THIS BEING stock show time in Parmer County, we were intrigued by a story in last Sunday's edition of the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal.

The article points out that a professor of surgery at the Texas Tech University Health Science Center is working to perfect a derivative of cattle blood which he hopes can be used to replace human blood for transfusions.

Dr. Mario Feola is the Texas Tech professor who has been working on the project for the past ten years. He says that the hemoglobin solution has been successfully used in experimental transfusions with mice, cats, rabbits and monkeys.

In the laboratory work, the animals were bled until two-thirds of their blood supply was gone, a point at which the animals would die unless they received more blood. At this point, they were given the bovine hemoglobin researcher.

Dr. Feola says that the bovine hemoglobin, when pure, does not cause an immunological reaction when injected into other animals. He points out that cattle and human hemoglobin are very similar in their molecular structure.

could be used in situations where to prevent the siting of the nation's no human blood was available, to first permanent, high-level nuclear transfuse to a person in critical waste repository in Deaf Smith need of blood.

The article points out that the attend. hemoglobin can be injected into a patient, regardless of their blood Three File type, and acts as a short-term substitute for human blood. This few days until their own body For School few days until their own body rebuilds the blood cells to a normal level.

If the Texas Tech researcher's Ballot project proves successful, it could solve a multitude of problems. One is the fact that there are often shortages of human blood. Another is the present scare associated with the contamination of blood by the AIDS virus, causing many people to be concerned with transfusions.

Hundreds of thousands of cattle are slaughtered in this area alone each year, making the potential blood supply almost endless. Dr. Feola says that when the hemoglobin solution is completely purified, it is perfectly safe.

of the hemoglobin solution is the fact that it can be stored in powdered form for months, while human blood can only be stored for several weeks at the most.

In making the solution, Dr. Feola isolates the red and white blood cells from the cattle blood. These cells are then broken down to isolate the hemoglobin--a protein which carries oxygen to the body's cells.

When people die from a loss of blood, they do so because they lose the red blood cells which carry oxygen, the professor explained. "The hemoglobin of cattle will actually transport the oxygen better than human hemoglobin,' he says.

One of the biggest drawbacks to perfecting his process is funding for the research.

It was pointed out that the Japanese have tried unsuccessfully to produce an entirely synthetic blood substitute. It is feared that the shortage of money for Feola's project may allow the Japanese to begin work on this project, and have it on the market while the Texas Tech HSC is still in the testing stages. If the project proves successful, the new product would need to be produced in large quantities, and RESERVE SHEEP....Shane Mason of Lazbuddie this could bring a much-needed new industry to the Lubbock area, the Tech professor points out.

Friona Youth Lamb Winner

Jennifer Smith, 13-year-old Friona youngster, exhibited the Grand Champion sheep on Thursday's first day of judging at the 40th annual Parmer County Junior Livestock Show.

Miss Smith won the title with her Hampshire, which had earlier won the breed championship.

Reserve champion sheep was exhibited by Shane Mason of Lazbuddie, with the reserve champion Hampshire.

Scott Doss served as judge of the sheep show. The win by the Friona youngster broke a six-year streak during which the sheep show had been won by exhibitors from Bovina. It was the first sheep banner for a Friona exhibitor since the show went back to judging a Grand Champion starting in 1977. The last Friona winner in the sheep show was Donny Gustin, with a fine wool cross champion in 1976. Friday's judging includes the barrows, with the steer judging set to begin at 7 p.m. Friday, followed by the heifers. This is a change from the recent shows for the cattle judging. The show will conclude with the premium auction sale, starting at 2 p.m. Saturday. All prospective buyers are urged to attend the sale.
