of him, Lefever got off his horse and, bending intently over the sudden page torn out of a man's life, recast the scene that had taken place, where he, stood, half an hour earlier. Some little time Lefever spent patiently decipherin the middle of it. He rose from his trail of the running feet that had been stricken at the pool. He stooped in front of a fragment of rock jutting up beside the road, studied it a while and, looking about, picked up a number of empty cartridge-shells, examined them, and tossed them away. Then he straightened up and looked searchingly across the gap. Only the great, silent face of El Capitan confronted him. It told no tales.

"If this was Henry de Spain," muttered Elpaso, when Lefever rejoined Dad his companions, "he won't care whether never."

> "That is not Henry," asserted Lefever with his usual cheer. "Not within forty rows of apple trees. It's not Henry's gun, not Henry's heels, not Henry's hair, and thereby, not Henry's head that was hit that time. But it was to a finish-and blamed if at first it didn't scare me. I thought it might be Henry. Hang it, get down and see for yourselves, boys."

Elpaso answered his invitation with fighting with?"

"That, also, is a question. Certainly not with Henry de Spain, because the other fellow, I think, was using softnosed bullets. No white man does that, much less De Spain."

"Unless he used another rifle," suggested Kennedy.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Puppets of Fate.

When Nan rode with De Spain into Sleepy Cat that morning, Lefever had already told their story to Jeffries over the telephone from Calabasas, and Mrs, Jeffries had thrown open her house to receive Nan. Weary from exposure, confusion and hunger, Nan was only too greteful for a refuge.

On the evening of the second day De Spain was invited to join the family at supper. In the evening the Jeffrieses went down town.

De Spain was talking with Nan in the living room when the telephone bell rang in the library.

De Spain took the call, and a man's voice answered his salutation. The "Dearie, I'm always careful."

"'Cause you're all I've got now," she whispered. - -

"You're all I've got, Nan, girl."

"I haven't got any home-or any. thing-just you. Don't go to the door yourself. Leave the front door open. Stand behind the end of the plano till you are awfully sure who it is."

"What a head, Nan !"

De Spain cut off the lights, threw open the front door, and in the dark. ness sat down on the plano stool. A heavy step on the porch, a little while later, was followed by a knock on the open door.

"Come in !" called De Spain roughly, The bulk of a large man filled and obscured for an instant the opening. then the visitor stepped carefully over the threshold. "What do you want?" asked De Spain without changing his tone. He awaited with keepness the sound of the answer. "Is Henry de Spain here?" The voice was not familiar to De Spain's ear. He told himself the man was unknown to him. "I am Henry de Spain," he returned without hesita tion. "What do you want?" The visitor's deliberation was redect ed in his measured speaking. "I 971 from Thief River," he began, and his reverberating voice was low and distinct. "I was sent in to Morgan's gap some time ago to find out who burned the Calabasas barn."

He flung a greeting to him from wire."

A vague impression suddenly crossed De Spain's mind that somewhere he had heard the voice before.

"Do you suppose I could come up to where you are tonight for a few minutes' talk?" continued the man coolly. "Not unless you have something very important."

"What I have is more important to you than to me."

De Spain took al instant to decide. "All right," he said impatiently; "come along. Only-" he paused to let the word sink in, "---if this is a game you're

The answer came without evasion "I did."

"You gave me a message from Nan Morgan that she never gave you."

"I did. I thought she needed you right off. She didn't know me as I rightly am. I knew what was going on. I rode into town that evening and rode out again. It was not my business, and I couldn't let it interfere with the buskness I'm paid to look after. That's the reason I dodged you."

"There is a chair at the left of the door; sit down. What's your name?" The man feeling around slowly, deposited his angular bulk with care up on the little chair. "My name" - in the tenseness of the dark the words seemed to carry added mystery-"" Pardaloe."

"You've got a brother-Jee Pardaloe?" suggested De Spain to trap him. "No, I've got no brother. I am just

The condition of the trail broke their formation continually and Lefever, in the circumstances, was not sorry. His only anxiety was to keep Elpaso from riding ahead far enough to embroil them in a quarrel before he himself should come up. Half-way to Duke's house they found a small bridge had gone out. It cut off the direct road, and, at Elpaso's sug- gestion, they crossed over to follow the ridge up the valley. Swimming their horses through the backwater that cov- ered the depression to the south, they gained the elevation and proceeded, unmolested, on their way. As they approached Sassoon's place, Elpaso, riding ahead, drew up his horse and sat a moment studying the trail and cast- ing an occasional glance in the direc-	crowded Nan's memory after the wild night on Music mountain, the most vivid was that of a noticeably light- stepping and not ungraceful fat man advancing, hat in hand, to greet her as she stood with De Spain, weary and bedraggled in the aspen grove. A smile flamed from her eyes when, turning at once, he rebuked De Spain with dignity for not introducing him to Nan, and while De Spain made apol- ogies Lefever introduced himself. "And is this," murmured Nan, look- ing at him quizzically, "really Mr. John Lefever whom I've heard so many stories about?" She was conscious of his pleasing eyes and even teeth as he smiled again. "If they have come from Mr. de Spain —I warn you," said John, "take them with all reserve." "But they haven't all come from Mr. de Spain."	up at the other end of the wire. He signaled the operator hastily and got hold of Bob Scott. To him he explained rapidly what had occurred, and what he wanted. "Get up to Grant and Ran- cherio, Bob, as quick as the Lord will let you. Come by the back streets. There's a high mulberry hedge at the southwest corner you can get behind. Leaving the telephone, De Spain re- joined Nan in the living room. He told her briefly of the expected visit and explained, laughingly, that his caller had asked to have the lights out and to see him alone. He made so little of the incident that Mon welled and the	tinued De Spain after a moment. "No- body could call it my fault. It was either he or I—or the life of a woman who never harmed a hair of his head, and a woman I'm bound to protect. He was running when he was hit. If he had got to cover again there was noth- ing to stop him from picking both of us off." "He was hit in the head." De Spain was silent. "It was a soft-nose bullet," contin- ued Pardaloe. Again there was a pause. "Til tell you about that, too, Pardaloe," De Spain went on collectedly. "I lost my rifle before that man opened fire on us. Nan happened to have her rifle with her—if she hadn't, he'd 've dropped one or both of us off El Capi- tan. We were pinned against the wall like a couple of targets. If there were soft-nose bullets in her rifle it's be- cause she uses them on game—bobcats and mountain lions. I never thought of it till this minute. That is it." "What I came up to tell you has to

RED CROSS WEEK

This is Red Cross Week throughout the Nation. One Hundred Million of Dollars are being raised by voluntary giving

REEVES COUNTY EXPECTED TO GIVE $2,000.00

A careless coin thrown in the hat discharges no part of our Duty now. Giving must be from the Heart. And the gift must be Generous. The need is great-the demand imperative. Our own flesh and blood are the beneficiaries of our giving. The millions of money are for the assuaging of the pain and anguish of the boys who bear the brunt of the battle.

Warfare is no respecter of persons. Our men must pay with their bodies the price of our Liberty. Of the travail of their souls will be born the new freedom of America and the World.

The draft may pass you and yours untouched. But, if you are human, its aftermath will take its toll of sympathy and sorrow from your heart. Surely-surely-our great people will send the boys away with more than cursory farewell into the most fearful carnage and the most fateful struggle that men have witnessed since the dawn of history.

The Red Cross-its heroic devotion and tender, tireless self-sacrificeis the silver tracing on the dark war horizon. Its gentle ministrations keep alive the spark of faith and hope that the cruelties of War would drive from the human heart.

The Red Cross ministers to the wounded soldier-friend or enemywho falls within our battle lines. He may be your own son or brother, or the boy of some heart breaking because of its powerlessness to help him. The Red Cross soothes the anguished mind and tortured body, nursing gently back to health or reverently closing the eyes that bravely faced a country's foes.

But the Red Cross needs money to do this. It must have limitless resources of physicians, nurses ships, hospital equipment, and medical supplies if its vast organization is to function on a scale commensurate with the ever-pressing need. A continuous stream of money must be provided, and this provision must come from the boundless wealth and boundless generous sympathy of the American people.

Men and Women of Reeves County, Give ! Give Now-largely and gladly ! Sacrifice a pleasure or, if necessary, a comfort to do this. It is impossible that the appeals of those who are giving all for the Great Cause should fall upon deaf ears. Open you hearts-widely Yield to the impulse that bids you have this part in the sacred tasks of alleviating the suffering of those who offer themselves upon the altars of their Country that freedom may live and not perish. 13 8 ---
