West German, Pakistani also honored Americans dominate Nobel Prizes again

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — The 1979 Nobel Prize in physics was awarded today to two Americans and a Pakistani and the chemistry prize to an American and a West German as U.S. scientists again this year dominated the prestigious international awards.

A total of four of seven laureates selected for the three 1979 science prizes are Americans, the same number as last year.

The physics prize was awarded to Professors Sheldon L. Glashow and Steven Weinberg, both 46, of Harvard, and Abdus Salam, 53, a Pakistani physicist working in London and Trieste, Italy, for studies aimed at unlocking the mystery of forces that hold matter together. They believe their work may eventually find a single force underlying the universe.

The chemistry prize was awarded to Professors Herbert C. Brown, 67, of Purdue University, West Lafayette, Ind., and Georg Wittig, 82, of the University of Heidelberg, West Germany, for their development of chemical tools for synthesizing organic compounds.

Last week the medicine prize was awarded to physicist Allan McLeod Cormack of Tufts University and British research engineer Godfrey Newbold Hounsfield for developing the X-ray technique known as computer-assisted tomography. Today's awards were made by the Swedish Royal Academy of Sciences. Each prize carries a $190,000 stipend to be shared among its winners.

The Academy cited the three physics winners "for their contributions to the theory of unified weak and electromagnetic interaction between elementary particles, including ... the prediction of the weak neutral current." In Massachusetts, Weinberg told a reporter today the work is an effort to help "people understand what makes the world tick."

Both he and Glashow agreed their studies do not have any immediate practical application, although they have spinoffs in understanding radioactivity and how the sun produces energy.

SHELDON GLASHOW

"We suspect that there is at root a fundamental simplicity of nature," Glashow said. Their theory is that "the particles of nature are held together by four different forces, of which one is gravity. That's what Einstein spent his life on. The other three are weak, strong and electromagnetic."

The goal now is to show that the other three are "three different facets of the same thing" — a single underlying force of which they are simply manifestations.

In 1967, Weinberg proposed that electromagnetism and a class of subnuclear reactions called the "weak interactions" could be understood as different expressions of a process described by a single group of equations called a "broken gauge symmetry group."

Salam independently proposed a similar theory a few months later.

It turned out to be the first unification of two basic natural forces since electricity and magnetism were shown to be connected more than a century ago.

Glashow and Weinberg, both New York City natives, are the 38th and 39th American winners of the physics prize.

Weinberg, who obtained his Ph.D. at Princeton, has been Higgins professor of physics at Harvard since 1973. Glashow, who holds a Harvard doctorate, has been a professor of physics at Harvard's Lyman Laboratory since 1967.

Salam, who was educated at Cambridge University and had been considered a likely Nobel winner for several years, is a professor at the Imperial College of Sciences and Technology in London and director of the International Center for

ABDUS SALAM

Theoretical Physics at Trieste, Italy. He is the first Pakistani to win a Nobel Prize.

The London-born Brown and Wittig, the chemistry winners, were cited for developing the use of boron-and phosphorus-containing compounds as important reaction agents in the synthesis of organic compounds.

These carbon-based compounds are the chemicals of life, but also include many important industrial compounds, such as benzene and petroleum.

Brown, who obtained his doctorate from the University of Chicago, later became an American citizen, and has been a chemistry research professor at Purdue since 1959, introduced an entirely new class of chemical compounds called organoboranes.

Organoboranes "can be used for reductions, rearrangements and additions and have opened up a range of new possibilities for linking carbon atoms to each other," the academy citation said.

Wittig developed new synthetic methods of considerable importance and has studied reaction mechanisms. His most important achievement is the discovery of the rearrangement reaction bearing his name as "the Wittig reaction."

Brown is the 22nd American Nobel winner in chemistry.

Carter still holds statewide lead in Florida's Democratic caucus

MIAMI (AP) — President Carter holds a statewide lead in Florida's Democratic caucuses, but after all the hard work, hoopla and money, the tallying still isn't over. In one county, the contest has come down to the luck of the draw.

"I don't know if it'll be straws or cards or what," said Brevard County Democratic Chairwoman Monnie Yungkans of Rockledge.

But, somehow, fate tonight will break a tie between two men who want to go to the Democratic State Convention for a non-binding presidential straw ballot Nov. 18 — George H. Canada, a Melbourne builder who favors President Carter, and Lee W. Rabb, a Merritt Island aerospace technician who supports Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

They are vying for one of the delegate slots that has not been officially determined from Saturday's caucuses. Final results from 65 of 67 counties, accounting for 65 percent of the delegates, showed 376 delegates for Carter, 119 for Kennedy, 51 for AFL-CIO slates and 27 uncommitted.

White House press secretary Jody

Powell said Carter was "very pleased" with his showing. Rain in populous parts of the state held Saturday's turnout far below the 50,000 expected.

New York Lawyer Harold Ickes Jr., a Kennedy supporter and political organizer who came to Miami for the caucuses, said results mean "that we now know we have an organization job to do here and the nucleus of an organization."

Canada and Rabb each received 462 votes for a seat in Brevard County's delegation to the convention in St. Petersburg. The winner will get to vote with 877 other delegates chosen Saturday and 839 nonelected delegates — party leaders, elected officials and their appointees.

The blocs still untallied were the 188-member delegation from Miami and Dade County, where Carter and Kennedy ran very close, and the 116-member delegation in Fort Lauderdale and Broward County, which Carter supporters conceded to the senator because the draft-Kennedy campaign and AFL-CIO ran identical slates.

Neither tally was expected before Tuesday, leaving the final total in doubt.

Depending upon the results in Dade, Carter could widen his lead and claim a "knockout punch" in the draft-Kennedy camp's base or Kennedy could narrow the gap. Carter seemed likely to get at least 34 Dade delegates who favored Carter but were on Carter and labor slates.

Even if Kennedy draws closer, however, Carter seems all but certain to win the straw ballot in November because of his unswerving support from Gov. Bob Graham and other members of the Florida establishment who will make up the "automatics."

The draft-Kennedy forces suffered a blow late Sunday when Palm Beach County, which they had hoped to carry, gave Kennedy only 16 of its 60 delegates. An AFL-CIO slate captured the other 44 slots, but 10 members were also on Carter's slate and two were on Kennedy's.

The labor-Kennedy delegates ran strongest in the Palm Beach area.

'Big Oil' protest may be aided by recent snowfall

By the Associated Press

Tom Corrigan was looking at the snow falling in Boston, the first snowfall of the year, gauging how it might influence his part of this week's 50-city citizens' protest against "Big Oil."

It could help the turnout, decided the New England field coordinator for Wednesday's "Campaign For Lower Energy Prices." October's early snow was a reminder of New England's heavy reliance on heating oil — a fuel whose price has almost doubled since the start of last winter.

"The price problem is really acute here," says Corrigan.

In Louisville, Ken Dupree has been helping local groups organize rallies, marches and demonstrations in cities throughout the South for the day of protest.

Local citizen groups are being encouraged to "do their own thing," and Dupree said he's been swamped. "I'm frankly hard-pressed to deal with the tremendous response we've gotten. People all over are clearly very angry about the price of energy and have reached the point where they're going to demonstrate that anger," Dupree said.

Altogether, some 200 labor, citizen and consumer groups — as disparate as the Gray Panthers, the NFL Players' Association and the United Auto Workers — are participating in the nationwide protest.

"This is a vehicle for people locally to express their outrage in a way that will help counter the enormous influence of the oil lobby in Washington," said Bob Brandon of the Citizen-Labor Energy Coalition, the organization spearheading the activities.

William Winpisinger, coalition chairman and president of the International Association of Machinists, calls the campaign a "national grassroots organizing effort" designed to force government action to lower energy prices.

Winpisinger is also coordinating a national effort to draft Sen. Edward M. Kennedy for the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination and many of the positions advocated by the coalition are those which have been long espoused by the Massachusetts Democrat.

"It's true that Kennedy is supportive of almost everything we're doing, but there's very little direct coalition with his office," said Brandon.

The planned demonstrations include a march by senior citizens on the American Petroleum Institute headquarters in Washington and a protest rally in Chicago led by actress Jane Fonda and her activist husband Tom Hayden at the Standard Oil of Indiana office.

Oil industry officials are either reluctant to comment on the activities or are issuing carefully worded statements.

OIL PROTEST — A sign hangs on the International Association of Machinists building in Washington as part of an effort by labor, citizen and consumer groups to force government action to lower energy prices.

Action/reaction: Curry case

Q. Why has nothing been done to prosecute Jessy Curry, who is accused of killing his mother at her home in Kentwood? Why haven't more people been asked to testify that know something about the case?

A. District Attorney Rick Hamby said the case lead has been set, but Curry's lawyer was granted a continuance so the case was reset. Hamby added the case would be tried before the first of the year. He suggested that anyone who has anything to contribute to the case should contact the D.A.'s office or the police department.

Revised waste recycling regulations recommended

WASHINGTON (AP)— A congressional subcommittee, referring to contaminated oil spread on East Texas roads, has recommended that regulations be revised to require testing of all recycled wastes before disposal.

"The subcommittee found out in hearings on toxic road oil in Texas that some 'recycled' wastes have not been adequately treated," a report released Saturday said.

"Therefore, we recommend that the proposed regulations be revised to require the testing of all recycled waste for toxicity if such wastes will be disposed of in the environment."

The report of the House Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations also said shipping records should be required for all hazardous wastes until their final disposal.

The oil found on nine roads near Corrigan, Texas, contained toxic chemicals, principally nitrobenzene. Cyanide was also found in trace amounts.

The oil came from the Browning-Ferris Chemical Services Inc. transfer station near Nederland, Texas.

"The company accepts full responsibility and to its credit, promptly consented to remove the contaminated sections of eight of those roads under orders from the Texas Department of Water Resources," the report said.

The subcommittee, chaired by Rep. Bob Eckhardt, D-Texas, had subpoenaed shipping records and held a public hearing last May in Corrigan.

The report said the company did not know the final disposition of materials sent to small recyclers in Louisiana.

"The subcommittee discovered that these small waste oil firms do much of their business with asphalt contractors in Louisiana and Mississippi, thus it is possible that roads in those states may also be contaminated with toxic substances," the report said.

The study found that the company was negligent in the placement of the oil on the Texas roads and the water resource department's district office did not conduct an adequate investigation.

The company testified at the hearing that the contamination was accidental and the procedures leading to the problem had been eliminated.

"However, documents ... suggest, at a minimum, a pattern of negligence on the part of the management of the Nederland facility prevailed through Nov. 2, 1978," the report said.

It said the accounting controls necessary to prevent improper disposal were absent before that date.

The water resources department's district office in Orange, Texas, received a complaint on Nov. 2, 1978, that cyanide was mixed with the waste oil being dumped near Corrigan.

The state investigator assigned to the case told the subcommittee his check of the company's records showed proper accounting and disposal of all cyanide shipments.

The subcommittee, however, examined the same records and found it impossible to track the cyanide shipments' movements.

The report said the investigator's supervisor "was so convinced of the company's good faith ... that he theorized (at the hearing) the source of contamination to be the failure of a truck driver to properly wash out a tanker prior to the loading of road oil."

"Clearly, these two enforcement officials did not perform the investigation necessary to insure that the public health was protected," the report concluded.

The comments on the Corrigan road oil were contained in the subcommittee's report on hazardous waste disposal throughout the nation.

"The hazardous waste disposal problem cannot be overstated," the report said. "Because of years of inadequate disposal practices and the absence of regulation, hundreds and perhaps thousands of these sites now pose an imminent hazard to man and the environment."

The report said federal and state governments are "totally inadequate" in their efforts to control hazardous waste disposal.

Education commissiner echoes 'back to basics'

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The outspoken Texas commissioner of education says public schools have a simple mission — teaching kids to read and write and giving them the training to get jobs.

"Give me a child who is literate and has a saleable skill, and we've done our job," said Alton O. Bowen, who replaced the retired Marlin Brockette as commissioner five weeks ago.

Echoing the "back to basics" cry of parents troubled by the direction of public education, Bowen, 63, insists he is speaking the language Texans want to hear.

"Get back to basics — that's what they're saying. I think it's time to get up and get with the issues," Bowen said.

Bowen, a McKinney native who has served as superintendent in Josephine, Rosebud, Mexia and Bryan, set the pace of his administration when he banned beards and tieless employees in his agency.

And true to his words, the commissioner has not shied from controversy during his brief tenure in office.

Last week he infuriated Mexican-American leaders by saying bilingual education belonged in the home — not in the classroom.

Earlier this month Bowen angered Antioch University by imposing a moratorium on accepting degrees from the school's branches in Texas. He said he took the action because some teachers were earning the degrees — and qualifying for higher salaries — without having to attend class or take written tests.

But Bowen had to back down from that stance last week after the school filed a $1 million lawsuit. The moratorium was lifted but the controversy is not over.

He does not see a need for more college graduates in the future.

"Seventy percent of all the jobs available in tomorrow's market will require craftsmanship and manual skills," he said.

Bowen is not a bureaucrat who leans toward a middle-of-the-road stance. He's against casual attire in his agency, deadwood workers, federal intervention and cross-town busing, and favors spanking rowdy pupils to keep order in the classroom.

One of his stunts: Clothes — "If you come to work like you're going fishing, you're probably going to act like that in your job."

Series star injured in parachute mishap

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Actor Frank Bonner, who plays sales manager Herb Tarlek on CBS-TV's "WKRP in Cincinnati," was in stable condition early today after a parachute accident in the desert 50 miles northeast of Los Angeles.

Bonner, 37, fell about 20 feet when the "ascendancy parachute" from which he was hanging collapsed in a freak wind Sunday at El Mirage Dry Lake Recreational Area, said M.T.M. Productions spokeswoman Josie Williams.

Bonner was being towed by a four-wheel drive vehicle when the accident occurred.

she said.

The actor was taken first to Victor Valley Hospital and later transferred to St. Luke's Hospital in Pasadena, Ms. Williams said.

Doctors at Victor Valley said the actor may have suffered back and internal injuries. Further tests will be conducted today at St. Luke's, Ms. Williams said.

"He's in stable condition now and resting comfortably," she said. "He was joking on and off when I saw him."

Ms. Williams said Bonner, who lives with his wife and daughter in Beverly Hills, was with friends at the time of the accident.

She has held various offices like recreation chairman, program chairman, secretary-treasurer and reporter in her local club and been elevated to the offices of secretary and vice-chairman for the 4-H Council. She credits 4-H with influencing her college and career plans. She is planning to apply for a rodeo scholarship and will major in some course in clothing.

Young Rhoton has been in 4-H work for eight years. He has carried projects in swine, sheep, beef, veterinary science, cotton, automotive, small engines, electronics, crafts, citizenship and leadership.

HELP THE WIDOW THROUGH GRIEF STAGES

The newly widowed (or "widower-ed") progresses through several emotional stages during mourning. If you recognize these as "stages," it may enable you to help her work through her grieving more fully and effectively.

Sorrow is a basic emotional stage of mourning and very common, often accompanied by self-pity and — or feelings of guilt.

Anger is another stage, a resentment against a "cruel world" which has taken one's mate prematurely. Fears for the future "without him" as companion and breadwinner are not unusual to a new widow.

Anxiety makes her wonder "who will provide for the family" and "how will I manage my finances alone?"

The widow's confidence in her own abilities needs to be strengthened so her re-entry into the world of reality may be achieved more smoothly. As a widow, if she recognizes these stages as natural and common to all, the social adjusting she does will be easier, faster, more effective.

Mission of Halfway House most worthy

Much news space has been devoted in this newspaper in recent days to the problems and the hopes of people who perform various functions for the Halfway House, a financially beleaguered institution which, it goes without saying, fulfills a valuable and a necessary role for the community in general.

There have been charges and counter-charges between the board of directors set up to oversee the operation and people commissioned to operate the facility. The Herald tried only to give both sides ample opportunity to state their cases and even got accused of printing stories without checking the facts, allegations the writer and those with whom she coordinates her efforts stoutly deny.

IN STRIVING TO be as fair as possible, the Herald overlooked an important aspect of the story: Does the mission of the Halfway House undertake justify its existence? A mother who had spent many an anguished moment worrying over a son who seemed bent on becoming an alcoholic tossed out that question to the newspaper. Luckily, the son turned a public agency for help and earned a return to a rightful place in society.

"I am not only a concerned mother but a concerned citizen about the article in the Sunday paper written about the Big Spring Halfway House," the woman wrote. "I thought it lacked in concern for the people that it had helped and it did not show the reason and the need for such a facility in our community."

"I am the mother of an alcoholic son who today has sobriety because of the Big Spring Detox Center. If it had not been for the help and the concern of the people there he would be in jail, in the state hospital or worse."

"HOWEVER, TODAY he has sobriety, a well paying job but most of all he has respect and is now a good citizen of this community. He is not out driving drunk, endangering other people's lives or his own. However, he had a place to go when he got out of the Detox Center. Other people are not so lucky and they must look for something like the Halfway House for assistance so that they may have the same chance my son had. Not all clients at the Halfway House are alcoholics but they deserve the same chance to become self-supporting and have their self respect which the Halfway House gives them."

"...I personally have visited the Halfway House and I have found only dedicated staff members who give more than 100 per cent of themselves to the care and concern of their clients. I have never seen them act in any other way than professionally." The woman has a point.

Off balance

Around the rim

Andrea Cohen

I have to disagree with people who say money is the root of all evil. In my opinion it is the checkbook, or to be specific, those statements that are sent monthly like clockwork.

It isn't hard to handle a checking account, and doing the math on the statement is a whiz. The problems begin to arise when the two have to balance.

If bank presidents want fewer problems with checking account holders, they should be limited to people who are Certified Public Accountants, hold a masters in business administration, or are bookkeepers.

When I went to the bank last week, I should have worn a trenchcoat, with the collar turned up and a big floppy hat, for two reasons.

First, let's face it. It's embarrassing. Second, like Sherlock Holmes, I was trying to solve a mystery. The mystery was why the bank kept telling me I had more money than I said I did.

I knew my bad math grades in junior high school were going to pay off one day.

Back east, whenever my checkbook did not balance, I just handed it over to my nearest living relative who would admit to knowing me. Now, I do not have a relative within 900 miles in any direction, so I had to call the bank and admit my mistake.

"Come in and leave all your records and I'll see if I can find the error," a bookkeeper said in what sounded like a not too happy voice.

I went in to the bank the following day, records in hand and head bowed low. I passed all the Billy Baldwin decor of this bank and entered a large room where, I suppose, all the nitty gritty work is handled.

The walls are a horrible shade of green, there is no thick, high pile carpet, in fact no carpet at all, and the room is furnished in early American Salvation Army surplus.

But in that room sat the woman who was going to help me find my missing money.

"Have a seat," she said, "And let's see what you have."

Feeling very embarrassed, I sat down, and pulled out what was to be the first of too many cigarettes. I cracked some jokes, which looking back, I see were not very funny.

But then I realized the bank could have said I had less money than I said I did. It could have been a double embarrassment. Not only would the bank find out about my non-existent math abilities, but I could have had bounced checks as well. I felt a little better, but not much more than a little.

The bookkeeper began to go through my statement of four months ago. However, the term bookkeeper is not the right word. She should be called a human computer. Within minutes, she found my mistake and balanced my checkbook, temporarily.

Then I did this month's statement. Maybe I should have paid more attention in math class when I had the chance. It just didn't work.

Time was running out as she tried to find out why that little bit of leftover money the bank says I am to have, is not in my stubs. I wish I could blame it on a bank error, however, I am just not that lucky.

As of this writing, the bank is still holding those little sheets of paper with the beautiful designs that pay my bills every month.

And just because I have come out of the closet and admitted all this, please don't try to hit me for a loan. If I had it my way, I would take the money and invest it in one dozen red roses for the bookkeeper for all she has done, and another dozen if all four statements finally balance.

But instead, in this day of inflation I am going to use the money for a luxury item for my home — food.

My answer

Billy Graham

DEAR DR. GRAHAM: Do you think age has anything to do with whether or not a person should get married? I am 16 and in love, but my parents say I am too young to get married. What do you think?

DEAR T.B.: Age alone is not the only factor. Several of our children were fairly young when they married, yet my wife and I were convinced it was God's will for them and that they had the necessary maturity. They have gone on to have wonderful homes.

Statistics show clearly, however, that the younger you are, the greater your chance of an unsuccessful marriage. Marriage is an awesome responsibility. Suddenly you are no longer responsible just for yourself, but for another person as well. There are many practical decisions you must make, such as your budget. By marrying so early you have to cut short your education, which in the long run would be unwise. In short, I believe it is only rarely that a person as young as you are in mature enough to get married. You should give careful attention to what your parents say. The Bible tells us, "Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this pleases the Lord" (Colossians 3:20). They have years of experience which you do not have. They want what is best for you because they love you. They do not want you to make a mistake.

Love, you must remember, is more than a deep emotional feeling. It is action. "Let us not love with words or tongue but with actions and in truth" (1 John 3:18). In fact, our emotions can deceive us. A successful marriage must be based on more than emotion — emotions come and go, while true love is willing to endure the hard work that is often necessary in a marriage.

The real question, however, is this: what is God's will for you? Have you committed this matter to Him, not just praying that He will let you get married, but that you know His will? Trust Him, and know that if it is not His will for you to get married now it is because He has something far better in store for you later on.

Understanding SALT

William F. Buckley, Jr.

I do not wonder that there is an almost universal impatience with the figures in SALT II. Listening to a recitation of how many missiles, how many silos, how many MIRVs, is only less discouraging than listening to economists and bankers quarrel over differentials in M1 and M2. It is so much easier to relax, and go to sleep with President Carter's summary (one U.S. nuclear submarine is enough to destroy all major Russian cities) under one's pillow; but the only trouble is you might, in the felicitous phrase of the 10-year-old boy, wake up dead.

FOR SUCH REASONS as this, the chances are that you have not heard the name of Donald G. Brennan. Well, you really should. He is a Ph.D., MIT, in mathematics, winner of all kinds of this's and that's, and so on and so forth. He is associated with the Hudson Institute in New York, which is the fountainhead of some of the most original and useful thinking of the day. But Brennan becomes intensely interesting when he brings his huge technical knowledge to bear in examining the SALT treaty, which he did recently before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

His paper was in part technical, but its impact is not in the least technical. Because his conclusion is that the passage of SALT II increases the chance of world war, rather than the other way around. Let you leap instantly to the conclusion that Brennan is simply another of those hawks greedy to acquire the incremental hydrogen bomb: well, Brennan is a disarmament type. Indeed, he was one of the architects of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency having had a hand in the drafting of the act under whose general patronage we are looking at SALT II.

All those calculations that have to do with a rough equivalence are calculations which do or which do not stand up. If they do — as the Carter people insist — that means one thing: if they do not, as the critics say, that means something else.

WELL THEN, consider the Russian Backfire bomber. Remember, it is not listed in the inventory of Soviet strategic weapons, whereas our B-52s are. Brennan points out that the difference between two estimates of the "combat radius" of the Backfire (the combat radius means round-trip, U.S.S.R. to U.S.) are negligible. Call it 3,000 miles. Well, the known combat radius of our B-52s is 3,012, i.e., about the same. But hear this: Our combat radius is estimated with a 5-ton bomb load, the Backfire with double that 5-ton load. If you were to lighten the bomb load of the Backfire, you would increase its combat radius by at least 200 miles.

Besides which — and this is me talking, not Brennan — the notion of the round trip is silly, since the bombers having dumped on the U.S., could land in Cuba or, for that matter, Mexico or Canada which would not, at that moment, be resting on international punctilio.

Now add to this that only one-third of the B-52s produced have a range in excess of the Backfire's, add to it that by the expiration date of SALT II the Soviets could have 30 percent or more of their total strategic payload in Backfire, and you have a disproportion that causes you to wonder what goes into our negotiators in agreeing to count our B-52s, but not count their Backfires. Was there what they call an asymmetrical concession? No.

"I oppose SALT II," said Dr. Brennan, "because it is BAD arms control. I judge that SALT II is more likely to increase the chance of war than to reduce it."

Chronic hives cause usually found

Paul G. Donohue, M.D.

Dear Dr. Donohue: I am at my wit's end. Please help me. I have had chronic hives for one and one-half years. They are always on the spot and the next day come out in another location. I have been taking antihistamines for it. What is the best treatment? How can I prevent recurrence? — I.H.

The medical term for hives is urticaria (ER-tih-CARE-ee-yuh). If hives remain or recur for more than six weeks, it is called chronic urticaria, and you certainly fit that category.

Both urticaria and a sister illness, angioedema (swelling directly beneath the skin) for the most part indicate some allergic reaction. Unless the immediate cause of that reaction can be found, antihistamine is the only answer.

Finding the culprit that causes the reaction is impossible in about 25 percent of cases. Many foods and many drugs are suspect. Fresh fruits, shellfish, chocolate, nuts, tomatoes, penicillin, and aspirin are common offenders. Chemicals in certain cosmetics can cause reaction. So can physical agents, such as heat or cold.

You have to track down the food, drug, substance, or situation that immediately precedes an outbreak. Many hives victims give up this search too easily. As indicated, the cause can be found in about 75 percent of the cases.

A cupful of fine refined cornstarch in a warm tub bath may help the itching, which I assume accompanies your hives.

I suspect that in one and one-half years the search for the cause of your reaction has been tried. If it hasn't, you can certainly begin with the list of suspects given above.

Dear Dr. Donohue: I have two bunions, very tender and painful at times. I also have arthritis, and I'm sure this doesn't help my situation. My doctor wants me to have surgery on the bunions. I have listened to many people on this subject and I have fears about the surgery. I am 64 and in fairly good health. I do have leg pains. What do you advise? — Mrs. L.T.

Bunions can hurt, and only you can say how much. If you are in "fairly good health," as you say, and if your bunions hurt, and if your doctors advise removal, my honest opinion is to have them removed. Surgery to "realign the toe" prevents the irritating pressure. If the bunions prevent you from getting the exercise you need to help your arthritis, then the need for surgery is that much greater. Don't worry about the procedure, which you couldn't describe as being in the same ballpark with open-heart surgery.

Secret voice

Evans, Novak

WASHINGTON — A secret memorandum that the Pentagon brass refused to give the Senate reveals that the Joint Chiefs of Staff (JCS) a year ago set specific conditions for U.S.-Soviet negotiations on SALT II, then endorsed a treaty that failed to meet their requirements.

JCSM-321-78, sent on Oct. 12 to Defense Secretary Harold Brown for forwarding to President Carter, delivered a broadside against what is now the new Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT II). "These issues require satisfactory and unambiguous resolution before the SALT II negotiations can be considered adequately completed," the memo said. Yet, the JCS now endorses the treaty even though no "resolution" was achieved.

No wonder the administration stone-walls defense-oriented senators who have been demanding this and other JCS memos. While the public voice of the JCS endorses SALT II with some equivocation, the secret voice of JCSM-321-78 is so antagonistic that it would be lethal propaganda against the treaty.

MOREOVER, STATEMENTS in the memo directly contradict the chiefs' own testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee in July. The Gen. David Jones who as JCS chairman signed the memo seems a man apart from the Gen. David Jones who led the pro-SALT JCS testimony.

In that testimony, Jones listed as a "significant" concession Moscow's agreement, apart from the treaty, not to increase production of the Backfire bomber. But the memo warned that failure to include the Backfire problem in the treaty could lead to a Soviet "breakout" — that is, secret preparation for a major post-treaty military advantage.

"We regret the decision," it said, "not to insist on counting the intercontinentally capable Backfire system within the limit. No Soviet assurances can compensate for the fact that Backfire will remain an effective intercontinental weapon within the total Soviet arsenal for waging nuclear war. Moreover, Backfire production and development provide a significant Soviet breakout potential, an option we would be hard pressed to match in the near term."

In July, Jones sloughed off suggestions that SALT II leaves the U.S. with no bargaining position for SALT III. In October, Jones warned SALT II "will significantly reduce U.S. negotiating leverage for a SALT III outcome."

In July, the chiefs said Moscow would have to destroy strategic weapons to reach SALT II limits. In October, they had painted this picture: "On the Soviet side, many 'reductions' will actually be conversions to strategically significant non-counters (for example, Bison bombers to tankers and SSBNs (missile-firing submarines) to SSNs (attack submarines), and SS-20 (missile) deployments will free IC-BMS currently committed to PRC (Chinese) targets."

Jones told the senators "there is nothing inconsistent" between the memos they could not read and his testimony, arguing that negotiations had changed things. "Obviously," the general testified, "we were addressing a moving train." But when the demands of JCSM-321-78 are stacked up against the final result of SALT II, the train had not moved far.

Concerning verification, the memo demanded that "national technical means must be augmented, where necessary, by cooperative measures." It contended that "we should not only pressure our option, but publicly state our intent, to share cruise missile and related technology with our allies as necessary." No more was done to resolve the chiefs' doubts on these issues than on the Backfire.

Similarly, the memo argued "it is essential that any agreement preserve the U.S. option" for a mobile missile. Yet, the SALT II verification requirements forced a mobile basing mode for the proposed MX that is by no means the chiefs' first choice.

IN OVERALL description of arms control, the October generals do not resemble the July generals who saw little danger in the treaty.

Gen. Jones did indeed repeat those words in his public statement in July. Unfortunately, the heart of his testimony ignored that timely warn-

Mailbag

Dear Editor: I am furious. There is no other way to describe my feelings.

On Sept. 25, my four year old daughter came into the house screaming that a cat was chasing her. Concerned, I went outside to check the situation. I smelled the scent of a skunk as I was walking out. Looking around, I saw a skunk in the backyard. I could tell by the way he was acting that he was not normal. He could barely walk and was snarling. He was small and appeared to be pretty young. He was also not at all frightened by me. Being rabid didn't come into my mind at the time, but I knew instantly that he was sick!

I came back inside the house and debated whether I should call my husband. I decided not to, and loaded his shotgun. But this time, the skunk was on my porch. I slammed the door, and he retreated slowly. I then swung the door open and shot him.

Unable to locate my husband, I called the police department. The police dispatcher asked if the animal had come into any contact with a human. I informed him that I didn't know, but that he had chased my daughter. They informed me that unless I knew that the skunk had come into contact with anyone, that they couldn't help. The person then advised me to wrap the skunk in ice and preserve him if I wanted the animal checked for rabies, but that it would have to be at my own expense and that I had to pick up the skunk and transfer it.

In the meantime, a police car was scouting the neighborhood checking out a report of a gunshot, which was mine. They could report the gunshot, but they couldn't do anything about a rabid skunk.

The police dispatcher also informed me that the assistant city manager, Bill Brown, might be able to help the situation.

In the meantime, my husband and a friend wrapped the skunk and put him in a box in the alley.

Later that night, my husband called Mr. Brown. Mr. Brown stated that he was sorry, but there were no funds available for this type of matter and that there is nothing that he could do. Like the police dispatcher, he also said that for my own curiosity, I could preserve the animal in ice and take it to the vet for observation as to whether it was rabid or not.

Our curiosity was definitely aroused, because there are many loose animals and many young children that reside in our neighborhood. (We live at 13th and Runnels.) We also have two animals, which we keep in the backyard.

The skunk was taken to the vet, and he had the animal delivered to Austin for observation. The money spent for this was out of my pocket. On the following Monday morning, Oct. 1, tests were returned stating that the skunk was rabid.

During the waiting period, my husband talked to a man at the pound, and he stated that there is nothing that he could do, but that he would like to help if the city would set the funds up for such matters.

It is scary now for me to think that there is nothing that the police or code enforcement department can do to help a person's situation with a rabid animal unless he or she is bitten. There are many vacant lots in this neighborhood, so I have to believe that there are more skunks somewhere, especially since this skunk appeared to be young.

Yesterday, a sick dog was picked up in this neighborhood by the city, yet still there will be no tests run. I realize that it is each person's responsibility to take care of their own pets and children, but I am a taxpayer and feel that I should have a right to be protected from wild animals. What if it happened in your backyard? Sincerely foaming.

Hitting doesn't make a hit

By Robert Wallace, Ed. D.

Dr. Wallace: I've had my problem for several years and I'm really fed up with it. I'm 12 and my parents hit me when I do something wrong.

My friends never get hit when they get punished. Instead, they get grounded or have certain privileges taken away.

I love my parents very much but can't dig the hitting bit. I know you can't help me, but I would like your comments. — Sonja, Odessa, Texas

Sonja: I personally don't believe in hitting to enforce discipline, but in certain situations as a father I did spank when all other methods failed.

As a child, I was spanked by a strict father as the method of discipline and I resent it to this day.

Dr. Wallace: I am 15 and my boyfriend is 16. We say we love each other very much and I think we do.

My problem is that we don't live in the same state and we have to write to each other.

What really bothers me is that sometimes it takes him more than a month to answer me.

There is no excuse for this and it really upsets me.

My question is should I drop this guy or should I be more patient? — Karen, Astoria, Ore.

Karen: I would continue writing to this boy but don't consider yourself as "going" with him.

Enjoy his letters, but if a charming young boy from Astoria asks you for a date, go!

Dr. Wallace: I'm 13 but could pass for 16. This summer I met this really cute guy. We got along just fine until about a week ago when he really came on strong.

I told him no and he pushed me away and told me to go home to mommy. So I left.

Did I do the right thing? I still think he is cute and I rather like him. — Sandy, London, Ontario, Canada

Sandy: You did the right thing. Remember, there is a lot more to evaluate when sizing up a boy than just looks.

If this boy truly cared for you, he would have understood when you said no. Instead he was rude and inconsiderate.

Dear Abby

Abby Gets Pot Shots

DEAR ABBY: As a long time reader and admirer, I was shocked at your advice to the parents of the 12-year-old boy who, with his parents, had visited relatives in another city. On returning home, he told his parents (in confidence) that his 15-year-old cousin had offered him some pot, but he refused.

The parents immediately phoned the cousin's parents to report it. Instead of being grateful for the information, they reacted angrily, saying their son had never smoked pot, and the younger boy must be lying. When the visiting parents asked if they were wrong to have called the other parents, you said yes. (You also said, "Children should not betray their peers.")

Abby, if the kids had stuck up a gas station, or shot someone, would you still have said, "Children should not betray their peers?"

I just can't believe you would advise parents not to tip off the parents of children who are breaking the law and doing harm to themselves.

If I misunderstood your answer, please explain. DISAPPOINTED IN YOU

DEAR DISAPPOINTED: You did, and I will. If you had read the letter carefully, you would have noticed that the boy said his cousin had offered him some pot. He admitted that he never actually saw his cousin smoke pot.

It was my feeling that the older boy was only talking big to impress his young cousin. Had he actually smoked pot in the boy's presence, it would have been a different story. No pot was in evidence, and none was smoked!

I'm sorry I didn't make myself clear, and judging from the critical mail I received, I did not.

Marijuana is still illegal, and those who break the law should be reported and dealt with accordingly.

However, in this case, no law had been broken. I should have said, "When no law is broken, children should not betray their peers." And to have reported back to the parents with such flimsy evidence, thus creating a rift between the families, was uncalled for. (P.S. I hope the editor of the Rock Hill, S.C., Herald sees this. So incensed was he with my reply that he wrote an editorial about it.)

DEAR ABBY: I have been a widow for 11 years. My sister and my daughter still remember my wedding anniversary in a quiet way, which I feel is comforting.

However, my son (now married) never remembers my wedding anniversary.

Am I expecting too much of my son? What is proper? HURT

DEAR HURT: It is not proper to offer congratulations on a wedding anniversary after one of the couple dies.

Perhaps your son remembers the date, but doesn't acknowledge it because he fears it might sadden or depress you. Let him know that you derive comfort from having those you love remember that day. Then if he forgets, you will have a legitimate reason to feel hurt.

HALTED IN THEIR TRACKS — Kenneth Lin, left and Jeff Dere of Palo Alto, Calif. stop to take photos of an idle cable car at California and Market Streets in San Francisco. Halted in their tracks by safety problems, the cars have been a major item on tourist agendas. So, the Municipal Railway people put the cable car on display so that tourists can at least take pictures — if not a ride.

Crippled cable cars hurt San Francisco's image

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The shutdown of San Francisco's famed cable cars, halted in their tracks by serious safety problems, is giving the city's tourist industry gray hair.

"I think we're in trouble with the cable cars for a long time," said Robert Sullivan, general manager of the San Francisco Convention and Visitors Bureau. "I don't know that this would be an advertising line, but we're just like any other city now."

Sullivan says families and individuals may choose to postpone visits to San Francisco while the 106-year-old system is idled. The loss to merchants will be hard to make up, he feels.

"What we've got is that some of the conventions are saying if you can't guarantee the cable cars, we're not coming," said Lloyd Pflueger, general manager of the Downtown Association of San Francisco, with 200 business members.

The city's Public Utilities Commission shut the system down Sept. 25 for a $750,000 patchup after a study concluded it was unsafe.

Between July 1978 and June 1979, 299 cable car accidents involving injuries or damage were reported to Municipal Railway officials. Victims filed $7.5 million in damage claims, many still unresolved.

Interim repairs — fixing track, replacing cable supports and the like — should be finished in three weeks on the California Street line. But the Mason and Hyde Street lines, which take tourists to trendy waterfront shops, will be down for at least six months.

Now the city is seeking $41 million from the federal Urban Mass Transit Administration to rebuild the 10½-mile, three-line system — which will close it for about 20 months beginning in 1981.

"It very definitely does affect business," says Vera Freeberg, 62, retiring owner of the Buena Vista Cafe, a popular waterfront tavern at the base of the Hyde Street line.

"People come here to ride the cable cars. They don't want to ride the buses," she added, noting her daytime business had fallen 20 percent to 25 percent since the line shut down.

Transportation Secretary Neil Goldschmidt accepted the city's $41 million grant application during a visit to San Francisco on Friday.

"We need to fix the system," he said. "It's a national crisis when you can't get from Union Square to the Buena Vista on a cable car."

Muni — the city's transit system — has put many of the 170 idled conductors and gripmen to work driving buses over the same three routes. But Muni estimates the 28,000 to 32,000 daily ridership figure for the six-ton cable cars has dropped 40 percent with buses.

City officials have long known that the vintage system, which runs at a $6 million annual deficit, would someday need a major overhaul. But the decision was put off for years by successive administrations.

"If the system is not fixed, it would have to be closed down, and I would be the first to call for it," then-

Supervisor Dianne Feinstein declared in 1977 after a series of accidents injured at least 66 persons.

It was Ms. Feinstein, as mayor, who announced the temporary shutdown in September, blaming it on her predecessors.

Despite the blow to the tourist-related wharf area, says Pleuger, large retailers have felt only a minor impact. Their business is more dependent on the 1,100-vehicle Muni fleet of buses and streetcars which continues to operate unimpeded.

At least five fatalities since 1967 are blamed on the 39-car system. The worst occurred Dec. 3, 1967, when two people died in a collision between a cable car and several autos. Forty-three persons were injured.

The idea of using an underground cable to pull what were originally horse-drawn cars is credited to Andrew Hallidie, whose father patented a process for making what was then called wire rope.

Opportunity to learn offered youth by 4-H

"Opportunity" is calling for Texas youth. Whether or not they answer the call can have an important effect on their experiences down the pathway of life.

That opportunity is 4-H, a youth development program for boys and girls between the ages 9 and 19 conducted by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A&M University System.

Now, during National 4-H Week, is an excellent time for interested youth to learn more about 4-H and its action-oriented, learning-by-doing, programs.

4-H provides youngsters an opportunity to learn something that will help them in everyday life, such as health, safety, conservation, leadership, citizenship and nutrition. Then there are learning opportunities that may lead to a fuller and richer life, such as knowing how to tune a small engine, how to grow vegetables, how to cook and sew, and how to raise and train an animal, to name only a few.

There's a uniqueness about 4-H that makes it a special type of program. 4-H is something different to everybody because of the different backgrounds and experiences of each and every member. Thus, 4-H boys and girls learn from one another by sharing these experiences, plus they have additional experiences on their own through guidance from adult leaders and Extension professionals.

Extension professional staff backing up the 4-H program offers another unique advantage. In whatever area a youngster's interests lie, there is a knowledgeable specialist to provide background and training to guide the youth along the way.

4-H also involves the youth's family — it's a family affair. Many 4-H experiences happen at home, and this is where 4-H'ers actually work with their projects. So youth and their families work and learn together. Hopefully, these experiences will help family members communicate more openly and thus become more close-knit, says Linda Fuchs, Assistant County Extension Agent.

4-H provides an opportunity for youngsters to "practice" for the real life experiences they will encounter in the future. Such training can only lead to a more complete and more meaningful life.

Any youth or parents interested in the 4-H program are encouraged to contact the County Extension office, located in the basement of the courthouse. The phone number is 267-8469.

Businesses questioning Carter move

NEW YORK (AP) — Those who fear that politics will weaken the anti-inflation drive are asking themselves what President Carter meant when he told union representatives, "I will not fight inflation with your jobs."

The mysterious statement seems at odds with Federal Reserve anti-inflation policy, with his own staff economic reports and those of many independent forecasters, and with his own earlier proclamations.

And with generally accepted economic thinking too, because nobody has yet figured out a way to shrink extreme price inflation without also shrinking the labor market. An anti-inflation policy costs jobs.

White House economists, as have most economists who declare themselves publicly, have already projected job losses. Some of the nongovernment reports, in fact, foresee an unemployment rate of as much as 9 percent.

Carter's statement, made last Thursday at an AFL-CIO building and construction trades meeting in San Diego, wasn't the only suggestion he might not fight inflation with his previously announced dedication.

After having declared his firm support for the Federal Reserve's tight money policy just two days earlier, the president told delegates to the union meeting that "interest rates are too high."

Now, with a recession expected to coincide with the election process, some private-sector analysts are convinced the president might seek a tax cut, although he is on record as saying he isn't so inclined.

A tax cut would spur the economy by putting money into pocketbooks. It would create a feeling that the worst was over, even though its real effect might be to load the future with even worse problems.

It would present a credibility issue too, since Carter has stated repeatedly he would balance the budget.

A tax cut would make balance unattainable. Not to cut might make the White House unattainable.

But jobs might be an even more delicate matter for Carter, since an idle head of household isn't likely to vote for the status quo.

Life insurance policy: Family protection or good investment?

What do you want your life insurance to do?

Do you simply want to protect your family in case you die? Or are you looking for an investment that will pay you money when you're older and, if so, is an insurance policy really your best deal?

A recent federal study has aroused new interest in the answer to these questions.

The study, conducted by staff members of the Federal Trade Commission, focused on what is known as whole-life or straight-life insurance. That's the kind of policy that provides savings as well as a payment on the death of the insured.

According to the FTC study, the average rate of return on whole-life policies is only 1.3 percent, far below the yield on passbook savings accounts and other investments.

And commission staff members said insurance buyers, often do not realize how little they are getting.

There have been proposals to force companies to provide more information about the cost of insurance. Meanwhile, you can help yourself by learning some of the basics.

The two most common types of insurance are term and whole-life.

Term policies generally are designed to protect survivors who are paid a lump sum on the death of the insured. It provides insurance for a limited period only. You have to renew it periodically and the premiums increase as you get older. If you live longer than the term of the policy, you get nothing.

Some term policies have a decreasing face value. The premium stays the same even though the insured gets older, but the amount of insurance decreases. This kind of policy can be useful for a family which expects its insurance needs to drop with time, as children grow up, for example. It also can be used to protect against a specific, declining expense, like a mortgage.

Whole-life policies are more complicated and more controversial. The premiums are more expensive than those for term insurance — particularly in the early years — but they do not increase during the life of the policyholder.

Whole-life policies provide a payment to beneficiaries on the death of the insured. In addition, the policies have a cash value which grows with the years. The holder can, if he or she chooses, redeem the policy and take the cash value. He or she also can use the cash value of the insurance as security on loans.

If you live long enough, the cash value will be greater than the total of the premiums you have paid. You will, however, as the FTC study pointed out, have less money than if you had taken an amount equal to the premiums and deposited it in a savings account.

Whole-life insurance should not be used for short-term savings. The cash value of such policies builds up very slowly. "In fact," says the FTC's Bureau of Consumer Protection, "the cash value in the first year is zero."

Resignation demanded

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Former Premier Suleyman Demirel demanded the resignation of Premier Bulent Ecevit's leftist government today after Demirel's centrist Justice Party won all five National Assembly seats at stake in midterm elections and also trounced Ecevit's forces in senatorial elections.

"If they don't resign, we will topple the government in a vote of confidence as soon as Parliament convenes," Demirel told a television interviewer. "This government will go, that is definite."

The results of the election Sunday left Ecevit's Republican People's Party and its allies still the largest faction in the Assembly with 220 seats, but its opponents held a total of 227.

It appeared that the government crisis would be a long one. Despite the Justice Party's gains, it was doubtful that Demirel could unite the various opposition parties and factions to form a majority coalition. There was speculation that a general election would be called. The next one is scheduled for 1981.

Ecevit, looking dejected, conceded defeat in a television appearance. "Obviously we have not achieved a good result," he said.

The premier pointed out that when he replaced Demirel 21 months ago, he inherited the problems of escalating political terrorism and a major economic crisis. "We have paid a heavy price," he said.

He said his cabinet and other leaders of his party would meet today to assess the situation. It was assumed they would discuss whether to resign.

The five National Assembly seats filled in the voting Sunday were vacant because of deaths. Three others that are vacant are to be filled later.

Voting was also held for 50 of the 150 elected members of the Senate. Complete unofficial returns for 38 of these seats gave 26 to the Justice Party, 9 to the Republicans, 2 to the Moslem fundamentalist National Salvation Party, and 1 to the ultrarightist National Movement Party.

Ducky day for feathered

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Firefighter Ralph Coons saved the day — and the life of a duck trapped in the shower of a burning house.

"I picked him up, carried him outside, shook him, squeezed him a little, and he started to sound a lot better," Coons said, adding that he stopped short of mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.

No one was injured in the Saturday blaze.

Eating crow, not muffins

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Alex Smith won a prize for his homemade muffins, and now his classmates may have to eat crow.

Armed with a recipe from a cereal box, Smith, 13, won a blue-ribbon over the weekend at the North Carolina State Fair for his bran muffins. The muffins, from a recipe of a box of bran cereal, won first prize — about $3 — in the under-16 division.

"I told one of my friends about the ribbon and he didn't believe me," Alex said. "I guess they'll have to believe me now."

As an added bonus, he thinks reading the recipes may have helped him with his math problems.

You can spot your congressman by the license plates on his car

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — If you haven't seen your congressman or state legislator recently, start looking for the "SO" auto license plates.

There are 1,467 out there somewhere in Texas supposedly designating the driver of the car as part of the state and federal family of lawmakers and judiciary. Of course, since each lawmaker or judge gets two sets of license plates, the "SO" car may be driven by the wife or other family members.

The "SO" plates are just one of about 10 different special registration plates authorized for Texas cars and other vehicles.

All were legalized by the Texas Legislature at the urging of special groups and interests. By far the largest group are the 257,866 "exempt" plates. This means the vehicle is exempt from state and local registration fees and taxes because it is supposed to be used only for official business. This category includes cars driven by officials and employees of city, county, state and federal government, including school districts and water districts.

Probably the second largest group of special registrations are those for "prestige" plates. Anyone can get a "prestige" plate by paying the regular registration fee plus a $10 bonus. These are the plates that say "Howdy," "Smile," "Aggie," "Hook Em," and such. No obscene words or initials are accepted. Some business firms get as many as 50 or 60 plates with an identifying name or letters followed by a number. Some groups, particularly backers of football teams, assign the numbered plates according to the size of contributions made to the team.

Two new sets of plates will be showing up on highways and streets this year, as a result of actions taken by the 1979 Legislature.

On Aug. 27, the state highway motor registration division began issuing special plates for former prisoners of war. So far about 850 have been issued with an expected 4,000 as the final total. There is no charge for the plate.

Another new, and exclusive registration is for recipients of the nation's top medal awarded during wartime, the Congressional Medal of Honor. A total of 13 have been issued, at no cost, out of the possible 17 awarded to Texans.

In "SO" plates, the SO1 goes to the Texas governor and is the only free one. All others have to pay the regular registration fees. SO2 goes to the lieutenant governor, SO3 to the House speaker, SO4 to the attorney general, SO5 to the comptroller, SO6 to the treasurer, SO7 land commissioner, SO8 agriculture commissioner, and SO9 secretary of state.

Other special plates go to the Texas Railroad Commissioners, the Texas Supreme Court, and the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

Members of the Texas Senate get SO27-57 and the Texas House, SO58-207.

But that's not all the special registration plates. There were 14,628 disabled veterans plates issued last year, costing only $3 each. Highway officials expect that to increase since new legislative rules allow them for 90 percent disability instead of the prior 70 percent disability rule.

There are 514 special plates issued to counselor officers of foreign nations, or Texans representing those nations.

There are about 4,000 special plates issued to amateur radio operators carrying the call letters of the amateur stations.

And there are thousands of special dealers licenses issued for new and used cars offered for sale and for demonstrator cars.

If your car was made since 1921, you can buy a five-year special license for $25. If the car was built before 1921, the plate costs only $15. About 2,800 of these plates may be spotted, mostly in parades and antique car shows.

Chinese premier's visit a first

PARIS (AP) — The French government rolled out an extralong red carpet today to welcome Chinese Premier Hua Guofeng on the first visit to Western Europe of a Chinese Communist head of state.

President Valery Giscard d'Estaing was to head the welcoming party for Hua's arrival from China for a three-week tour of France, West Germany, Britain and Italy. In addition to a longer-than-usual red carpet from the plane, another special carpet was laid in the airport Salon of Honor to convey "exceptional warmth," according to one official.

After a helicopter trip from the airport and a motorcade across the center of Paris, the French president and the Chinese premier and Communist Party chairman were to have the first of at least three private meetings planned for them during Hua's six-day stay.

At stake in their conversations will be proposals for France to help China develop its mining and steel industries, hydraulic power, telecommunications and plants for petrochemicals and fertilizers.

Also at stake is France's "special relationship" with China's Communist regime, launched on Jan. 27, 1964, when President Charles de Gaulle's government was the first major Western power to establish diplomatic relations with Peking. Now China's opening to the West and its consequent increase in trading partners have left that special relationship in need of redefinition, according to French and other Western diplomats.

"We have been anxiously planning this visit for months," said one official of the French Foreign Ministry. "But we're still not quite sure what is going to come of it."

A presidential spokesman said it was "an historic visit, fundamental for the future."

One major unanswered question concerns Chinese interest in purchasing highly sophisticated Mirage 2000 jetfighters, a sale the French government fears will harm its relations with the Soviet Union.

French officials are interested in trying to revive an agreement, canceled by the Chinese, for the $2.2-billion purchase of two French nuclear energy plants to be built by the Societe Framatome under license from the Westinghouse Corp. of the United States. The Chinese indicated the cancellation was part of a general retrenchment in over-ambitious development plans.

Hua will spend two days in Brittany, in north-west France, visiting a telecommunications station, an agricultural center, an oceanography center and an electronics factory.

Chinese officials said Hua also wants to mingle with "average Frenchmen" but intends to keep away from the pro-Moscow French Communist Party.

He goes to Germany next Sunday, to London on Oct. 28 and to Rome on Nov. 3.

Brown, Root reports 21 deficiencies

HOUSTON (AP) — Brown & Root Inc. officials say they have copies of 21 deficiency reports on concrete work during the time a former employee says no inspections were being made at the South Texas Nuclear Project near Bay City.

Steve Grote, a vice president, said the firm dug into its records because it considers the charges made by the former employee, Dan Swayze, extremely serious.

The former inspector alleged during a national television program last week that no concrete inspections were made for five months after a construction foreman had a fight with an inspector on June 30, 1977.

He said his crew of inspectors voted to stay in their office, play cards and certify concrete work without actual inspections.

Grote said inspectors could hardly report deficiencies in safety-related concrete work unless they had made inspections.

"Our records show a total of 55 DDRs (deficiency and disposition reports) were filed by inspectors on safety-related concrete work during 1977, and that 21 of these were filed in the five-month period after the June 30 fight," Grote said.

State legislators next in line

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas supporters of homosexual rights planned to present their case to members of the state's congressional delegation today.

The lobbying effort followed a Sunday rally of thousands of homosexuals that filled the large, sloping field in front of the Washington Monument.

The rally and the lobbying was designed to encourage Congress to amend the Civil Rights Act to protect homosexuals against discrimination.

The national task force that organized the march also called on President Carter to sign an executive order banning discrimination in the military, civil service and among government contractors.

A Texas contingent paced by the Montrose Marching Band of Houston was the first state group to depart the Capitol grounds for a march down Pennsylvania Avenue to the monument.

"I just had to say I'm gay and you have to see, people, that we're here," said one Dallas physician, who asked not to be identified. "If there were no gay health professionals, there would be no health care."

Some marchers from the Dallas-Fort Worth area announced their presence by carrying placards identical to the billboards they had designed to publicize the march in the metroplex.

Bill Nelson of the North Texas Committee for the March on Washington said there were reasons for the event in addition to the published ones.

"I think it's important for gay people to get together and experience things on a large basis. It's really changed my whole concept of myself," the Dallas resident said. "I wanted finally to be at one of those events I'd been reading about."

Most estimates of the Texas group in the parade ranged between 500 and 1,000. Leaders of various state groups estimated as many as 6,000 Texans may have traveled to Washington for the event.

Although most came from Houston, clusters could be found from Dallas, Fort Worth, Austin, San Antonio and El Paso.
