. I consider a man who makes himself annoying no better than an ordinary bum." Before he could utter a protest she flashed into an office building.

At five minutes to four Sally mounted the steps leading to a spacious reception room, her shoulders carried well back, her chin tilted at its most charming angle.

"You have an appointment with Mr. Westfield?" interrogated the girl behind the great carved desk.

"No," stated Sally frankly, "but there is no reason why he should not see me. I shan't take more than five minutes of his time if he thinks I won't do."

"I am sorry, but Mr. Westfield has made it a rule never to see any one without an appointment."

Sally went out, her steps lagging, her head bent in seeming dejection. Shortly after four o'clock, Paul Westfield threw down his brush to rumple his thick blond hair with paint-stained fingers.

"Mary," he called to the girl at the desk, "come here a minute, please. I want you to take a good look at me. Do I look like a common bum to you?"

"Why, no sir, you don't. You look just as usual."

Mary went out, wondering what had come over her employer, who was invariably even tempered.

"Who's there?" he shouted in answer to a knock at the back entrance of the studio.

The door opened slowly, as though only by the greatest effort could it be moved at all, and there appeared a stooped, shaggy old figure, her face half hidden in a peasant shawl, in her hand a bucket and scrub brush.

"Meester Westfield?" she quavered. "My seester, she too seek to work. I take her place."

"Very well," he nodded indifferently. The old woman—she looked all of seventy in her dirty sweater and voluminous skirts—tottered slowly across the room to fill her pail. All during the cleaning-up process she talked in a high, querulous voice that drove the already disgruntled illustrator almost to distraction.

"My good woman, I'm sorry, but you'll have to stop that talking. I've had a hard day, and I must have quiet."

Out of the sudden quietness his outburst had created, he heard a quiet voice behind him say:

"Mr. Westfield, I should like so much to work for you. Won't you give me a chance?"

He wheeled about, upsetting the vase at his elbow, to stare at Sally, over whose face a mixture of mirth and fright were struggling for mastery.

"The girl with the cinder in her eye," he stammered. "But how in the deuce did you get in? I've been right here all the time."

"I am the scrub woman," she quavered, slumping down, "my seester, she seek. I work for her."

"Well, I'll be—!" He stopped short to stare at her in undisguised admiration.

"But where did you pick up this crazy outfit," touching the sweater.

"Oh," Sally explained calmly, "I convinced an old woman in the next block that she wanted to take a nap while I transacted some important business. I'll have to get back or she's liable to try to get into my suit. Don't you think," and there was real fatigue and anxiety in her voice, "I could be of use to you?"

He hesitated, regarding her out of eyes almost closed with laughter. "Surely a nice girl like you wouldn't be safe working for a common bum!"

Her smile flashed out, but she managed to say gravely enough, "I'll do my best to reform you."

Modern Farmer Usually Well Abreast of Times

A Chicago correspondent makes the discovery on his part that the farmer is not the "hick" he is sometimes represented to be, the subject of a press dispatch, in which he states that the coming of the telephone, radio, good roads, automobiles and long distance travel through every section of the country, has brought with it a great change in the farmer, and he can no longer be told by his dress and manners.

The fact is that the representation of the farmer as made in cartoon and story has always been very far from the facts. There are elements in all classes of people that are backward, and the fact that they are so is manifested by them wherever they go, but one does not have to go to the rural sections of the state to find the sort. In fact the proportion is rather lower among the farmers than among people of other occupations.

Newspapers, books, magazines and educational means generally are at the hands of the people who live on the farms, just as they are in the reach of the residents of the cities and towns, and because the farm residents are not so much distracted by the lighter forms of diversion as city people, they make fuller and better use of these facilities, and, man for man, are undoubtedly better informed as to the things worth knowing than their city cousins. And as to the conventions of good society, they suffer not at all in comparison with people from the cities. The farmer does not wear a Prince Albert coat and a high hat when he works in his fields, to be sure, but such things are not seen in the shops and stores of the cities either.—Columbus Dispatch.

Pemmican Staple Food of Northern Travelers

Pemmican, also spelled pemican, is the name of a food preparation once largely used in the northern part of Canada, and made by cutting the meat of the caribou into thin slices, drying the latter in the sun, or over the smoke of a slow fire, pounding them fine between stones, and incorporating the material with one-third part of melted fat. To this mixture is sometimes added dried fruit, such as choke or June berries. The whole is then compressed into skin bags, in which, if kept dry, it may be preserved for four or five years. The traders, and especially the large fur companies, made a superior kind of pemmican, the meat and fat used being of first-class quality and wholesome dried fruit being added. To the voyageurs and traders of a century and a half ago pemmican was what canned meat and canned fish are to travelers today who go beyond the frontiers of settlement.

The Farmer's Seeds

The playground is the Farmer's field, and half the players are Seeds. They crouch upon the ground at equal distances from each other, and await the Crows (these are the rest of the players).

The Crows approach in single file, with a strutting walk (all of you must have seen crows strutting in the fields). The Seeds are upon all fours, and the Crows have to thread their way in and out of the row.

Suddenly one of the Crows makes a grab at one of the players upon all fours. Naturally these players must be on the alert, although they do not appear so; and the instant the grab is made the Seed must leap to his feet, or dodge to avoid the Crow's touch. If he is not sufficiently quick, he must take his place at the end of the procession of Crows.

On the other hand, if he escapes being touched he may grab the Crow in his turn, and the Crow takes its place at one end of the row of seeds.

When there are a lot of players it is funny to see them strutting in and out of the row of Seeds, because they must strut very slowly.

"The Taming of the Shrew"

This is almost the only one of the Shakespearean comedies that has a downright moral, and yet it is the merriest of them all. It is rapid in action, full of bustle and animation and is replete of the most racy and delicate humor.

"The character of Petruchio," says Hazlett, "is one that most husbands ought to study, unless the very audacity of his attempt (to tame his self-willed mate) might alarm them more than his success would encourage them."

Date of Christ's Birth Not Positively Known

It is generally assumed that we are living in the year 1929, but the year may really be 1933, or even later.

This fact is indicated by a record of an eclipse of the moon. Bible history says that Christ was born during the reign of Herod the Great. But Herod died in the spring of 4 B. C., the exact date being fixed by a lunar eclipse which took place the night before his death.

Obviously, therefore, Jesus might have been born not later than 4 B. C., and possibly earlier.

The church has no definite knowledge of the date of Christ's birth. It fixed the year, month and day of the month arbitrarily.

Astronomers are able to calculate the dates of past eclipses as accurately as those of the future, and so have determined the very day and hour of the eclipse that ushered Herod the Great out of this life.—London Mail.

This Little Girl Got Well Quick

"Just after her third birthday, my little daughter, Connie, had a serious attack of intestinal flu," says Mrs. H. W. Turnage, 217 Cadwalder St., San Antonio, Texas. "It left her very weak and pale. Her bowels wouldn't act right, she had no appetite and nothing agreed with her."

"Our physician told us to give her some California Fig Syrup. It made her pick up right away, and now she is as robust and happy as any child in our neighborhood. I give California Fig Syrup full credit for her wonderful condition. It is a great thing for children."

Children like the rich, fruity taste of California Fig Syrup, and you can give it to them as often as they need it, because it is purely vegetable. For over 50 years leading physicians have recommended it, and its overwhelming sales record of over four million bottles a year shows it gives satisfaction. Nothing compares with it as a gentle but certain laxative, and it goes further than this. It regulates the stomach and bowels and gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act normally, of their own accord.

There are many imitations of California Fig Syrup, so look for the name "California" on the carton to be sure you get the genuine.

Major Cavanaugh to Quit Fordham Team

Those who saw that big Fordham team crush a vaunted New York university outfit into the Polo ground's sod hardly expected the announcement made by the coach who taught these Maroon players the game of football. Major Frank Cavanaugh will make this his last year at Fordham, he said, with the direct comment on his action, "I don't want to die here."

This can mean only one of two things. Either the major wants to teach his method of winning football games to another outfit for a change, or he wants to give up coaching. That it cannot mean the latter was signified by the major's statement that he is not ready to give up football. And when a coach says that, there is only one guess to make—he'll be out giving the boys lessons when next season comes round.

Just where he'll be doing this, no one has any idea, and the major least of all. He finds that the eye trouble which affected him last year is definitely cured and he feels fit as a fiddle. So the football hot-stove league can now pick a team which needs the major.

Football cost Cornell $76,981.61 with receipts of $222,171.33, a net profit of $145,189.72. All other sports showed a loss as follows: Baseball, $11,979.29; track, $31,919.58; crew, $28,907.21; basket ball, $5,583.54; wrestling, $3,100.14; soccer, $2,525.02; hockey, $1,817.29; lacrosse, $3,143.96; tennis, $3,328.31; fencing, $2,517.20.

The profit from football thus paid for the losses in the other sports with a balance of $50,212.58 to spare.

Temporary Repairs Made on Broken Tire Chains

If a driver should be so unfortunate as to break so many cross pieces of the tire chains that they will not remain in place around the wheel, the chains should be removed and wrapped around the tires as one would wrap a rope. This, of course, applies only when the car is stuck in the snow or in deep mud, for after getting under way, the cumbersome "lump" should be removed. Owners should get into the habit of repairing tire chains, the work requiring little effort. The garage makes a charge of 10 cents, even for one new link, which the owner can install in less than one minute with a chain tool which most supply stores offer, or which can be had from the chain manufacturer.

FAMILY DOCTOR LEARNED THIS ABOUT CONSTIPATION

Dr. Caldwell loved people. His years of practice convinced him many were ruining their health by careless selection of laxatives. He determined to write a harmless prescription which would get at the cause of constipation, and correct it.

Today, the prescription he wrote in 1885 is the world's most popular laxative! He prescribed a mixture of herbs and other pure ingredients now known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, in thousands of cases where bad breath, coated tongue, gas, headaches, biliousness and lack of appetite or energy showed the bowels of men, women and children were sluggish. It proved successful in even the most obstinate cases; old folks liked it for it never gripes; children liked its pleasant taste. All drugstores today have Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in bottles.

MOTOR QUIZ
How Many Can You Answer?

Q. Does an oil filter remove crankcase dilution?
Ans. No. Its function is to remove dirt and foreign matter from the oil, which it does efficiently for 10,000 miles, after which the filtering unit must be renewed. This makes the filter as good as new again.

Q. Does all the oil pass through the filter?
Ans. Yes. In some filters the oil is completely filtered from four to eight times an hour.

Q. What causes discoloration of the oil even though the car is equipped with an oil filter and is it harmful?
Ans. Extremely small particles of carbon in the oil. No, it is not harmful.

Q. Is an oil filter bag likely to rupture?
Ans. No. Engineering tests have proved that it is able to withstand a pressure of 150 pounds to the square inch which is much higher than the pressure attained in the engine.

Fix Automobile for Hard Winter Driving

The motorist can take advantage of the pleasant fall weather to check over his car or have his service station do so in order that it will be in proper condition to withstand the rigors of winter driving.

The following recommendations on putting the car in shape for winter are gleaned from an engineering bulletin:

The first step in the procedure is to clean the chassis, engine and body as dirt can hide many defects.

Tighten all bolts and nuts.
Check front wheels for proper alignment; remove caps and grease; adjust wheel bearings and replace hub caps.

Check steering gear for proper adjustment.

Drain the old oil from the transmission and differential and pour into both about a quart of kerosene. At the same time put in the radiator a few handfuls of sea soda and then drive the car two or three miles. The kerosene should then be drained from the transmission and differential and water drained from the radiator. A winter grade lubricant recommended by the car manufacturer should then be put in the transmission and differential.

Inspect the rubber hose connections, replacing if necessary, after which the radiator should be filled with clean water; and at the first appearance of cold weather an anti-freeze solution should be added.

Next, drain oil from the engine; flush crankcase and put in a winter grade oil.

If the oil filter has been in use for 10,000 miles install a new cartridge.

Inspect wiring and clean contacts; oil generator and starting motor and clean the armatures and brushes; set generator charging rate ahead for winter driving; check breaker points for proper spacing; replace spark plugs if used more than 10,000 miles; if used less than this, clean them; adjust gaps; clean battery with ammonia water solution; tighten terminals and grease with vaseline; inspect water level and if gravity reading is low, recharge.

Oil and grease all parts that require it.
Adjust brakes and relines if necessary.

Capt. Myles Standish of Plymouth

Capt. Myles Standish

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THANKSGIVING approaches, and as our thoughts turn to the Pilgrim Fathers, none is more worthy of remembrance than Capt. Myles Standish. For he was "the first military commander of our country and the greatest example of protection and preparedness that ever existed. The compact which he and his associates signed on board the Mayflower was the foundation of our form of government. The law-abiding, God-fearing Pilgrims could not have existed without the strong arm of Capt. Myles Standish."

Such was the tribute paid to him recently by Major Myrick, captain of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston, in dedicating a simple boulder in Duxbury, Mass., which marks the site of Myles Standish's home. Associated with him in dedicating the memorial and decorating the grave of the Pilgrim captain nearby were Myles Standish, eighth lineal descendant of the colonial leader, Winthrop Winslow, a direct descendant of Captain Winslow, of the Pilgrims, and more than a hundred members of the artillery company.

The Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston was an offspring of the Honorable Artillery Company of London, organized in England in 1537. It was founded in New England in 1638 by Robert Keayne, who had previously been a member of the London company. The only time in its history in which it engaged in war as a unit was in 1645, when it joined Myles Standish and his company in a campaign against the Indians, and today it is the only link which exists between the present United States army and the first colonial company which defended this country from the first Indian attacks.

It is probable that most Americans, when they think of Capt. Myles Standish at all, think of him in terms of Longfellow's famous poem, which is unfortunate for, as a recent writer has said, "The poet Longfellow has set an example of inaccuracy in dealing with our Pilgrim ancestors, which has been widely followed." Among those inaccuracies are first of all the spelling of his name, which was "Miles" and not "Myles," as Longfellow had it, and calling him a "Puritan leader." There was a difference between the "Separatists," who called themselves "Pilgrims" and who founded the colony at Plymouth in 1620, and the "Puritans" who founded the Massachusetts Bay colony in 1630. More than that, Standish was not a member of the Separatist faith, but he was "a dissenter from the dissenters." But the principal mistaken idea about the captain which the poet has given us is in his having Standish use young John Alden as his mouthpiece in wooing Priscilla Mullins. "There is not a scintilla of evidence that the fearless captain, who was small of stature and red-headed, but every inch a soldier, had any desire to win the affections of Priscilla Mullins," says the writer previously quoted. "It seems too bad that so brave and unselfish a man as Standish should now be paraded before his descendants as a rejected suitor. He deserves a better fate."

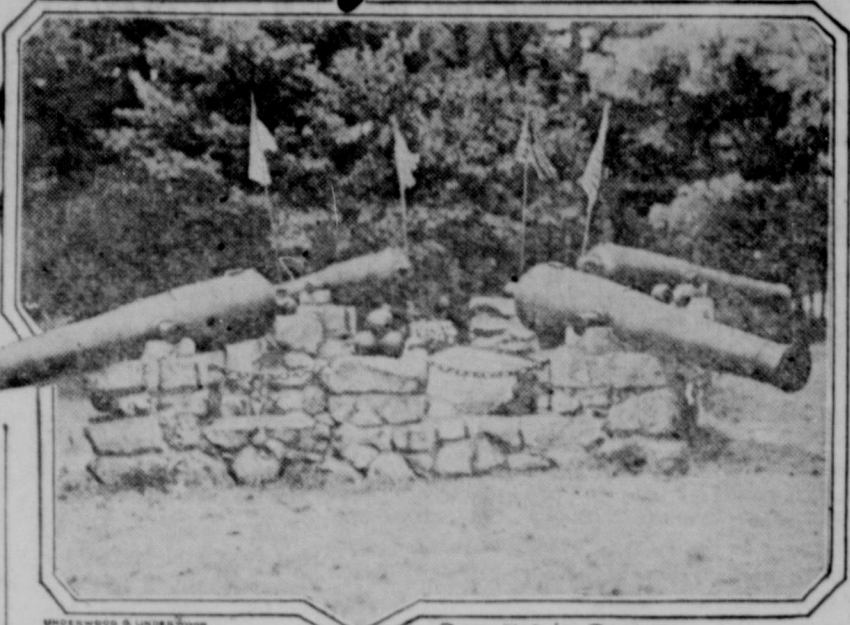

There seems to be considerable mystery about the ancestry, religion and early life of Myles Standish. It is believed that he was born about 1584, the scion of the Standish family of Duxbury hall in Lancashire, England. The name is an ancient one and Froissart, describing the meeting between King Richard II and the rebel, Wat Tyler, at Smithfield in 1381, tells how the latter was killed by a "squire of the kinges called John Standyshe," who was knighted for this act. This furnishes some historical basis for the words put in Myles Standish's mouth by Longfellow that "One of my ancestors ran his sword through the heart of Wat Tyler."

In his youth Myles Standish entered the English army and served in the wars on the continent, thus furnishing the authority for Longfellow's having him tell about "the sword of Damascus I fought with in Flanders" and the breastplate which once saved his life from a bullet "fired point-blank at my heart by a Spanish arquebuser." Just how Standish came to join the Pilgrims is not known. He apparently was serving in the Netherlands when the Separatists went there from England, and one historian asserts that the Merchant Adventurers, who financed the Pilgrim migration to America, expecting them to settle in the region of Virginia, sent Standish as their salaried servant to defend them and teach them to defend themselves. At any rate, Standish joined the Pilgrims at Leyden and sailed with them from Plymouth, England, in the Mayflower on September 16, 1620.

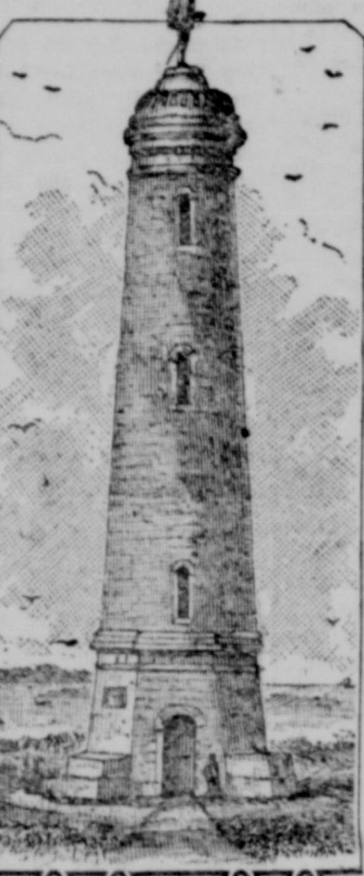

Origin of Lacrosse

The game of lacrosse can trace its origin to the Algonquin Indians, and its name was first uttered by the Frenchman, Charlevoix, according to Donald W. White, writing in the Sportsman, Boston.

When the explorer was ascending the St. Lawrence he saw the game played by a tribe of Indians near Quebec. The stick used in the game appears to him to be like a bishop's

Standish's Grave, South Duxbury, Mass.

Standish Monument on Captain's Hill, Duxbury, Mass.

The association of the name of Duxbury with that of Standish is based upon authenticated copies of deeds of the fourteenth century which show that Ralph de Dokesbury made over his Lancashire estates to his lawyer, Ralph Standish, who took up the mortgage and thereby dispossessed the Dokesbury or Duxbury family. It is significant that one of the later Pilgrim settlements, which became the home of Myles Standish, was named Duxbury. Within the last year the site of Duxbury hall near Chorley, Lancashire, recalled the fact that in 1846 descendants of Myles Standish in this country subscribed a large amount of money and sent an expert to trade the claim of their ancestor to this estate, of which it has been asserted, he was unjustly deprived when he emigrated from England to America.

In his youth Myles Standish entered the English army and served in the wars on the continent, thus furnishing the authority for Longfellow's having him tell about "the sword of Damascus I fought with in Flanders" and the breastplate which once saved his life from a bullet "fired point-blank at my heart by a Spanish arquebuser." Just how Standish came to join the Pilgrims is not known. He apparently was serving in the Netherlands when the Separatists went there from England, and one historian asserts that the Merchant Adventurers, who financed the Pilgrim migration to America, expecting them to settle in the region of Virginia, sent Standish as their salaried servant to defend them and teach them to defend themselves. At any rate, Standish joined the Pilgrims at Leyden and sailed with them from Plymouth, England, in the Mayflower on September 16, 1620.

Myles Standish was one of the signers of the Mayflower Compact on November 11, 1620, for the government of the proposed colony, but his military career did not begin until November 21, when the Mayflower was anchored in Cape Cod bay, and the captain with 15 men went ashore. "When they had marched about the space of crosser, and the name "la croisse" was suggested.

As played by the Indians, lacrosse was almost a part of their religion. Days of fasting preceded the games played by two teams of rival tribes, and the players subjected themselves to tortures of the severest kind, inflicted by the medicine men.

Nation's Sweet Tooth

a mile by the sea side, they espied 5, or 6, persons with a dog coming towards them, who were salvages." But the Indians "rane up into the woods" and that night Standish and his men camped on the shore "and set out their sentinels." On November 25, sixteen armed men, "everyone his Musketeer, Sword and Corset. Under the command of Captaine Myles Standish," were sent ashore for a second exploration. They marched through what is now Provincetown, where they saw several Indians, followed their tracks about ten miles and spent the night in the woods. Three more expeditions were sent out later, and on the third near Nanskeket they were surprised by the Indians upon whom Standish fired, but the skirmish was slight.

In February, 1621, Standish was officially made military captain. During that first terrible winter when disease wiped out half of the colony, among them his wife, Rose Standish, who died on January 21, it was to the ministrations of this fiery little fighting man and the gentle Elder Brewster that many of the survivors owed their lives. But he was to prove his worth to the colony in many other ways, and to justify the statement that the "Pilgrims could not have existed without the strong arm of Capt. Myles Standish."

In 1622 the planting of a new settlement at Weymouth angered the Massachusetts Indians, who formed a plot to destroy not only these Englishmen but the members of the Plymouth colony as well. The plot was betrayed by Massasoit and Standish with a force of only eight men marched to the relief of the settlement at Weymouth. Standish enticed the hostile chiefs, Pecksnot and Wituwamat, and a half-brother of the latter into a room where the Indians were killed after a desperate fight, marking the first shedding of Indian blood by the Pilgrims. A general battle with the Indians followed but Standish and his men routed the savages. The news of his battle spread terror among the Indians, and as a warning against further depredations, the head of Wituwamat was cut off and exposed on a pole in Plymouth.

In 1625 Standish led an unsuccessful expedition against the French who had driven a party of Plymouth men away from Penobscot, Maine. In addition to being the military leader of every exploit of importance in the colony, Standish's counsel was often required in civil affairs. For many years he was treasurer of the colony, and in 1625, when the colony was in trouble with its partners, the Merchant Adventurers, Standish was sent to England to seek relief, bearing a letter from Governor Bradford to the council of New England urging their intervention in behalf of the Pilgrims. On account of the plague in London, however, Standish could accomplish nothing.

After the death of his wife, Rose, the captain married her younger sister, Barbara, and to them were born four sons, Alexander, Myles, Josias and Charles, and a daughter, Lora. In 1632 Standish made his home at Duxbury on Captain's Hill. There he died on October 3, 1652. Today a tall monument stands on Captain's Hill. On top of it is the statue of a military figure, looking eastward. Its right hand, holding the charter of the colony, is extended toward Plymouth. Its left rests upon a sheathed sword. It is a fitting memorial to Capt. Myles Standish, the first military commander of our country and the protector and savior of the Pilgrim Fathers.

SALLY, THE SCRUB WOMAN MODEL

IN HER well made dark blue suit and small, jammed-down hat, with just the right amount of hair poking out and her cheeks showing a vivid splash of pink, Sally Field made an enticing picture—enticing enough to cause more than one male head to turn for a lingering glance.

A girl with less courage and ambition than Sally would have given up long ago, but she had infinite faith in her ability to become a successful illustrator. She studied at the art school when there was money enough and worked as a model of sorts for other illustrators when her funds were low. Engrossed in her thoughts, she headed up the avenue. Some one called her name and she turned to see Sara Childer, the only girl from her old crowd who felt any sympathy with her ambitions.

"Hello, Sally! Whither bound at such a gait?"

"I'm on my way to Paul Westfield's studios to pry him loose from a job." "My dear! Not Paul Westfield? Why, I've heard dozens of people say that he is the hardest man in the city to work for. Have you ever seen him?" "No, I haven't but I mean to today. If I have to pretend I'm the feeman to get in."

"Sally, Sally, there's no one like you!" laughed Sara. "Goodby, dear girl, and the best of luck."

At the viaduct Sally stopped, pretending to look down, but in reality poking desperately at a cinder that had lodged in her eye. A pleasantly impersonal voice made her turn, the injured eye swimming in tears. "Can't I be of assistance? My friends call me the best amateur cinder-remover in town."

"Oh, if you could do something I should be very grateful." Even in her one-eyed state Sally could see that he was young and far from displeasing to look at.

A moment of tense silence, a deft twist with the corner of a white handkerchief, and the stranger announced triumphantly that that particular lump of coal would bother her no more.

She thanked him and turned quickly, giving him no time to make social advances, but he followed determinedly at her side.

"I say," he pleaded, "what's your hurry? Couldn't we walk along together?"

In a panic she turned on him, saying sharply:

"I suppose you strike up acquaintances with girls every day by making yourself an indispensable hero. I consider a man who makes himself annoying no better than an ordinary bum." Before he could utter a protest she flashed into an office building.

At five minutes to four Sally mounted the steps leading to a spacious reception room, her shoulders carried well back, her chin tilted at its most charming angle.

"You have an appointment with Mr. Westfield?" interrogated the girl behind the great carved desk.

"No," stated Sally frankly, "but there is no reason why he should not see me. I shan't take more than five minutes of his time if he thinks I won't do."

"I am sorry, but Mr. Westfield has made it a rule never to see any one without an appointment." Sally went out, her steps lagging, her head bent in seeming dejection. Shortly after four o'clock, Paul Westfield threw down his brush to rumple his thick blond hair with paint-stained fingers.

"Mary," he called to the girl at the desk, "come here a minute, please. I want you to take a good look at me. Do I look like a common bum to you?" "Why, no, sir, you don't. You look just as usual." Mary went out, wondering what had come over her employer, who was invariably even tempered.

"Well, I'll be— I!" He stopped short to stare at her in undisguised admiration.

"But where did you pick up this crazy outfit," touching the sweater.

"Oh," Sally explained calmly, "I convinced an old woman in the next block that she wanted to take a nap while I transacted some important business. I'll have to get back or she's liable to try to get into my suit. Don't you think," and there was real fatigue and anxiety in her voice, "I could be of use to you?"

He hesitated, regarding her out of eyes almost closed with laughter. "Surely a nice girl like you wouldn't be safe working for a common bum!" Her smile flashed out, but she managed to say gravely enough, "I'll do my best to reform you."

Modern Farmer Usually Well Abreast of Times

A Chicago correspondent makes the discovery on his part that the farmer is not the "hick" he is sometimes represented to be, the subject of a press dispatch, in which he states that the coming of the telephone, radio, good roads, automobiles and long distance travel through every section of the country, has brought with it a great change in the farmer, and he can no longer be told by his dress and manners.

The fact is that the representation of the farmer as made in cartoon and story has always been very far from the facts. There are elements in all classes of people that are backward, and the fact that they are so is manifested by them wherever they go, but one does not have to go to the rural sections of the state to find the sort. In fact the proportion is rather lower among the farmers than among people of other occupations.

Newspapers, books, magazines and educational means generally are at the hands of the people who live on the farms, just as they are in the reach of the residents of the cities and towns, and because the farm residents are not so much distracted by the lighter forms of diversion as city people, they make fuller and better use of these facilities, and, man for man, are undoubtedly better informed as to the things worth knowing than their city cousins. And as to the conventions of good society, they suffer not at all in comparison with people from the cities. The farmer does not wear a Prince Albert coat and a high hat when he works in his fields, to be sure, but such things are not seen in the shops and stores of the cities either.—Columbus Dispatch.

Pemmican Staple Food of Northern Travelers

Pemmican, also spelled pemican, is the name of a food preparation once largely used in the northern part of Canada, and made by cutting the meat of the caribou into thin slices, drying the latter in the sun, or over the smoke of a slow fire, pounding them fine between stones, and incorporating the material with one-third part of melted fat. To this mixture is sometimes added dried fruit, such as choke or June berries. The whole is then compressed into skin bags, in which, if kept dry, it may be preserved for four or five years. The traders, and especially the large fur companies, made a superior kind of pemmican, the meat and fat used being of first-class quality and wholesome dried fruit being added. To the voyageurs and traders of a century and a half ago pemmican was what canned meat and canned fish are to travelers today who go beyond the frontiers of settlement.

The Farmer's Seeds

The playground is the Farmer's field, and half the players are Seeds. They crouch upon the ground at equal distances from each other, and await the Crows (these are the rest of the players).

The Crows approach in single file, with a strutting walk (all of you must have seen crows strutting in the fields). The Seeds are upon all fours, and the Crows have to thread their way in and out of the row.

Suddenly one of the Crows makes a grab at one of the players upon all fours. Naturally these players must be on the alert, although they do not appear so; and the instant the grab is made the Seed must leap to his feet, or dodge to avoid the Crow's touch. If he is not sufficiently quick, he must take his place at the end of the procession of Crows.

On the other hand, if he escapes being touched he may grab the Crow in his turn, and the Crow takes its place at one end of the row of seeds.

When there are a lot of players it is funny to see them strutting in and out of the row of Seeds, because they must strut very slowly.

The Taming of the Shrew

This is almost the only one of the Shakespearean comedies that has a downright moral, and yet it is the merriest of them all. It is rapid in action, full of bustle and animation and is redolent of the most racy and delicate humor.

"The character of Petruchio," says Hazlett, "is one that most husbands ought to study, unless the very audacity of his attempt (to tame his self-willed mate) might alarm them more than his success would encourage them."

Date of Christ's Birth Not Positively Known

It is generally assumed that we are living in the year 1929, but the year may really be 1933, or even later.

This fact is indicated by a record of an eclipse of the moon. Bible history says that Christ was born during the reign of Herod the Great. But Herod died in the spring of 4 B. C., the exact date being fixed by a lunar eclipse which took place the night before his death.

Obviously, therefore, Jesus might have been born not later than 4 B. C., and possibly earlier.

The church has no definite knowledge of the date of Christ's birth. It fixed the year, month and day of the month arbitrarily.

Astonomers are able to calculate the dates of past eclipses as accurately as those of the future, and so have determined the very day and hour of the eclipse that ushered Herod the Great out of this life.—London Mail.

This Little Girl Got Well Quick

"Just after her third birthday, my little daughter, Connie, had a serious attack of infantile flu," says Mrs. H. W. Turnage, 217 Cadwalder St., San Antonio, Texas. "It left her very weak and pale. Her bowels wouldn't act right, she had no appetite and nothing agreed with her.

"Our physician told us to give her some California Fig Syrup. It made her pick up right away, and now she is as robust and happy as any child in our neighborhood. I give California Fig Syrup full credit for her wonderful condition. It is a great thing for children."

Children like the rich, fruity taste of California Fig Syrup, and you can give it to them as often as they need it, because it is purely vegetable. For over 50 years leading physicians have recommended it, and its overwhelming sales record of over four million bottles a year shows it gives satisfaction. Nothing compares with it as a gentle but certain laxative, and it goes further than this. It regulates the stomach and bowels and gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act normally, of their own accord.

There are many imitations of California Fig Syrup, so look for the name "California" on the carton to be sure you get the genuine.

Major Cavanaugh to Quit Fordham Team

Those who saw that big Fordham team crush a vaunted New York university outfit into the Polo ground's sod hardly expected the announcement made by the coach who taught these Maroon players the game of football. Major Frank Cavanaugh will make this his last year at Fordham, he said, with the direct comment on his action, "I don't want to die here."

New Game for Jones

Bobby Jones all set to play a set of the new game while keeping in condition for golf. The game is a form of indoor tennis, played with rackets much lighter than those used for tennis. Instead of a ball, however, a cork wrapped tightly in canvas and tipped with white feathers is used.

when a coach says that, there is only one guess to make—he'll be out giving the boys lessons when next season comes round.

Just where he'll be doing this, no one has any idea, and the major least of all. He finds that the eye trouble which affected him last year is definitely cured and he feels fit as a fiddle. So the football hot-stove league can now pick a team which needs the major.

Football alone of Cornell sports returned a profit during the fiscal year ending August 31.

Football cost Cornell $76,981.61 with receipts of $222,171.33, a net profit of $145,189.72. All other sports showed a loss as follows: Baseball, $11,979.29; track, $31,919.58; crew, $28,967.21; basket ball, $5,583.54; wrestling, $3,100.14; soccer, $2,525.62; hockey, $1,817.29; lacrosse, $3,143.96; tennis, $3,328.31; fencing, $2,517.20.

The profit from football thus paid for the losses in the other sports with a balance of $50,212.58 to spare.

Temporary Repairs Made on Broken Tire Chains

If a driver should be so unfortunate as to break so many cross pieces of the tire chains that they will not remain in place around the wheel, the chains should be removed and wrapped around the tires as one would wrap a rope. This, of course, applies only when the car is stuck in the snow or in deep mud, for after getting under way, the cumbersome "jumps" should be removed. Owners should get into the habit of repairing tire chains, the work requiring little effort. The garage makes a charge of 10 cents, even for one new link, which the owner can install in less than one minute with a chain tool which most supply stores offer, or which can be had from the chain manufacturer.

Tiny Golf Course Real Test of One's Skill

Chattanooga boasts one of the shortest golf courses in the world—a layout of 1,000 yards on which only a putter is used.

The course has all the attributes of a full-grown country club layout. It is located in the city park, whose duffers and stars alike are finding trouble aplenty in negotiating it.

The novelty of the putter idea has swept the city's golfers into enthusiasm for its training. They are forced to shoot over concrete bridges, through pipes, around irregularly placed posts, and even through shrubbery.

Fix Automobile for Hard Winter Driving

The motorist can take advantage of the pleasant fall weather to check over his car or have his service station do so in order that it will be in proper condition to withstand the rigors of winter driving.

The following recommendations on putting the car in shape for winter are gleaned from an engineering bulletin:

The first step in the procedure is to clean the chassis, engine and body as dirt can hide many defects.

Tighten all bolts and nuts.

Check front wheels for proper alignment; remove caps and re-grease; adjust wheel bearings and replace hub caps.

Check steering gear for proper adjustment.

Drain the old oil from the transmission and differential and pour into both about a quart of kerosene. At the same time put in the radiator a few handfuls of sal soda and then drive the car two or three miles. The kerosene should then be drained from the transmission and differential and water drained from the radiator. A winter grade lubricant recommended by the car manufacturer should then be put in the transmission and differential.

Inspect the rubber hose connections, replacing if necessary, after which the radiator should be filled with clean water; and at the first appearance of cold weather an anti-freeze solution should be added.

Next, drain oil from the engine; flush crankcase and put in a winter grade oil.

If the oil filter has been in use for 10,000 miles install a new cartridge.

Inspect wiring and clean contacts; oil generator and starting motor and clean the armatures and brushes; set generator charging rate ahead for winter driving; check breaker points for proper spacing; replace spark plugs if used more than 10,000 miles; if used less than this, clean them; adjust gaps; clean battery with ammonia water solution; tighten terminals and grease with vaseline; inspect water level and if gravity reading is low, recharge.

Oil and grease all parts that require it.

Adjust brakes and reline if necessary.

The motorist should also examine

FAMILY DOCTOR LEARNED THIS ABOUT CONSTIPATION

Dr. Caldwell loved people. His years of practice convinced him many were ruining their health by careless selection of laxatives. He determined to write a harmless prescription which would get at the cause of constipation, and correct it.

Today, the prescription he wrote in 1885 is the world's most popular laxative! He prescribed a mixture of herbs and other pure ingredients now known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, in thousands of cases where bad breath, coated tongue, gas, headaches, biliousness and lack of appetite or energy showed the bowels of men, women and children were sluggish. It proved successful in even the most obstinate cases; old folks liked it for it never gripes; children liked its pleasant taste.

All drugstores today have Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in bottles.

COGITATIONS and APHORISMS of JODOK

Some men do not swear! They will not use the word "damn" at all as a cuss word. One of my friends told me he sometimes used the word "damnable," but never uses "damn".

Well, I do not use that word either, but once in a while it uses me to a fare-ye-well to give itself proper expression.

I do not like to swear. I do not swear very much—at least not as much as some men do. I have heard some men swear more while in my presence alone, than I swear altogether, and it is reasonable to suppose they swear as much when not in my presence, so they evidently swear more than I.

Although I do not like to swear nor do I like to hear others swear, yet it gives me infinite satisfaction on certain occasions to say "damn" to my heart's content.

Just a couple of "darns" and "dog-gones" seems to clear up my mental attitude and seems to allow a vast amount of acridity and venom to ooze out of my disposition.

But why do men swear? It is useless and impolite, to say the least. And some men are so impolite as to swear in the presence of ladies or children.

Most folk seem to have a vast amount of human nature in their disposition. Certain events have called to my mind more forcibly

VISITED EAST TEXAS

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Jones and small son and Mrs. O. C. Jones returned Sunday from an extended visit in East Texas with relatives and friends and former neighbors.

On their trip they visited Dallas, Fort Worth, Forney, Gainesville and Paris. On their return home they were accompanied by Mrs. Jones sister, Mrs. Obie Robertson and children, of Forney, who will spend a while here as their guests.

recently the fact that many of us are quite willing that our neighbors shall be obliged to do something for our convenience, but will kick like swimming frogs when requested to do something for a neighbor's convenience and welfare.

The facts stated above were called to my attention by remarks made to members of the City Commission, and it appears that anyone having any misgivings as to the verity of the assertion may be convinced by becoming a member of that august body.

It appears to me to be one of the most peculiar traits to human folks that they will work and vote to place certain of their fellow-men in office to make and execute their ordinances of government and then begin straightway to doubt their wisdom or ability to perform such duties.

They also seem to begin at once to doubt the honesty of their intentions, and to offer excuses and reasons why they should not be expected to abide by the judgement of these same fellowmen, whom they have chosen to attend to these said duties.

I hear many people speak of the lack of conveniences people must suffer, who live in the country or small towns, as though it were almost a calamity. Well, it is too bad.

I am unable to comprehend why it is such a misfortune. Suppose one lives twenty miles from town. One can get in his car and roll in and park at the door of the store in half an hour.

Suppose he wants to buy a pair of shoes. He can drive the 20 miles to Friona, if he lives that far away, and be in the store buying shoes in at least 30 to 40 minutes.

If he lives in Fort Worth or any large city he must put in half an hour hunting a parking place, then walk from one to a dozen blocks to find his store where the shoes may be purchased, requiring perhaps another ten minutes, and he must consider himself fortunate if he is waited on within the next half hour.

Then some seem to think one would surely die should he become sick or get hurt in the country, or a small town, before a doctor or a hospital could be reached in case of sickness. A telephone call or a short drive has the doctor at the bedside within a very few minutes, and in case of an emergency a hospital can be reached from almost any point within 30 to 60 minutes.

Then they talk about the other conveniences of the cities—the paved streets, electric lights, water works, sewers, telephones, close to schools, etc.

Well, I will take Friona for comparison. I like Friona. I like the name as well as the town. It is easy to speak; easy to spell, and it just naturally has a sweet little musical jingle which tickles my ears. As a town it just suits me to a "T-T-T." There are not any bigger towns for its size. It's the "biggest little town in the Panhandle."

Well, now I will get back to my comparison. Friona has electric current for lights and power, furnished by one of the best companies in the land; it has a good telephone system, which is constantly getting better; it will soon have a first class water system, and it is now installing a modern sanitary system, and paved streets are a possibility. As for hospitals, there are two within 35 miles, and a straight, open highway. Our children, who live as much as nine miles in the country, are as close to school as any city children. And that is Friona.

I heard a man say recently that the credit system is a curse to the country and to the people. May be it is, but if true, it seems to be a small minority who are not cursed by it, but I believe the creditor is cursed the worst.

There is no question that has less than two sides, and very few subjects that can not be viewed from more than one viewpoint.

I saw a little poem in last week's issue of the Star which set out one view point of the home town newspaper. Judging by what I have heard the editor say, I think it depicts the view most people take of the Star.

He says he has not one single bump or scar on his head that was put there by an irate reader, but that he receives many verbal posies for the little home town paper. But I have another poem which was given me by a friend, and it surely turns the lights on from another point of view. I am quoting it here just to see if he will print it and the contrast, but believe me it does not apply in Friona. This poem is said to be over 100 years old: "Last evening I was talking with a printer aged and gray, who told me of a dream he had just after Christmas Day. While snoozing in his office the vision came to view; he saw an angel enter, dressed in garments white and new. Said the spirit: 'I'm from heaven, the Lord has sent me down to bring you up to glory; put on your golden crown. Many merchants you've made richer, from few received full pay, while you've grown poor and poorer, your business did decay. So we need you up in glory, for you have labored hard, until your brow is hoary—you have earned a great reward. Then the angel and the printer started for the golden gate. When passing close to hedges the angel whispered 'wait. Here's a nook I wish to show you. It's the hottest place in hell, where the devils who beat the printer in awful torment dwell. The printer saw before him, old patrons by the score; an easy chair and fan he grabbed, and asked for nothing more. He sat and sat and watched them—he saw them sizzle, scorch and burn, and his former debtors saw him which ever way he'd turn. Said the angel: 'Come up higher and the pearly gates we'll see.' But the printer only answered: 'This is heaven enough for me.'"

CALLS ON RED CROSS INCREASE; RESPONSE TO ROLL CALL URGED

Society's Activities Reach Millions Each Year—Chairman Payne Asks Generous Support in Membership.

Greater relief work, service to disabled veterans and their families, public health work and its many other activities caused expenditures of $11,064,000 by the American Red Cross for the year ended June 30, 1929, according to the annual report of the organization.

This work by the Red Cross is supported by the annual Roll Call for members, which is held from Armistice Day to Thanksgiving Day, November 11 to 28.

Directing attention to the heavy expenditures by the Red Cross during the past year, and to the fact that the organization was called upon for assistance in 120 disasters in the United States and its insular possessions, Judge John Barton Payne, the chairman, said:

"The Red Cross is a volunteer society, supported by its membership, and belongs to all of the citizens. While it is a semi-governmental agency in that the President of the United States is its president, and one-third of its governing board are representatives of Government departments, yet it receives no financial support from the Government.

"Funds for our work for war veterans and their families, for carrying on disaster relief, for our varied health activities, the life saving and first aid work and our many other activities, all are derived from the membership fee. The public is asked only once each year—at the Annual Roll Call—to join in this support of the Red Cross."

The Red Cross expended an average of $936,000 per year in the past seven years, in disaster relief work, from its own treasury, statements show. The work for world war veterans also has caused heavy expenditures.

New Crops in Flooded States Bring Prosperity

The introduction of new habits of planting, following the Mississippi Valley flood of 1927, has brought about prosperity to farmers in many of the Mississippi Delta counties, according to Red Cross officials.

Almost every cabin has a fine vegetable garden, whereas cotton formerly grew right to the doorstep, the Red Cross states. The home demonstration and agricultural agents have followed up the project inaugurated by the Red Cross, immediately after the flood of 1927, with very gratifying success. There is a large acreage in corn, whereas formerly cotton was the one crop. Alfalfa has gained a firm foothold, and the growing of this crop is bringing good financial returns from the three or four cuttings each year. Live stock also is showing improvement due to these new crops.

Everything considered, the Delta sections which escaped a backwater problem in the spring of 1929, are in a prosperous condition, as a result of the follow-up and rehabilitation by the American Red Cross.

Labor Lead Urges Support of Red Cross

"Invariably it is the masses of the people which suffer most when disasters occur," stated William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, recently.

"Because they suffer most and because of their helplessness, the ministrations of the Red Cross organization take on added significance and importance. No doubt many lives among these particular groups are saved through the prompt service which this organization gives.

"Because the American Federation of Labor appreciates this fact, we have supplemented the appeal of the American Red Cross at each Roll Call period for memberships from the great mass of working men and women and their families. "The continued service of the American Federation of Labor in this most humane and unselfish work will be most cheerfully rendered."

Five Red Cross Camps House Flood Refugees

A total of 27,791 persons were maintained by the American Red Cross in camps or in their own homes in the three States of Alabama, Georgia and Florida, following the disastrous floods of early last spring. Five camps were organized, of which four were in Alabama and one in Florida. Small temporary camps were set up in various places in addition to these, but the persons not sheltered in the five main camps soon were able to return home or to friends and relatives.

Red Cross nurses were at all five camps, assisting the State health authorities in care of the sick and in inoculating against epidemics.

RED CROSS PURPOSE TO CONSERVE HEALTH

Society Employs Rural Public Health Nurses; Teaches First Aid and Life Saving.

A comprehensive, nation-wide program to prevent illness, and to save lives through proper nursing care and advanced methods of life saving and first aid is fostered by the American Red Cross.

The organization is the largest employer of rural public health nurses in the United States, through its Chapters. The policy of the Red Cross is to encourage its Chapters to extend the public health nursing service, where leadership in this field is not taken by some other agency in the community.

The Red Cross health and life saving campaign embraces the following: preservation of health through skilled nursing care; prevention of loss of life in accidents; prevention of illness through cleanliness in the home and knowledge of methods of home care of the sick and raising the standard of health and physical efficiency through proper nutrition.

During the year just closed, more than 42,000 certificates have been issued in the Red Cross course in Home Hygiene and Care of the Sick, and since the courses were inaugurated more than 500,000 persons have been taught; 149,000 children were instructed in proper eating through the Nutrition course; 46,898 individuals passed the severe Red Cross tests in Life Saving and 52,596 persons passed the rigid examinations in the First Aid Course.

This work is supported from funds obtained in the annual Roll Call, Armistice Day to Thanksgiving Day, November 11 to 28.

Nurses Enrolled With Red Cross for Service

Enrolled with the Nursing Services of the American Red Cross at Washington are 49,800 nurses, qualified under the society's regulations, who may be summoned to service in time of disaster or other emergency. From the Red Cross enrollment were assigned 20,000 nurses in the World War. These Red Cross nurses are the standing reserve of the Army and Navy Nurse Corps of the United States, and are also called upon for service in other governmental health services.

Little St. Eustatius Island in the Dutch West Indies gave refuge to American ships during the Revolution. The hurricane of last September struck the island, causing heavy loss. The American Red Cross was glad to send a small cash relief fund in remembrance of the historic friendship of the island folk for this republic.

Red Cross Honor Flag Goes to New Hampshire

The honor flag, given annually to the State which enrolls the greatest percentage of its population as members of the American Red Cross, went this year to New Hampshire. The decision was so close between New Hampshire and Vermont that it hung in the balance for a time. California ranked third in the honor list and Connecticut fourth.

A final tabulation of figures of the 1928 Roll Call showed a nationwide membership of 4,127,946. The banner rests with New Hampshire, where it is hung in the State House, until the 1929 Roll Call—held between Armistice Day and Thanksgiving Day—is completed and new figures available for the 1929 winner.

Churchmen Ask Support Of Red Cross Roll Call

Leading churchmen of the nation have joined in asking public support of the annual Roll Call of the American Red Cross. Two distinguished leaders who have sent messages to their congregations all over the country are quoted, as follows:

"I plead for an extension of our Red Cross membership until we can call a roll of every adult American," stated the Most Reverend Michael J. Curley, Archbishop of Baltimore. "I would like to see the children listed in the organization by their parents. I plead for it because of the spiritual reaction I visualize in our millions of contributing members."

"As president of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, I bespeak for the Roll Call of the American Red Cross the fullest cooperation of all the churches in the constituency of the Council," writes Francis J. McConnell, president of the Federal Council. "I cannot imagine that there is any minister who will not be grateful for the opportunity to call the attention of his people to the work of the Red Cross and to urge them to enroll in its membership."

CELEBRATES BIRTHDAY

Mrs. M. E. (Grandma) Simpson passed the eighty-fourth anniversary of her birth on Friday of last week, November 15.

On Sunday the event was celebrated with a dinner at her home when a number of her children, grand children and friends gathered to dine with her in honor of her birthday.

"Grandma," as she is affectionately known by all who know her, has spent an active and industrious life and is yet able to get about quite spryly for one of her advanced years. She is not only one of our oldest citizens in point of years, but is also one of our most highly esteemed as well, and her many friends here join in wishing her many more years of healthful life.

At the dinner were three of her daughters and one son and eight grandchildren. Those present were L. H. Hart, Rev. and Mrs. J. L. Beattie and son, L. G. Simpson, Mrs. Bertha Harry, Mr. and Mrs. Everett Harry, Meerie and Ruth Harry, Mrs. Grace Hart and children, Roy, Wanda and Eida, Mr. and Mrs. John White, Mr. and Mrs. Fred White and Miss Orma White.

The day was fair and warm and the dinner was served cafeteria style, and Mrs. Simpson and all her guests spent the dinner hour and a few hours following most happily.

Plants Add Charm to Country Homes

Kerrville.—Native plants have played a prominent part in the four year yard improvement contest in Kerr county in which 102 home yards were beautified, 46 of them being entered in the contest. The work has been done by home demonstration club women, aided by Miss Veta Culpepper, home agent, and in cooperation with local civic and commercial organizations.

Such evergreens as cedar, agave berry and mountain laurel were used in this Kerr county landscaping, and other native shrubs, including redbud, buckeye and sumac were also transplanted from the woods. Honeysuckle and many kinds of cactus were used.

Rock walks, fences, porches, columns and steps were built in many places out of the beautiful native rock that abounds in the hill country, illustrating the beauty and economy of using material that is at hand.

The total cost as given by the 46 contestants amounts to about $800, not counting the time of friends or members of the family nor of material on hand. No records were kept on the other yards improved as a result of the contest.

Cultivation and Dusting a Great Aid to Crop

Orange.—A yield of more than half a bale to the acre on his entire cotton acreage worked by French tenants is announced by E. C. Settleff of Orange county as a result, he says, of following the suggestions of R. R. Morrison, county agent, in handling the crop after the boll weevil arrived last June. About to abandon the crop, he changed his plans according to suggestions and cultivated shallow with large sweeps and shovels and dusted the crop twice with calcium arsenate. The shallow cultivation was continued at ten-day intervals until harvest.

Barn Yard Manure Increases Crop Yield

Colorado.—Barn yard manure has increased the yield of milo maize 525 pounds per acre in a demonstration carried on by Carol Smith of the Buford 4-H club in Mitchell county. Half an acre was left undisturbed and the other half covered with five loads of about 1000 pounds of well rotted manure, applied before bedding last spring. Pure line maize seed was used on both plots. The manured half fired more during the 90 day drought, but yielded 1249 pounds of heads against 987 on the half acre unfertilized. The land was a deep sandy loam.

"I don't see why you call your place a bungalow," said Smith to his neighbor.

"Well, if it isn't a bungalow, what is it?" asked the neighbor. "The job was a bungle and I still owe for it."

Fellowes hadn't devised a solution of Jeff's problem by the time the coach dropped them at the ferry-landing. It was a sorry fix for the country to be in, only half-interested in the struggle, and that half, as he knew, mainly concentrated in the southern and frontier states, which had no conception of the government's need of a navy, and were inclined to be jealous of the wealth shipping had brought to the sea board cities of the north. But perhaps, if men like himself, who had either a sense of conviction or of wrong, fought desperately, determinedly for long enough, the sullen apathy of the shipping interests could be neutralized, and the southerners and backwoodsmen might learn the potentialities the sea held for America. They'd all come to hate the same object. Hate sufficiently and you could conquer anyone, any difficulty. A lesson he'd learned by bitter experience, and must teach others.

He landed at the foot of Whitehall street as grim of countenance as though he went to meet Collishawe Tom and Cuffee trod close at his heels, bewildered by the throngs of people and the racket of voices and cartwheels grinding on the cobbles.

In front of the Washington hotel, at the corner of Broad and Pearl streets, Fellowes halted his charges. "I am going on to see Mr. Joshua Inglepin," he said. "Do you two wait me in the taproom here. And Cuffee, see to it that Tom doesn't get drunk."

"Yah, Mars'r Fellowes," "Relyn' on a igr'rnt nigger," fumed Tom. "Taln't fair, méssmate. How'd ye know I was squarin' my sails to git three sheets in the wind?"

Fellowes turned into Pearl street, crossed Hanover square and so came to Front street, which he traversed as far as a large, double, brick warehouse. Once upon a time, its facade had been pierced by a double door, exactly in the center, but this had been bricked up, so many years ago that the new bricks had faded almost to the hue of the surrounding wall. In place of the large door, two single ones had been pierced under either gable. Over the nearer one hung the sign:

BENJAMIN INGLEPIN, Exporter and Importer; Sailings to all Ports.

Over the farther sign read:

JOSHUA INGLEPIN, Exporter and Importer; Sailings to the Baltic, the British Isles, Southern Europe and the Indies.

Fellowes entered the farther door. A gray-haired clerk slid off a high stool, and advanced to meet him, timidly.

"I am looking for Mr. Inglepin," said Fellowes.

"Mr. Inglepin is out, sir. At the Tontine."

"When will he return?"

"Ah, sir, not until after three, when the board suspends. But if you went around to Wall street now you might find him at leisure. 'Tis the hour of 'high 'change,' sir, and all the gentlemen should be taking their noon ing."

Fellowes thanked the old man, and went out into Front street, turning the corner into Wall, where the Tontine Coffee house rose above the curbing this side of Water. Threading the groups, still arguing and discussing the trading projects of the morning, he had a little difficulty identifying Joshua Inglepin as the Inglepin warehouse the hostile brothers had divided in half when they broke up their partnership.

Joshua's stout body was clad as neatly as Benjamin's, but after the Democratic fashion; his long-tailed blue coat was short-waisted, and his nether garments were skin-light, gray pantaloons, terminating in polished half-boots. His gray hair was cut short, and brushed straight back, and his ruddy face was set off by a plain stock and neckerchief. Where Benjamin was sedate, quiet, circumspect, with an elusive eye, Joshua was positive, outspoken, forthright.

Fellowes tapped him on the arm. "I beg your pardon," said the Long Islander. "My name is Lion Fellowes, Mr. Inglepin. I was pressed off your brother's ship True Bounty."

Joshua swung around with amazing quickness in a man of his size. There was a look almost of shy consideration in the china-blue eyes that stabbed questioning into Fellowes' "Ah, yes," he answered. "Heard of you, Captain Fellowes. Heard of the incident you mention, of course. That d-d cur, Chater—ah, abem, humph! But why d' you come to me? You must know my brother and I—" "I have information in that connection which I think will interest you," he interrupted quietly.

"I drew a step nearer. There was suggestion of slyness in his face, now. His expression was eager, curiously avaricious. His blue eyes were cold as Fellowes' own.

"This d-d license business, eh?"

"That—and more."

Inglepin hesitated, then asked abruptly:

"Treason, eh?"

"I believe so, sir."

"Knew it, by G—d!" Joshua slapped his hip delightedly. "Knew the d-d fool couldn't play with fire, and not burn his fingers. Knew it soon as I heard he was keepin' on the True Bounty's crew. But you, sir, how'd you—"

"I can't tell you here, Mr. Inglepin. Will it suffice if I say I escaped several days ago from the Badger sloop-of-war? And have just surprised your brother and his daughter, with Chater, entertaining Captain Collishawe at Chater's farm on Long Island?"

Joshua Inglepin slipped his arm through Fellowes', and the light in his eyes danced and flickered as if a wind was blowing it.

"Come with me," he said. "My office will do. Glad you dropped in, Captain Fellowes. Believe you and I can do some business. Eh? Treason! But I expected it, I expected it. Ben always would over-reach himself. Ha, ha! The d-d fool!"

"... a petition Lord Wellington said, the ministers were cordial, but they'd require a definite petition. I'm persuaded 'tis that document your brother has been concocting these past months."

"When Will He Return?"

"He's been hand-in-glove with every runagate Federalist in the North," admitted Joshua.

"Exactly, sir. And my guess is that before going further with it they awaited some answer from the Canadian authorities. If I'm right 'twas that answer Collishawe delivered at Babylon."

"And why wouldn't they have turned over the petition, or whatever the thingummy was, to him?"

"'Tis likerlier they'd choose to convey it themselves since most delicate negotiations would flow from it. I feel this the more strongly, sir, after hearing the True Bounty is held ready for sailing."

"Sounds reasonable," growled Joshua. "So our job is to find this abominable scrawl?"

"We should have your brother's house and office searched tonight," Fellowes returned promptly.

"You'll find no papers in Ben's house or office, Captain Fellowes, you nor anyone. I knew the scoundrel, and knowing him I refuse to underestimate him. Aboard ship, maybe. Yes, but not until after she's sailed."

"Wait for his sailing, then, and pursue," exclaimed Fellowes.

"Take him red-handed, eh? That would be best. You may depend upon it, he and Chater are taking extraordinary precautions in whatever they are up to. As for the girl—Humph! If my eyes tell me anything, she has more sense than her father."

"She is unusually intelligent," Fellowes agreed heavily. "I'd prefer not to speak of her."

"Humph! Ha! Quite so! But if I'm to play with you, captain, I want all the cards on the table—face up."

"I have no intention that it should be otherwise, sir."

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Restless Eyes

According to a Russian scientist, there is a certain rhythm to the movements of the human eye as well as to those of the heart. It roves back and forth at the rate of about 100 movements a minute.

Under normal conditions—that is in quiet, familiar surroundings—the eyes remain at rest for a few seconds. But soon they resume their usual movements, sometimes from one side to another, sometimes up and down. It is believed by evolutionists that this characteristic restlessness of the eye is a throwback to primitive times when man's ancestors had to be constantly on the watch for danger.—Washington Star.

For a Pie

Buddy, not quite three, is exceedingly fond of pie. One day his mother remarked that she just didn't know what to have for dinner.

"I know," said Buddy, "have pie." "Well, I don't believe I have anything to make pie with," answered mother.

"Oh, yes, mother, you have a receipt," was the response.

IDEAL SUIT FOR LATE AUTUMN; FUR-EMBELLISHED CLOTH COATS

THIS is indeed a "suit season," and the program is a fascinating one, such that leads not only to the heart strings but to the purse strings as well. Of the model pictured it is not too much to say that it is the suit ideal according to standards set for smart outdoor wear.

Everything about this costume is chic, down to the slightest detail. Analyzing it step by step the first item of note is the tweed itself, which is of the loose-woven type, for the loose soft weaves are the "last word." Its coloring is perfect, being brown with of satiny sheen, trimmed with glossy luxurious black lynx, for Paris proclaims the vogue of the all-black coat. However, the original of the model pictured happens to be in one of the new radiant browns, for brown in all its variations is perhaps the most widely acclaimed color of the season, although rich beautiful greens are running a close second. One of fashion's whims is to dye the fur to match the cloth it trims, which decree has been carried out to a icy in the lavish fox borderings on this coat. It is interesting to note that the cream white mixture. Since the mode sets such esthetic value on matching furs, one expects the astrakhan tuxedo collar to carry brown and cream tones, which it does most harmoniously. And there's the satin blouse! Its exquisite eggshell tint tunes in with the color scheme. Furthermore this satin blouse indulges in a jabot of self-material and a flock of little bows, which it should be fashionable.

The little chenille-crocheted toque done in tweedlike effect crowns mid lady with chic. It is just such millinery as fashion prescribes for the tweed-clad, who would be smartly hatted. Coming down to earth, cunning oxfords greet the eye. They "tell the world" that oxfords are "in" again. This particular pair is done in brown kid and lizard, repeating the tone colorings of the tweed suit.

This costume if developed in black and white, or rather black, white and gray, would be equally as successful. In which event the order of procedure would be black and white for the loose-weave tweed, gray for the as flare of the sleeves and the flare of the hemline correspond. One of the pleasures of the new coats is to assume related lines, thus achieving a unified silhouette. Flares and flares are involved in modern coat construction. Some cut a la princess as the picture defines, others achieved through cunningly devised circular fullness or cleverly devised inset godets.

And have you noticed how very slenderizing is the diagonal wrap around effect of the coat illustrated? It's the latest! According to certain style enthusiasts, whose mission it is to create coats, the thing to do is to omit the usual single button and loop fastening and to casually hold the coat in place. It is an art, to be sure, but the young woman in the picture seems to have mastered it.

Fur is used not only lavishly on autumn and winter cloth coats, but it is manipulated in ways so extraordinary, as to create a new and fascinating interest in all coatology, from the least expensive types to the most astrakhan, footwear and headwear being carried out in black and white tones. In the styling of the fur-trimmed tweed suit such details are observed as normal waist lines, the tuck-in blouse, skirts with yokes, length of coats from the standpoint of three quarter, seven-eighths, or jacket types, also widened hemlines achieved with plaits, flares, or circular cuts.

Masterpieces are they, the wondrous fur-embellished cloth coats which are at this time being flaunted before the admiring eyes of fashion's clientele.

The coat in the lower picture might have been of kitten's ear broadcloth exclusive. It matters not whether furs be of the flax fabriclike variety or the sumptuous long-haired type, they are handled with infinite cunning.

Just a word about correct foot-wear: it is significant that the youthful fashion in this picture is wearing the simplest kind of pumps. In this instance, midsize pumps in brown, she is wearing brown pumps with dusky brown hose. With the all-black costume to be chic, one should wear black suede pumps and sheer metal gray stockings.

Night Life Gets You if You Don't Watch Out!

War Vet almost takes count, but pals help.

This kind of man wins no matter where you put him

HOW would you like it if every two weeks you had to give up your good night's sleep, and work all night instead? This is what happened to W. H. Huggins of 90 Savannah Street, Rochester, New York. When he came back from the War, he took a night "shift" job.

"It certainly shot me all to pieces," said Mr. Huggins. "I was licked before I started. My pals noticed that the night shift got me, so during a 'lunch' period in the middle of one night one of them said to me, 'Hug, I bet I know what's the matter with you. This irregular life gets us all unless we watch out. Why don't you try Nujol? Most of the boys are onto this little health trick. Try it!'"

"Well, that very night on the way home I got a bottle and within a week I felt like a different person. I wouldn't know myself. You can lick any job, even a night one, if you get the poisons out of your system regularly. Nujol sure did it for me!"

Children Cry for it

Children hate to take medicine as a rule, but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And this pure vegetable preparation is just as good as it tastes; just as bland and harmless as the recipe reads. (The wrapper tells you just what Castoria contains.)

When Baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed, asleep again in a jiffy. Nothing is more valuable in diarrhea. When coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, invoke its gentle aid to cleanse and regulate a child's bowels. In colds or children's diseases, use it to keep the system from clogging. Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your child is grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby; effective for a boy in his teens. With this special children's remedy handy, you need never risk giving a boy or girl medicine meant for grown-ups.

Castoria is sold in every drug store; the genuine always bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature.

LUCY'S COMPANION

"The children were fast asleep, for it was Christmas night," began Daddy with a smile, "but Lucy had a new companion.

"On the pillow beside her with his arm around his neck was a Teddy Bear. And such a nice Teddy Bear! He was brown and his bright eyes looked as if he thought the world was a very jolly place after all.

"Listen Lucy," said the Teddy Bear, "I have secrets to tell you now that you are fast asleep."

"And at that point Lucy awoke and the Teddy Bear continued with a twinkle in his eye, 'At least everybody else is fast asleep!'

"Lucy put her arms around the Teddy Bear and hugged him very close.

"You see," continued the Teddy Bear, "I was made by Santa Claus. And what fun I had after I was made. I was in his shop long before Christmas eve, for he has to make so many Teddy Bears.

"There were white Teddy Bears, and black ones and brown ones just like me. Some were larger and some were very much smaller than I am.

"And in Santa's shop there were, oh! so many rubber balls and worsted balls and balls with pictures painted on them.

"Didn't we love those balls!

"And what fun we had playing ball, for we found he had made some bats.

"We had teams—the white Teddy Bears played against the black Teddy Bears and the brown Teddy Bears, like me, divided up so that we helped both sides.

"Then came the time when Santa, whose shop was becoming so full of toys that we couldn't play ball very much, asked us to move into a little side room where we would have more space.

"So, for a while, we played in there until it became time for us to be put into different packs.

"Then we were driven along in a sleigh drawn by reindeer with jingling bells on their harness.

"Once or twice I was sure I was going to fall out of the pack.

"I was trying to see what the world looked like as we skimmed along over the hoofs, through the white,

"Collectors" to Fight Menace of Insect Life

The stamp collector, the cigar-band fan, the hoarder of specimens of hotel china and other such collectors are about to be pushed aside by a coming generation of collectors, who are likely to specialize in gathering insects.

In this case the childish hobby is to have a real benefit to the country. The growing menace of insect life to the larder of the future has spurred the Department of Agriculture to awaken early in the life of young students an acquaintance with their tiny enemies and to teach gathering and control methods.

To further this end a bulletin is being issued for distribution in schools, giving data on various types of insects and describing how they should be collected and preserved.

The whole field of collecting, including the exchange of specimens, and so on, is covered in the comprehensive work. It soon may become a common sight to see youthful types of the scientist out stalking beetles, lady birds, aphids and such specimens.

Feeding Tiny Tadpoles

People who have brought up orphan lambs and puppies on bottles little dream how easy is their task compared with some tasks that confront the keepers at the London zoo.

Recently some one sent the society a foam nest. An Asiatic tree frog makes these foam nests, and in them its eggs turn to tadpoles.

There was great delight over such an acquisition, and the foam nest was placed in a moist room and kept at a high temperature till the tiny tadpoles hatched. Then the little creatures had to be fed by hand.

The keepers are offering the midgets such things as tiny green flies, proffered on the end of a camel's hair brush. So far they are feeding well.

THE HIGHER PATRIOTISM

Jonah 1:1-3, 3:1-5, 4:5-11.

Golden Text: He made one of every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth.—Acts 17:26.

Introduction

There is a splendid connection between the lesson for today, The Higher Patriotism, and the lessons of the past three Sundays. Note how the three lesson subjects make an ascending scale. Respect for Rightful Authority, World Peace Through Mutual Understanding, Living with People of Other Races, and lead to the topic for today, which is Patriotism and Internationalism.

The Book of Jonah.

The little book of Jonah teaches the high-water mark of the Old Testament theology. Jehovah, Israel's God, is seen as the God of the heathen too, concerned for the Assyrian, the most cruel and rapacious power in the world, calling a great pagan city to repentance, and accepting the signs of contrition. Here God appears as the God of all flesh, calling all to repentance, willing to have mercy upon all.

Jonah Runs Away from Duty.

"But Jonah rose up to flee into Tarshish from the presence of Jehovah." God bade him go east and he went west, trying to go westward as far as he could. Tarshish was in the south of Spain and was on the western border of the then-known world. Jonah was seeking to get away from God, little realizing how his presence would go with him. "And he went down to Joppa, and found a ship going to Tarshish." At Joppa a low ledge of rocks extending out into the Mediterranean forms a small harbor, where ships are not very safe, but it is the only harbor for many miles on the coast of Palestine. To reach Joppa, Jonah traveled about fifty miles. The ship was probably manned by Phoenician soldiers, and it is likely that the boat was a trading vessel running from Egypt to Spain, touching for business at Joppa and other cities along the route.

The Great Storm.

Then the God from whose presence Jonah was fleeing sent forth after him a swift messenger, a violent storm, which tossed the ship like a bubble, and reeled its timbers until it seemed about to break up. The sailors in terror called on their heathen gods, at the same time hurling the cargo of the ship into the sea to lighten the load and lessen the strain on the rudder. They found Jonah calmly sleeping and woke him up with reproaches, bidding him call on his God, which the wretched man was unable to do. Then in their extremity the sailors cast lots to see who had brought this calamity upon them, and the lot fell upon Jonah. "What shall we do to you?" asked the sailors, "that the storm may cease?" The despairing prophet, convicted of his sin, bade them throw him into the sea, which they did, calling on Jehovah to forgive their act in thus destroying life, and to bring the tempest to an end. At once the storm ceased its raging and the sailors offered a sacrifice to Jehovah who had thus shown his power.

The Great Fire.

Now comes the single sentence which is all that great persons seem to know or think about in all this glorious little Book: "And Jehovah prepared a great fish to swallow up Jonah; and Jonah was in the belly of the fish three days and three nights." The objections to the Book centers around this single incident, and are urged by those that do not believe in miracles; they are not felt at all by those that believe in miracles. Of course, we may urge that it is nowhere said that the animal that swallowed Jonah was a whale, that a number of sea animals are able to swallow men and that man so swallowed may remain alive for a day and a little more preceding and following it, which would be reckoned three full days by any Jew. These arguments, however, are unnecessary if one believes in miracles. The miracles in the Book of Jonah are no more remarkable than the miracles in the life of Christ, such as the summoning of the great schools of fishes, the calming of the tempest, the walking on the waves, the multiplication of the loaves and the fishes, the increase of the wine at Cana, the healing of leprosy, and the raising of Lazarus from the dead. We have no more reason for denying the one set of miracles than the other.

A Second Chance.

"And the word of Jehovah came unto Jonah the second time." "It is always God's way to give men second chances; and indeed not only a second chance, but a second chance often removed. It is God's way not only to accept us at the first and to make us his servants, but to continue to us also the privilege of service even when we seem to have sinned away our first chance, misused our endowments, and have by our very failure embarrassed his plans."

Jonah's Preaching.

Jonah had learned his lesson. He could not get away from God, who was on the sea as well as on the land. Again the message comes, "Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee." After a long, hard journey of some 800 miles, he reached the city and began to proclaim his message of doom. "Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown." The effect was tremendous. Terror seized the hearts of the people. They repented of their sins, and proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth as a sign of their humiliation and grief. "And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil ways; and God repented of the evil which he said he would do unto them; and he did it not."

Jonah's Selfishness Rebuked.

But Jonah was displeased and angry. He did not want Nineveh saved. This was the outcome that he had feared when he was first commanded to carry God's message to Nineveh. It is true that the message was the declaration of doom, but it came from a God of mercy and Jonah had feared

The Restaurant

Lem Tibbets ran the restaurant where coffee, layout and beams were served all day and half the night with cake and canned sardines. A mild aroma filled the place. A complex sweet and hot, composed of steam and oysters from frying pan and pot.

The restaurant was not designed to serve the proud elite; 'Twas just a place where common folks could rest a while and eat. Its homely hospitality and service with a smile was offered folks who came to dine in place of tone and style.

Sometimes when dining at the club, where things are spick and span, I long for ham and eggs again from Lem's old frying pan. And memory often gives me pause, and sad tears tumble down, when I recall Lem's sausages and pancakes crisp and brown.

by A. J. Dwyer

that he would be merciful to the Ninevites. Angriily he remonstrated, "Wasn't this just what I said at first?" Then he went out to a hill near the city and waited for outcome. A tiger could not have waited for his prey with greedier eyes. But the destruction came not. While he waited, a gourd grew up and shaded him, and then it was killed by a worm, and left him unprotected from the hot sun. When he became angry at the death of the gourd God rebuked him. "And God said to Jonah, Dost thou wall to be angry for the gourd?" Jehovah repeats his searching question of verse 4, particularizing it. We should ask ourselves the same question whenever we are angry or piqued or worried or jealous: "Dost thou wall?" "And he said, I do well to be angry, even unto death." So angry that it will kill me—the expression of a peevish and self-centered man.

The Book ends abruptly, but its object is accomplished. Jonah learns the lesson that God would have all men saved, and that that narrow-mindedness which would exclude heathen from his kingdom is displeasing to him and alien from his design. Special Lessons. "The universality of the religion of Israel is the substance of the message sent by Jonah, and it is sent through him to all nations and all times. The God who cares for Nineveh is the God who cares for the world."—Prof. R. A. Redford. "What Israel's duty was to one nation. Nineveh, on a far larger scale is the Christian's duty to every nation."—John E. Whitley. "War is not dead. War is a spirit. War is a mode of thought. The thought life of ages must be changed; the human attitude must be altered; men must learn to think in new terms of internationalism and humanity."—Tell A Turner. "The task before us, therefore, is to widen the area of good will so that law and orderly government may transcend national boundaries and include all humankind. Some call this a dream, as men in other days called national unky a dream. But as men dream, so they achieve."—Kirby Page. "He prayeth well, who loveth well Both man and bird and beast, He prayeth best, who loveth best All things both great and small; For the dear God who loveth us, He made and loveth all."—Samuel Taylor Coleridge.

Must Go Together There can be no economy when there is no efficiency.—Lord Beaconsfield.

Cotton Crop Is Short In Texas This Season

Indications point to 3,950,000 500 pound bales in Texas this year compared with 5,106,000 in 1928. The probable yield per acre of 108 pounds is, with the exception of 1921, the lowest on record. Ginning prior to November 1 were 3,143,000 bales, or 82 per cent of the estimated production for the year. Last year 78 per cent had been ginned to this date. In 1921 and again in 1922, 91 per cent had been ginned, in 1923 and 1918 83 per cent, but no other recent year has been so nearly through ginning as is the crop at this time.

For the United States 15,000,000 bales are estimated, compared with 14,478,000 last year and 12,955,000 in 1927. The expected yield is 154.1 pounds per acre. Ginnings to November 1 were 10,889,000 bales; for the same period in 1928, 10,162,000 and 9,921,000 for 1927.

Except in the northwest and west all districts of Texas have ginned within 5 to 11 per cent of their expected production. Under favorable weather conditions practically all of the crop will be gathered by the end of the year. Since the beginning of the fall rains, picking has been retarded, but prior to late October almost perfect weather conditions prevailed and rapid progress was made. A killing frost on October 23 extended across the northern third of the state and put an end to further growth in most of the territory.

There are some late bolls yet to open in scattered localities. Preparation of land for next year's operations has begun.
