

Council calls charter vote on elected police chief

By RICK BROWN
Staff Writer

In a surprise meeting at 12:15 p.m. today, the Big Spring City Council called a special charter election for Aug. 11 on the question of whether the city should have an elected police chief.

"Whereas the City Council does not want those who desire the election to have to wait six months to have said election... (an election) shall be held the 11th day of August, 1984," according to the four-page emergency ordinance passed unanimously by the council.

Other provisions of the election ordinance provide — if approved by city voters — for a two-year term of office for the chief's position and a one-year residency period for candidates prior to filing.

The move was a major reversal for the council, which had previously proposed a Jan. 19, 1985 date for the election and a lengthy verification process for a 64-page, 1,100 signature petition that originally requested it.

According to Councilman Russ McEwen, councilmen by calling the August election have in effect "thrown out" the petition, making verification unnecessary.

"In effect, what we've done is ignore the petition," McEwen said today.

"There was no desire on our part to hold the election other than at the closest possible time," he said. Today was the deadline for calling the Aug. 11 election since state requires a 30-day period between the date when the election is set and the date of the election.

Petition organizers and bail bond company owners Mary Thomas and Danny Heckler earlier voiced generally negative reactions to news of the January election date.

In addition, Mrs. Thomas questioned the validity of the council's Tuesday night executive session.

Mondale picks a woman

New York's Ferraro VP choice

WALTER MONDALE and GERALDINE FERRARO

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Walter Mondale, an establishment Democrat breaking with tradition, today introduced Rep. Geraldine Ferraro of New York as his choice for vice presidential running mate. If confirmed by the Democratic National Convention next week, she would be the first woman to win a spot on a major party ticket.

Mondale picked Ms. Ferraro, a 48-year-old third-term congresswoman, after a lengthy selection process that featured interviews with seven contenders.

His decision to disclose his choice in advance of the convention was extremely rare. His selection of a woman was historic.

Mondale notified Ms. Ferraro by telephone Wednesday, she immediately accepted the offer and flew to Minnesota to be present for the news conference.

"If selected, I will work very hard for the campaign," she told reporters before she slipped out of San Francisco for an overnight flight to Minnesota.

She had mounted something of a campaign to get the post, and prominent women leaders had sought to pressure Mondale in recent weeks on her behalf.

Her husband, real estate developer John Zaccaro, joined her for the occasion. "She's a very forceful woman," he said.

Mondale made his announcement in the Minnesota State Capitol in St. Paul. Together, he and Ms. Ferraro will appear at a rally on Friday in Mondale's hometown of Elmore, Minn., then go to Lake Tahoe, Calif. for a weekend retreat before flying to the convention city on Monday.

Word of Mondale's choice became known in advance, and even before the formal announcement, as Mondale arrived at the Capitol with Ms. Ferraro.

Democratic officials were praising his decision.

Republicans were quick to stick in the needle. A spokesman for the Reagan campaign, John Buckley, was quick to congratulate Ms. Ferraro, but...

"The question here is not gender — it is qualifications to be president. When you compare the qualifications of a three-term congresswoman from New York City with that of a man who came close to winning his party's nomination, who has wide foreign policy experience... Geraldine Ferraro just does not stack up against Vice President (George) Bush."

Democrats were generally enthusiastic.

"Geraldine Ferraro would make an excellent vice presidential nominee, and her selection is a significant advance for women in American politics," said Sen. Gary

Courts political coalition

U.S. Rep. Phil Gramm said he is counting on a coalition of rural Democrats and urban Republicans to secure him the U.S. Senate seat in November.

Gramm, R-College Station, who gained national and statewide publicity when he switched political parties and ran as a Republican in early 1983, concedes he faces a difficult job because most voters in Texas are traditionally Democratic. "Even my mother hasn't been convinced (to vote Republican)," Gramm told an audience of about 25 persons in the Big Spring Chamber of Commerce conference room Wednesday afternoon.

But he says the different philosophies and "diametrically opposed positions" of his opponent, state Sen. Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin, will help. He played up the difference, referring to himself as a "country teacher from College Station" and to Doggett as a "silk-stocking Democrat." See Gramm page 2-A

Judges go pale milking cows

By KEELY COGHLAN

STANTON — The cows were ready, but most of the nine county judges in Stanton Wednesday night for a cow-milking contest, part of Martin County's centennial celebration, weren't.

The contest was full of good-natured jabs at the contestants' cow-milking skills — or lack thereof — as they tried to get the most milk from Jersey and Guernsey cows owned by Jody and Sammy Yates.

"You dried her up, John," one of the judges called to the winner, Glasscock County Judge John Robinson, the winner of the contest with 28 ounces. "You've been practicing."

Most contestants said they had milked cows before, several years ago, back in the 1940s, and were out of practice.

"I forgot how," Howard County Judge Milton Kirby, said, joking. "Nah, I do too know how. It's like riding a bicycle. You never forget how." Kirby, who finished fourth in the contest with five ounces, said he last milked a cow in 1948.

Others were relying on instructions from friends and relatives. Upton County Judge Peggy Garner said she received some tips on the drive over to the contest.

"My husband showed me how on my thumb on the way over in the car," Mrs. Garner said. She finished fifth in the contest with 4½ ounces.

Midland County Judge Bill Ahders was blunt about the situation. Asked if he'd ever milked a cow before, he replied, "Hell, no. I've never seen a cow before."

Ahders came prepared, however, bringing his own carton of chocolate milk that he dumped in the pail. "It ought to count more. It's brown," he said. Ahders was disqualified.

Winkler County Judge Frances Clark said she had never milked a

Stanton paper closes

STANTON — Martin County Printing, Inc. today suspended weekly publication of the Stanton Reporter, according to owners Grant and Connie Mabry, who made the announcement in Thursday's edition of the Reporter.

The Mabrys, who have owned and published the paper for four years, said the general economy, excessive interest rates and financial difficulties caused by third parties were the major reasons for ceasing publication, according to the announcement.

The Mabrys were unavailable for comment Thursday morning. But in the announcement, they said the decision was "not undertaken lightly or with any pleasure."

Mabry came to Stanton from Seguin, a town with a population of more than 15,000 near San Antonio.

The newspaper was first published in 1905, when the name was changed from the Stanton Courier to the Stanton Reporter. The first newspaper in Stanton was published in 1887 and was called the Marienfield News. The name was changed to the Courier in 1904.

The Reporter is the only newspaper in the Martin County seat, which has a population of about 2,300.

Since the Mabrys became publishers, the Reporter's weekly circulation jumped from 700 to 2,300.

A low-cost operation, the Reporter is written, typeset, pasted up and sold by a small staff at the 1,900 square-foot building in downtown Stanton. The newspaper goes to press on Wednesday and is distributed on Thursday.

Before entering the newspaper business, Mrs. Mabry had worked in Houston banks. Mabry attended journalism school at North Texas State University in Denton and has worked mostly with daily newspapers.

In a recent interview with the Herald, Mabry said he served as "the publisher, editor, reporter, chief bottle-washer and sports writer" for the Reporter.

Thunderstorms rip WT

By The Associated Press
A weak cool front stalled over North and West Texas early today, triggering widespread thunderstorms over the region.

Heaviest storms were reported near Seymour, Gainesville and Athens.

Strong wind and intense lightning were reported north of Athens, in Van Zandt County, around 3 a.m. Slow movement of the storms indicated heavy rainfalls was likely, the National Weather Service said.

Skies were generally fair statewide, with a thin veil of high clouds extending from the Permian Basin through the Panhandle.

Afternoon highs were expected to remain in the 90s through Friday. Overnight temperatures ranged from a cool 60 at Marfa to a still-muggy 83 at Dallas.

Light south wind in the southern portion of the state turned northerly over the South Plains and Panhandle.

Thunderstorms drenched the Eastern Seaboard and Gulf Coast today as a cold front that spawned rain and tornadoes rumbled out to the Atlantic, promising to leave warm, dry weather for most of the country.

The southern edge of the cold front, which produced thunderstorms, hail and 66-mph winds overnight from Pennsylvania to Maine, was expected to curve back from the East Coast and spread showers from the Carolinas across Tennessee to Texas.

"A good part of the nation is going to have a dry day," said Bill Sammler of the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo. "It's always good to see Mother Nature quiet down" after several days of pounding thunderstorms, he added.

One exception will be out West, where an unrelated storm system was expected to dump rain on the southern Rockies, southern Plateau and desert Southwest, Sammler said.

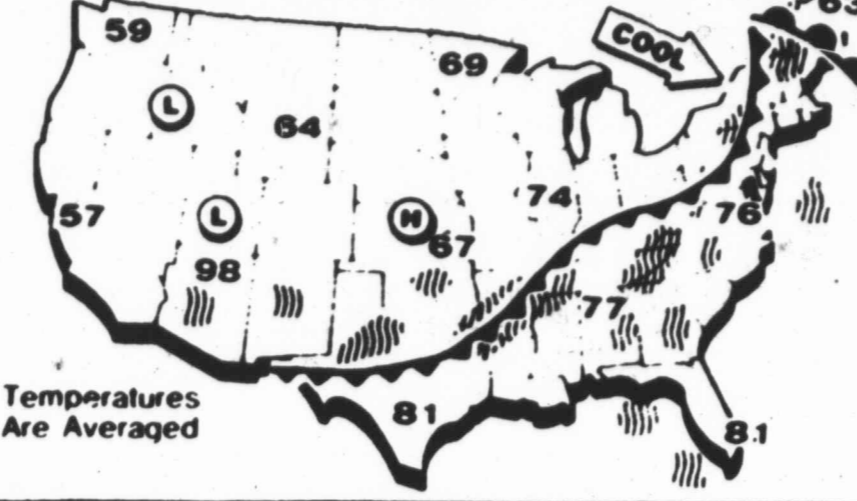

On Wednesday, a tornado swept through the Berkshire Mountain town of North Adams, Mass., ripping an 8-by-50-foot section off the roof of a machine factory. There were no injuries reported.

Today's high temperatures will range from the 80s in the northern states to the 70s along the northern Pacific Coast and 90s in the southern half of the country, the National Weather Service said.

Forecasters said the desert Southwest and inland California valleys could expect the mercury to range from 100 to 110 degrees.

West Texas: Partly cloudy tonight and Friday with widely scattered thunderstorms extreme southwest tonight. Lows tonight lower 60s Panhandle to mid 70s extreme south except near 60 mountains. Highs Friday lower 90s north to mid 90s south to near 100 Big Bend valleys.

Woman killed in explosion

GRAPVINE (AP) — A 31-year-old woman was killed as she carried powdered explosives and blasting caps to a remote construction site near the Dallas-Fort Worth Airport, officials say.

The victim, Karen Wheat Sams, had been under psychiatric care recently, but her death Wednesday is not considered a suicide, said Grapevine Police Sgt. Don Armstrong.

"We think it was an accident she got killed. The explosives she was dealing with are very volatile and an accident is not unusual if the person handling them is not trained. We are very interested in what happened," Armstrong said.

Her body was found after a construction worker found a Volkswagen filled with explosives shortly after 10:30 a.m. at a gravel pit near the intersection of Texas 121 and Texas 126 in Grapevine.

Officials said they had not determined where the woman obtained the explosives or why she was at the construction site.

Police found two pounds of a powdered industrial explosive and several electronic blasting caps in the car, which was undamaged.

The car's battery had been removed and carried about 75 yards away, indicating she planned to use it to spark some blasting caps, officials said.

Police said the woman had no particular pattern of employment, although it was believed she worked one day last week for an area construction company.

millionaire lawyer from Austin." Gramm was an economics professor at Texas A&M University in College Station before he ran for the House six years ago.

One substantial difference, he said, is in their approach to handling the federal budget deficit. Gramm said he is in favor of cutting spending; he claims Doggett wants to raise taxes.

Gramm, who used commercials picturing him with Reagan during his campaign for the Republican nomination, generally praised the administration that rewarded him with a seat on the powerful House budget committee for switching parties. And despite the oil bust and the two-year drought in West Texas, he thinks the Reagan slogan, "Are you better off now than you were four years ago?" won't hurt him.

"Even with the problems in agriculture, even with the oil glut, most Texans feel we (the Republican party under the direction of Reagan) are going in the right direction," Gramm said.

He endorsed Reagan's supply-side economics and credited the current administration with lowering the inflation rate, tightening eligibility requirements for federal welfare programs like Aid to Families with Dependent Children and creating 7 million jobs. "When did (House Speaker) Tip O'Neill ever create any jobs?" he asked.

O'Neill and House Democratic leaders held out on approving administration requests on bills in early 1983 until Reagan agreed to a jobs training program.

But although Gramm said he was "proud to be running with Reagan," he was quick to say he also differed with the president on some issues, including the Simpson-Mazzoli immigration bill and agricultural issues.

The Carter administration, Gramm said, didn't have a federal agriculture program, and "they haven't done a lot better in this administration. We've spent $20 billion and there is no prosperity on the farm."

The answer, he said, is better supply management and support of foreign trade markets for U.S. agricultural commodities. And although he said he was unaware of efforts by local farmers and Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Stamford, to make an exception to Federal Crop Insurance Corp. planting requirements for West Texas farmers who feared the loss of topsoil in dry planting, Gramm said he followed Stenholm's lead on most agricultural issues.

Dawson County Judge Glenn White put his political experience to use when he delivered a speech to the cow before he sat down and got to work. "I'm an understanding person," he told the cow. "But I won't be understanding if you switch sides." The other judges laughed, said they heard the cow was a bond jumper, and that his Hart, Mondale's main opponent for the presidential nomination. The steam went out of Hart's challenge Wednesday when Hart said he'd join a Mondale ticket if asked. He wasn't.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, who also campaigned against Mondale in the primaries, said of Mondale's decision to select Ms. Ferraro, "I must say, overall, I'm quite excited about this new direction."

A Ferraro partisan had suggested that Mondale seemed ready to take a gamble with his vice presidential choice, and a new poll hints at the potential new danger for him in his uphill race against President Reagan.

An ABC-Washington Post poll of registered Democrats indicated the presence of a woman on the ticket could be a wash: 15 percent of those surveyed said they would be more likely to vote for Mondale, while 15 percent were less likely to.

The poll, conducted from last Thursday to last Sunday, shows Reagan leading Mondale by 51 percent to 44 percent. A total of 1,005 people were interviewed.

Until the last moment, Mayor Dianne Feinstein of San Francisco was a possible choice if a woman were the nominee. When she learned it would not be her — Mondale called those not selected — she said she'd be "delighted" if it were Ms. Ferraro.

Among others on a final list of possible running mates were Mayor Tom Bradley of Los Angeles, a black, Mayor Henry Cisneros of San Antonio, Tex., a hispanic, and Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts.

VP choice shows Mondale's pluck

At this morning's writing, confirmation has not arrived that Walter Mondale will break new ground in naming a woman as running mate on the November presidential Democratic ticket. That is, Mondale hasn't uttered the words, but solid sources say Rep. Geraldine Ferraro is the choice.

Mondale deserves praise for, as Mrs. Ferraro put it, taking down the "White Males Only Need Apply" sign at the White House gate. The choice of a female vice president comes in the face of a national poll that reports no better than break even acceptance of a woman running mate. An ABC-Post poll of registered Democrats indicates a female on the ticket would make 15 percent of those surveyed more likely to vote for Mondale, and 15 percent less likely to.

That's not the kind of overwhelming mandate that makes the choice of Mrs. Ferraro an easy one. Mondale — and the party — now must warm the American public to this novel idea, while simultaneously establishing Mrs. Ferraro on her political merits. It's a task twice as tough as a male running mate would require. But if it's successful, it will be well worth the effort, both for Mondale's chances of election and for the precedent it establishes that the top political spots are truly open to all. Mondale is willing to take political risks in what he knows is an uphill battle to unseat President Ronald Reagan. The Fall campaign is shaping up as a scrappy one.

The whole truth

There was a bit of a scandal at The New Yorker magazine. It appears one of their writers, Alastair Reid, admitted to a Wall Street Journal reporter that he had created composite characters, rearranged scenes and fabricated dialogue for nonfiction pieces he had written over the past 25 years.

This surprised many people in the journalistic world because the New Yorker has the foremost reputation for meticulously checking facts, even those in poems and short stories.

Mr. Reid justified his method of writing nonfiction by saying that when he played with facts he was creating a reality that was more accurate than what actually took place. Bill Shawn, his editor, defended Mr. Reid.

While not wanting to judge the New Yorker one way or the other, I thought the reader might be interested in how this column deals with facts and the standards applied before it gets into print.

My highly paid staff consists of my assistant, Cathy Cray, and an eight-person fact-checking team who work on the floor just below me.

When I write a column it is immediately sent down to the fact-checking office to make sure everything I have said is true.

Last week, for example, I wrote a piece saying that Walter Mondale interviewed me to be his vice president. One of the checkers called Mr. Mondale to verify if it was true. Mr. Mondale, who has interviewed so many people for the job, was afraid to admit he couldn't remember if he had or hadn't. So he told my checker he probably had, and therefore she let the column go through.

On many occasions I have written about private meetings between President Reagan and various members of the White House staff, quoting complete conversations that took place in the Oval Office.

Whenever one of the checkers calls me on this I say, "If you don't believe me why don't you call the White House?"

When the checker does call the president's press secretary, he is invariably told, "I have no comment on that," which is just as good as a confirmation as far as Washington is concerned.

The least of my problems has to do with the CIA, which will never confirm or deny a story no matter how wild it is. Therefore, while I insist every fact in a CIA column is true, and since the Agency won't say otherwise, the fact-checkers have no choice but to permit the piece to stand as it is.

The Pentagon, on the other hand, will deny everything I write. Once I had a fight with one of the fact-checkers because I said that the military was buying $7.50 hammers for $495. A red flag immediately went up, and the checker came charging upstairs yelling, "Who are you trying to kid? Nobody is going to pay $495 for a $7.50 hammer." I calmly dialed A. Ernest Fitzgerald at the Pentagon, who not only confirmed it, but gave me a list of other tools that cost the taxpayer millions of dollars more than they were worth. Since then I've never had a problem with my fact-checkers over any story I've written about waste in the military.

Recently I wrote a column about talking to God, who angrily refuted President Reagan's contention that God has been driven out of the public schools. One of the more skeptical checkers said he doubted I had spoken to God. I told him the next time he went to church to ask Him. The checker came back on Monday morning and apologized. He said, "I read the column to God and he admitted he did talk to you, and was only disappointed you didn't use the full text of His remarks in the article."

The only reason I am pointing out how vigorous we are in making sure that all the facts in my column are correct is not to gloat over the New Yorker embarrassment, but to assure the reader that everything he or she reads in my column is checked and double-checked before it is disseminated to the public.

If I ever had to resort to fabricating dialogue or playing loose with the truth, I would never be able to look at myself in the mirror in the morning again.

Kids set for spaced-out program

WASHINGTON — In a dramatic bid to keep America ahead in the high-tech race, President Reagan has approved a program that he hopes will shake young Americans out of the educational doldrums and focus their attention on technological challenges.

He wants to introduce children to the Space Age by encouraging them to become young astronauts. One of them will probably be invited as an observer on a future space flight.

The plan is to form "Young Astronaut" units in neighborhoods across the country. Children will be eligible to enroll as early as age 6, with the right to wear astronaut insignias and participate in National Aeronautics and Space Administration activities. The intention is to have them work closely with their schools to acquire technical skills that will prepare them for the high-tech age.

The program will be sponsored by the National Space Institute, with NASA's close cooperation. The president will call upon local businesses, schools, churches, science centers, youth clubs and community organizations to support the Young Astronaut units.

I played a modest role in getting "Operation Liftoff" as the program is called, off the ground. With a columnist's effrontery, I called on Reagan privately last October to add another idea to the array of unsought suggestions before every president.

I presented him with evidence that the quality of education in the United States is declining at the same time that foreign competition is increasing. I pointed out that there is a serious shortage in most states of math and science teachers, that American students suffer in comparison with those in other industrialized nations.

Then I left a memo with the president urging a program "big in scope and dramatic in impact" yet "easy to understand and simple to carry out." I suggested forming a Young Astronaut organization.

I argued in the memo: "American's young people are fascinated with space. They swarm to movie theaters to watch interplanetary adventure; they play space games on video sets. The opportunity to become young astronauts — with official credentials and insignias — should attract youngsters, stir their imaginations and stimulate their spirit of adventure. It might help lift their gaze from video games to real high-technology and fix their eyes on the stars."

The president was more than polite; he listened with genuine interest. He saw the need, he said, to see beyond today's limited horizon. He has a deep concern about tomorrow, and is placing new emphasis on long-range planning. The other day, he telephoned me to say that he was adopting my idea. I hope the Young Astronaut program will be ready to launch when school starts in September.

FEUD OF THE WEEK: The Pentagon and the State Department don't always agree, but they find themselves teamed against the Commerce and Treasury departments and the office of the U.S. trade representative on the delicate matter of "offsets" for countries that agree to buy U.S. weapons.

In a word, offsets are bribes to weapons purchasers: If they'll buy our weapons, we'll let them produce parts of the weapons themselves or give them other trade concessions.

Obviously, these arrangements give subsidies to foreign manufacturers that wind up competing with U.S. industries. The Pentagon and Foggy Bottom feel this is a small price to pay for ensuring that our allies are properly armed. Commerce, Treasury and the trade representative don't like them a bit.

A prime example of the problem is the recent U.S. agreement to guarantee $300 million in offset investments to the Netherlands in exchange for the Dutch government's acceptance of U.S. air-defense missiles. The hope is that the offset deal will stifle Dutch opposition to the deployment of nuclear missiles in the Netherlands.

A recent General Accounting Office study shows the extent of the offset problem. The GAO found that for $15 billion worth of foreign arms sales, there were about $9.5 billion in offset agreements.

"The primary concern ... in providing foreign military sales assistance and allowing offsets," the GAO explained, "is the adverse impact this may have on the U.S. industrial base and U.S. jobs."

In other words, American taxpayers may wind up paying for both the weapons and the subsidies that let our allies compete with U.S. industry.

Chrysler president Lee Iacocca's friends urged him to go to Minnesota for the vice-presidential selection derby staged by Walter Mondale. Though Mondale had privately invited Iacocca to join the parade, the auto executive let it be known that he would come only if Mondale would indicate Iacocca was his first choice.

Around The Rim

1-800-555...

Hello, my name is Ma'am, what is your number? I don't have a number? Well, I can't wait on you unless you have a number. Please take a number and wait in line. But, I'm the only person here. Sorry, but I ... Yeah, I know, I know. Take a number. I'll get a number. I've got a number!

Number 107. I'm now waiting on number 107. Hi, it's me again. I'm ... Your number, ma'am. My number is 107. 107!!! Now, Now. Aren't we getting touchy? Is there something I can do for you?

Well, this new machine I bought doesn't work and.... Here, fill these forms out in triplicate and bring them back in 22 minutes.

What? Forget it; just forget it. Nowadays, everything seems to deal with numbers: Telephone, height, weight, address, dates, driver's license, social security, insurance policy and serial numbers.

If a person fills out any type of form they will probably end up using several numbers. Everybody wants to know your checking account numbers, loan account numbers, charge account numbers, home phone number, work phone number, address, social security number, driver's license number and various other numbers. It's like a quiz to see how many numbers you know. If you don't know enough, do you flunk?

I've always wonder what would happen if a person put "it does not apply" in 99 percent of the blanks. It would totally confuse the system. Not everyone has a driver's license or home phone. Some people pay cash for everything they buy so they may not have a checking, loan or charge accounts.

If most people are like me they can't even remember a fourth of the numbers that are required on the form. It takes me two hours to fill out any form because I have to dig through my wallet for every number. However, I can remember phone numbers that I've heard once four months ago and have never used.

Numbers seem to be everywhere. In big universities, students are listed as numbers. I don't think I would like to be known as number 54878, or would like to date someone known as 36581. For some reason, numbers just aren't that romantic.

If the number system keeps going like it is, I wouldn't be surprised if the Smiths and Jones didn't change their names to One and Two.

Addresses

In Washington: RONALD REAGAN, President of the United States, White House, Washington, D.C. 20500. CHARLES STENHOLM, Congressman, 17th Texas District, 1232 Longworth Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20515.

Afterlife an important belief

DEAR DR. GRAHAM: What difference does it make whether or not we believe in life after death? As far as I am concerned, the important thing is how we live right now, not some future life that may not even exist. — T.V.

DEAR T.V.: Imagine for a moment that you really knew — beyond a shadow of doubt — that this life was not the end, but that there was, in fact, life after death. I know you do not believe that at present — but if you did, what difference would it make in your life?

Let me suggest two ways in which your life would be different (although I could mention many more). In the first place, you would take this life much more seriously. If this life is all there is, then we can live any way we want to (as you are doing). But when we know this life is not all, we know it has meaning and purpose to it, and our goal in life should be to discover God's will for us and then do it.

Second, however, there are many things in life you would take less seriously. Many people, for example, spend all their lives preoccupied and worried about material things, or fame, or security, or power, or many other things. But when you realize this life is not all, and that all those things will pass away, then you will put them in the right perspective. As Jesus said, "Is not life more important than food, and the body more important than clothes? ... Seek first his kingdom and his righteousness"

(Matthew 6:25, 33).

Child safety program to be presented

Increased emphasis has been placed on child protection during the last few years. One way to protect children is by warning them of unsafe situations and what to do when they occur.

To help parents in this task, the Big Spring Crime Prevention Department — under the direction of Sgt. Fred Pace — will present a child safety program in the elementary schools this fall. The materials used in the program will be furnished by the National Child Safety Council, a national non-profit organization.

Children from kindergarten to sixth grade will receive safety manuals covering all areas of education at each age level. Safety information will include: crossing streets, water safety, guns, poisons, bike and school ground safety, electricity and storm safety, dangerous strangers and molesters.

Pace will visit classrooms to discuss "Good Guys and Bad Guys" and that bad guys are not always strangers. Information on how to protect children from abduction is available to parents.

Other methods of protecting children from were listed in the July 1983 issue of Reader's Digest:

- Tell youngsters that no one — not even people in authority — should touch them in intimate ways.

- Insist that schools, camps and other organizations do thorough background checks on anyone who will be working with your child.

- If the child has negative feelings about a teacher or some other authority figure, explore why he feels this way.

- Learn to recognize the signs that a child may have been assaulted: chronic unexplained physical complaints, loss of appetite, disturbed sleep, mood change and sudden sexually focused behavior.

- Believe your child if he says he has been assaulted. Children seldom lie about molestation.

Dear Abby

Husband finds he didn't know what he had

DEAR ABBY: I believe you were a bit too polite in your reply to "Pittsburgh Pete," who said, "I'm engaged to marry a girl who is 'dumb,' but that's OK with me because she knows she's dumb, so she keeps her mouth shut."

It's obvious that this "girl" is about to marry an egotist who feels he is much too good for her. Chances are that he will remind her of this constantly while never allowing her to be an equal partner. I worry about any woman who winds up with a man with such a sexist attitude toward marriage and family.

I know, Abby. I was there. But I was the guilty party. My first wife was no dumb bunny by anybody's standards, but I believed myself so smart that for years I failed to recognize her intelligence. My superior sexist attitude prevailed. By the time I realized her abilities, her feelings toward me had changed, and it was too late to show her that I considered her an equal partner.

I married again. My wife is as smart as I and provides a fresh challenge every day. Often I find it difficult to keep up with her. We each have different talents and each can defer to the other in the other's particular area of expertise. We still have our differences that result in battles — verbal, not physical — but we know we are battling an equal.

"Pittsburgh Pete" said his fiancée knows she's dumb so she keeps her mouth shut. Let's hope if she is smart enough to realize she may have some limitations, she is smart enough to understand what marriage to Pete will be like.

TEXAS CITY EDITOR
DEAR EDITOR: If she's smart enough to foresee what marriage to "Pittsburgh Pete" will be like, she won't marry him.

Dr. Donohue

Home monitoring

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: For many years (13) I was a diabetic who had real trouble keeping my blood sugar in check. Now for the first time I am using home monitoring with the newer techniques. Now for the first time in 13 years I have been able to keep close control and know when I am either too high or too low. I know when I have to up my insulin or cut back on it. Please, let others know about these advances, will you? —T.C.B.

Be happy to. Some have called home glucose monitoring the greatest advance in treatment of diabetes since the discovery of insulin, itself. Until recently, diabetics had to check their urine for sugar levels in order to stay in control of their blood sugar. Everyone realized that this was not the best way to go about this. Yet it was convenient, and it did get the job done.

Now diabetics are able to have a direct reading of their blood sugar levels at home. A small drop of blood obtained by a finger prick is placed on a special test strip. The color change on the strip in reaction to the blood is compared to the matching color on a chart that indicates blood levels.

And there is a more sensitive test available. I don't know whether this is the technique you are using. In this test, the blood-exposed strip is put into a photometer, a machine that can translate the color change into very accurate blood sugar levels. This knowledge permits precise knowledge of levels to guide in insulin dosage adjustments. For example, this allows the diabetic to find out the effect of exercises on his blood sugar level. Many diabetics, like yourself are using home glucose monitoring kits. They are, as you say, especially helpful for those who find it hard to stay in control normally.

Area rain puts a damper on heat

While Big Spring got enough rain Wednesday night to wet the sidewalks, dampen the grass and put a dent in the heat, persons to the north of the city were reporting up to a half-inch of rain.

Larry Shaw reported from his farm in the Knott area that he received about .1 of an inch of rain last night. However, Shaw said he drove over to the Brown community, about five miles northwest of Knott, and checked a rain-gauge which measured about a half-inch of rain.

Driving further north, between Flower Grove and Lenorah, Shaw said that the water was standing in the fields, an indication the area had received a heavier rainfall.

Shaw was also in Stanton Wednesday night and said that area didn't receive any rain.

Cathy Bayes, an employee of the Knott Co-Op Gin in West Knott, said farmers checking in at the gin this morning were reporting .2 of an inch of rain.

The official rainfall count at the Big Spring Experiment Station, located north of Big Spring on the I-20 service road, was .08 of an inch, Nell Rogers, secretary, said this morning. That brings the official total to 1.85 inches. Normal for this time of year is 9.55 inches. Residents in the city's east and southwest sections were reporting only a trace of rain this morning.

The rain was the result of a cool front which stalled over the area. Today's forecast calls for a 20 percent chance of more rain, highs in the low 90s and easterly winds, 5 to 15 miles per hour.

Isolated evening thunderstorms are in the forecast for tonight with lows in the upper 60s.

By Friday, look for highs in the mid 90s and southerly winds, 10 to 20 miles per hour.

FW bridge collapses; one injured

FORT WORTH (AP) — A woman "missed being killed by a foot" when a 100-foot-long section of a bridge over Interstate 20 on the city's south side collapsed and partially buried a car, state highway officials say.

Eldora Caffey of Fort Worth was taken to a hospital where she was treated for cuts and bruises on her hands and face after the accident about noon Wednesday.

Tons of concrete and asphalt hit Mrs. Caffey's late-model Chevrolet behind the driver's seat, leaving the back part of the auto crushed to about a foot high, witnesses said.

"She didn't have much to say other than she was lucky," said Fort Worth police officer Jim Hackney, who arrived at the scene shortly after the accident. "She kept saying over and over she couldn't believe she was alive."

Half of the bridge collapsed seconds after a water tanker weighing 75,000 pounds broke away from a tractor-trailer on the freeway and careened into two foundation columns for the Campus Drive bridge, authorities said.

"It's a miracle she was the only one driving under that bridge," state highway safety officer Howard Hill said.

The debris covered the two west-bound lanes of the interstate under the bridge.

"It was like slow motion," said Carol Solberg of Arlington, who was in a car behind Ms. Caffey's when the overpass fell. "It just went from the right to the left, just like someone had just laid the overpass down from right to left, piece by piece, like a ribbon falling. It just kind of rolled down."

The westbound lanes of the freeway were closed and traffic was backed up for half a mile.

Authorities said the tractor-trailer rig owned by SCC Equipment Co. of Dallas was in front of Ms. Caffey's car when the rig's trailer, carrying a load of water, broke loose and struck a bridge support.

The driver of the truck, Ronald Pfitzner of Fort Worth, was not injured.

"He was scared to death," Hackney said. "He looked back, the bridge crashed down, and then he saw there was a car under the bridge. He panicked."

Pfitzner and some bystanders ran back to the bridge and pulled Mrs. Caffey from the car. The door was pulled off, the windshield shattered, and the back end crushed, officials said.

Hill said it would cost about $500,000 to repair and that the bridge might not be fully reopened for eight to 12 months.

The bridge was built in 1969 and was inspected about six months ago, police said. It was to be rebuilt in 1985 as part of the I-20 expansion.

The truck was traveling about 55 mph, said Ms. Solberg.

Sure shot rides again!

Kelly Rogers recently attended the Oklahoma State Trapshooting Championships at El Reno, July 4-8 and the trip was a successful one as most of Rogers' competitions are.

Rogers brought back four championships. They included the Class A title won in preliminary doubles open competition where Rogers scored 98 out of a possible 100.

He qualified for Class AA or the highest form of doubles competition. Rogers responded by notching 200 of a possible 200, tying for top honors with three other shooters. In a shootout, Rogers finished in second place. Afterward, Rogers teamed up with father Jerry for the parent-child crown with a score of 197 out of a possible 200.

In the handicap championship, Rogers shot 97 of 100 targets from almost 27 yards, thus winning the long yardage trophy as well.

And in the race for the over all out of state championship, Kelly was runnerup with a score of 956 out of a possible perfect 1,000.

Between 75 and 80 squads of five shooters each attended the Oklahoma event, bringing the total of registered participating shooters to near 400.

In fishing circles, Lake E.V. Spence has been the area's hot spot for record fishing.

Jerry Stanaford of Midland reeled in a 30-pound, one-ounce striper on June 19, topping by a single ounce the previous record striper caught in a net by Texas Department of Parks and Wildlife biologists in April 1978.

It also bettered the 29-pound record by a fisherman, set by Richard Bohanon of Robert Lee when he took a striper off his trot line last year. It also eclipsed the previous best on rod and reel set by Howard Sorey in May 1983 when he caught a 28-pound, one-ounce striper.

NL battles AL tonight

All-Stars edge San Angelo

By STEVE BELVIN
Staff Writer

The Big Spring Junior League All-Stars rallied for six runs during a drizzling rain storm in the fourth inning and held on to a 12-9 victory over San Angelo in District tournament play Wednesday night at the Roy Anderson Complex.

The win moves Big Spring closer to a berth in the Regional Tournament in Lubbock. If Big Spring can hand San Angelo its second defeat tonight, the All-Stars will advance to the regional level. If San Angelo wins the 8 p.m. tilt then a deciding contest will be played Friday night.

At times it seemed the contest would be stopped by the blowing rain, but managers and officials decided to keep on playing. All during this time loyal Big Spring supporters braved the uncommon West Texas element to cheer their team to victory.

The big Big Spring fourth inning came with San Angelo holding a 3-2 lead. Big Spring sent 12 batters to the plate in the inning and ironically got only two hits — a bunt single by Kurt Henry and another single base rap by third baseman Jason Phillips. Phillips had a rough night fielding, committing six errors. But he made up for some of his miscues by getting two hits, scoring two runs and driving in a run.

San Angelo was its own worst enemy in the fourth. Pitcher John Montgomery and Manuel Grimildo walked five batters while their teammates committed two errors.

Montgomery took the loss in going three-and-two-third innings. He walked five and allowed six runs on four hits.

Big Spring curveballer Tim Gutterrez went the distance in picking up the win. His control was erratic at times (eight walks), but he managed to pitch his way out of bases loaded jams in the second and sixth innings. The 13-year-old right-hander allowed seven hits and struck out 10.

Big Spring scored a run in the second inning when Phillips and Chris Crowover doubled and in the third inning and John Covington doubled and scored when Gutterrez reached base on an error.

Big Spring held a seemingly comfortable 8-3 lead going into the top of the fifth inning but San Angelo struck for three runs when Thomas Emmons hit an inside-the-park homer that cut the lead to 8-6, but that was as close as San Angelo got the remainder of the way.

East stars beat West team, 8-7

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Billy Beane's only hit of the night — a two-run, game-winning homer in the bottom of the ninth — was enough to earn the Jackson Mets star the Most Valuable Player award of the Texas League All-Star Game.

Beane's home run gave the East an 8-7 victory over the West in the Wednesday night classic.

The winning pitcher was Steve Kordish of Tulsa, while Ted Higuera of El Paso absorbed the loss before a crowd of 4,824.

MIDLAND NORTH CENTRAL 14,
LAMESA 0

In action at the District Little League Tournament another Midland team displayed a strong pitching attack as North Central blanked Lamesa 14-0 behind the one-hit pitching of John Dickenson. Lamesa's only hit came in the first inning by Lavert Hawkins.

Dickenson faced 20 batters — two over the minimum for a six inning game. He fanned seven, walked one and one runner reached base on an error.

Will Sowders paced Midland's hitting attack with two doubles and a single.

BIG SPRING INTERNATIONAL 8, BIG SPRING TEXAS 2
Rounding out Little League action, Big Spring International won its second game of the tournament with a 8-2 victory over The Big Spring Texas League All-Stars.

It was the Texas All-Stars' first game of the tourney while the Internationals are still undefeated. They defeated Coahoma 7-4 in the tourney opener.

Tonight the Big Spring National and American All-Stars do battle at 8 at the National League Park.

SUE VAN HOOSER

Queens ink high scoring Illinois star

Sue Van Hooser of Eldorado, Illinois is the latest talent to sign a basketball scholarship agreement with Howard College and Hawk Queens coach Don Stevens.

The 6-1 post player is the all-time scoring leader at Eldorado High School with 1,404 points in four years — three as a starter. She also holds the single season record for the EHS Lady Eagles with 637 and her 44 points in one contest is a record as well. During her four years EHS went 97-21 with two state tournament appearances that finished with fourth and third places respectively.

Stevens calls Van Hooser a "top notch prospect and a true high school All-Star." Van Hooser is participating in several All-Star games in the Illinois and Missouri areas this summer. "She will really boost our inside power," added Stevens.

In her three years as a starter for Eldorado, Van Hooser claimed a bevy of awards including MVP honors for All-Area, Southern Illinois All-State and her high school. The Associated Press and United Press International named Van Hooser first team All-Star.

During her final year at EHS Van Hooser averaged 22 points, 10 rebounds and four assists per game. She scored at a 13 and 14.3 clip while rebounding 10 and 11 per game her first two years as a varsity starter.

Van Hooser will be joining an HC program that went 24-9 in 1983-84 including winning 10 straight before being derailed in the semifinals of the regional tournament.
