Texas issues face Congress

By WILLIAM GARLAND
Harte-Hanks Washington Bureau
WASHINGTON - As Congress returns to work Tuesday, plenty of Texas' interests will be stacked on the political table to be won or lost in the 1986 session.

Topping the agenda — and the concerns of many Texans — will be tax reform and deficit reduction.

Every taxpayer could be affected by changes in the tax code if Congress passes final legislation this year. The current 14 tax brackets would be reduced to four, while many current tax advantages would be changed or eliminated.

For the state's economy as a whole, the Texas oil and gas industry will be most at risk as tax reform is examined in the Senate following successful House passage of the bill late last year.

Oil and gas producers heaved a collective and premature sigh of relief when it appeared the bill would die in the House last December. They now will lobby hard and watch closely as the bill goes through the Senate Finance Committee next month on the way to a likely vote in the Senate.

The industry stands to lose about $4 billion over five years — by reduction and elimination of oil and gas tax incentives especially important to independent producers and royalty owners — if Congress enacts the measure passed by the House. Drilling cutbacks in Texas and other states, affecting state tax income and local economies, already have been blamed in part on uncertainty over future tax provisions.

Texas state and local governments may stand to lose most from the effects of deficit reduction, unless federal courts throw out the newly-implemented Gramm-

Rudman-Hollings legislation that aims to eliminate the federal deficit by 1991.

A research arm of the National Conference of State Legislatures and the National Governors Association estimated that Texas could lose $304.8 million in fiscal 1987 because of cutbacks under the measure. Those reductions would hit such areas as highway construction and maintenance, urban development, general revenue sharing and education, according to the research group.

Reagan will submit the administration's budget for fiscal 1987 on Feb. 3 — including more than $50 billion in spending cuts — and it will then be up to Congress to pass the reductions.

Another area at risk for the state's economy under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings proposal will be agriculture. The recently-passed

Record warmth forecast

Forecast high temperatures in the 80s today should break a record here as an unseasonable warm spell continues.

The National Weather Service predicted this morning a high temperature in the low 80s. The record high temperature for this date is 74 degrees set in 1972, according to statistics from the U.S. Agricultural Research Service.

Average high temperature for this time of year is 57 degrees; average low is 28, much cooler than tonight's forecast low in the lower 40s.

Increasing cloudiness and slightly cooler temperatures are expected across Texas Tuesday, but, forecasters say, the temperatures will not drop enough to make Texans believe winter has returned. Highs Tuesday will be about 5-10 degrees cooler than those expected today. Readings will be mostly in the 60s and 70s.

Forecast for Big Spring for Tuesday calls for a high of 80 degrees and above normal temperatures through Friday.

The increasing cloudiness in the state will begin tonight after another day of record-breaking warm temperatures. Forecasters said readings today would reach into the 80s across

Hunger report makes residents indignant

VERNON — Retired ranch hand Bryan Standlee says "nothing has ever kicked up as much dust" in Wilbarger County as the announcement that it's a place where people go hungry.

A report compiled by a Harvard-based research group and released Tuesday by the Harvard University School of Public Health and Physicians Task Force on Hunger named Wilbarger as one of 150 "hunger counties" across the United States.

Texas has 29 hunger counties, the report said.

Hunger counties are those where 20 percent or more of the residents live below poverty level but at least one-third of the eligible participants don't receive food stamps, the report said.

"That report made us mad. This is not a hungry county. This is not a poor county," Standlee said. "I'd have to be pretty darn hungry to get on food stamps."

Standlee's sentiments are reflective of those of many of the 16,000 residents of the largely rural county in far north central Texas.

While they acknowledge that there are people who need help, and some who could use more to eat, they resent being labeled a "hunger county."

"We may not live in as nice a house as some other people, but we're not going hungry," Mary Fanner said as she waited for a ride to work in front of her small home in a low-income neighborhood in Vernon.

Residents complain that the report ignored their efforts at taking care of their own.

"Here we are doing all of this stuff here. We think we are doing a great job. We are trying to provide any program that we can," Wilbarger County Judge Bob Arnold told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

"And then, all of a sudden, your name is on a list that says there are a bunch of hungry people here. We have more human services providers than you can shake a stick at."

Besides food stamps, food programs offered in Wilbarger County include the Meals-on-Wheels program that serves 62 people daily with another 10 to 12 on a waiting list; Red Cross; a meals program provided by the local senior citizens group; and free and reduced lunch and breakfast programs at the school that serve about 870 students daily.

The county also has a federal commodities subsidy program that provides cheese, butter and dried foods to about 1,000 people monthly; food closets provided by churches and the ministerial alliance; the Women, Infants and Children's Program; and the Salvation Army.

In addition, some private home-bound programs serve some households.

"If someone needs help, all they have to do is ask," Arnold said.

Protesters rally against abortion

DALLAS (AP) — The head of a statewide anti-abortion organization told 2,000 protesters they are "winning ground" in the abortion controversy as the group marked the anniversary of the 1973 Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion.

"We're winning the war of public opinion and we're going to turn this thing around," said Bill Price, president of the Texas Coalition for Life.

Anti-abortion protesters gathered Sunday at a central Dallas park to commemorate Sanctity of Life Day proclaimed by President Reagan, and to observe the anniversary of the Jan. 22, 1973, Supreme Court decision legalizing abortions.

"There's strength in numbers," said Linda Trammell, a member of the Collin County Right To Life Group. "There are a lot of us that believe in sanctity of life, contrary to popular opinion. The sky is beautiful and that makes us come alive."

The demonstration ended with a march to Presbyterian Hospital in north Dallas, during which protesters carried 1,300 plywood crosses. Price said the crosses symbolized abortions performed at the hospital since 1973.

Protesters chanted "abortion is murder," and sang religious songs while gathered outside yellow cords that roped off the hospital's grounds. Dallas police had to turn away some protesters as they began marching up one of the hospital's driveways.

The hospital had been targeted by the group last year, but declined to change its abortion policies despite threats of continued protests at the facility.

As protesters marched to the hospital Sunday, four or five pro-choice demonstrators occasionally debated with the anti-abortionists.

"I don't think they influence public policy," said Kurt Albach, a pro-choice demonstrator. "For the numbers they have here, they are still in a minority. I don't think Americans approve of their sort of fanaticism."

The rally was one of several held across the nation marking the Roe vs. Wade decision that legalized abortions. Texas rallies were held in Fort Worth and Tyler Sunday, and in Amarillo, Austin and Beaumont on Saturday.

Miss February

Playboy centerfold puts Texan in controversial spotlight gloss, airbrushed, fold-out fairy tale. It has a happy ending and a sad ending, depending on your viewpoint of young women appearing without clothes in national magazines.

It's the story of Julie McCullough, a pretty young woman with kid-sister good looks who grew up in the small community of Allen, 26 miles north of Dallas.

Like many attractive girls from small towns across Texas, she aspired to be a model. But throughout most of her teens she worked primarily as a supermarket checkout clerk.

McCullough has escaped obscurity by baring all in Playboy magazine. She first appeared last February on the cover of the glossy men's magazine, which featured a special pictorial story on the "Girls of Texas." This month she appears again — but this time as Miss February, one of 12 women featured each year as a Playboy centerfold.

The exposure has launched McCullough's career and earned her a dollop of local notoriety. Her schedule is now booked with lucrative fashion shoots, promotions and travel. But the memories of the ruckus raised in her hometown one year ago are still fresh for McCullough, who has since moved from Allen to Plano.

For a small-but-vocal group in the conservative Christian community in Allen and the surrounding area, her initial appearance in Playboy was startling. The thought of one of their own children appearing in such a magazine was mortifying, real Sodom and Gomorrah.

McCullough recalls that after the "Girls of Texas" pictorial appeared, she received a storm of mail. Much of it from men propositioning her. One man, who was smitten by her picture, wrote from prison. And for two jittery days, someone followed her around Collin County. Whoever it was never stopped to talk to her. The person just wrote threatening obscenities on the frosted windshield of her car.

Julie McCullough, Playboy magazine's Miss February smiles during a recent interview in Dallas. The Allen native's Playboy appearances have brought her a certain prestige, sundry modeling assignments and some criticism.

Then there was the shower of letters from conservative Christians, who wrote to say they were praying for her, or to let her know if she didn't change her ways she was surely headed for hellfire. "I got lots of Bible scriptures in the mail," McCullough recalls. "One said on the back, 'Ye shall repent your sins.' " "....maybe 30 out of 100 letters — was that kind of Christian thing," she says. The number of letters she received from scolding Christians is not something McCullough dwells on. The numbers that have counted for her are the measurements inscribed on her Playmate data sheet. "Rightly or wrongly, those numbers and a photogenic face have allowed McCullough to begin modeling.

The media had a field day with this story about McCullough. They love the high-gloss finish of her tale, the controversy that tinted the edges of the picture. The story made its way across the nation. If this latest pictorial is going to nettle some in Allen, the reaction hasn't started yet.

Indeed, the town may not have actually been as up in arms as it seemed back then. Looking back, Mayor Don Rodenbaugh now points out that Allen, a community of about 14,000 people, which has forever been in the shadow of Dallas, was suddenly getting its own dateline in the national media.

"In a small town, a mayor hears about what concerns people," says Rodenbaugh. "I sure get it if there is some trash blowing down the road or if a neighbor is making too much noise. I'm sure if anybody really felt (McCullough's Playboy appearance) was scandalous for Allen, I'd have heard about it."

He didn't, though. The 20 or so calls he received about the story all came from members of the media.

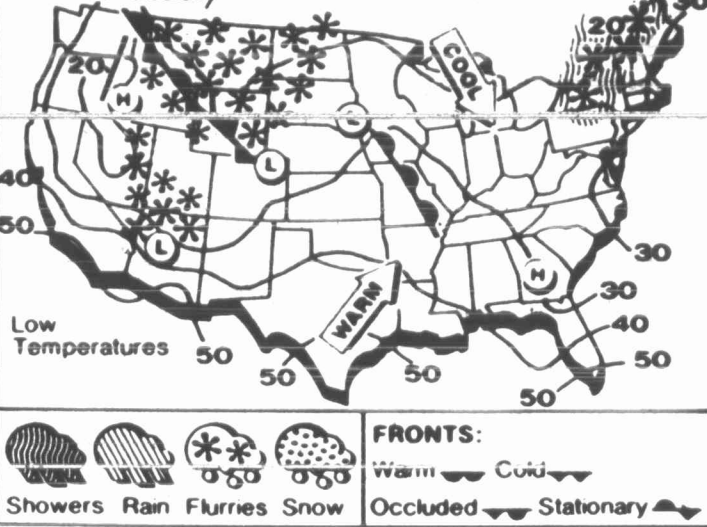

"I talked to some people in the school system and I asked, 'Did you ever have any problems with this student?'" Rodenbaugh recalls. "They said, 'No, she was a model student.' Then they laughed and said, 'We don't mean model in the Playboy sense.'"

The Rev. Fred Winslow, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Allen, recalls that to his surprise, one elderly townswoman spoke out to him in McCullough's defense, saying that on the things that counted, she was a fine girl.

"This particular magazine is not something I climb into the pulpit and rail against," explains Winslow. "The broader issues of pornography are something worthy of discussion, but I have no plans to preach on (McCullough's centerfold)."

Increasing cloudiness and slightly cooler temperatures are expected across Texas Tuesday, breaking the long bout of unseasonably warm temperatures.

But, forecasters say, the temperatures will not drop enough to make Texans believe winter has returned. Highs Tuesday will be about 5-10 degrees cooler than those expected today. Readings will be mostly in the 60s and 70s with a few areas in Northwest Texas to have highs in the 50s.

The increasing cloudiness will begin tonight after another day of record-breaking warm temperatures. Forecasters said readings today would reach into the 80s across portions of North Texas.

Dense fog was reported early today along lower sections of the Texas coast, prompting the National Weather Service to issue a travelers advisory for the Coastal Bend and the Lower Rio Grande Valley where visibility was reduced before dawn to between zero and one-eighth of a mile.

Elsewhere across the state, skies were mostly clear early today. Early morning temperatures were in the 40s and 50s except in the South Plains where readings dipped into the 30s and in the mountains of Southwest Texas where readings were in the 20s. Extremes ranged from 27 at Marfa to 57 at McAllen.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 37 at Amarillo, 43 at Wichita Falls, 41 at Fort Worth, 42 at Waco, 40 at Lufkin, 46 at Austin, 46 at San Antonio, 50 at Houston, 52 at Corpus Christi, 43 at San Angelo, 38 at Lubbock, 42 at Midland and 32 at El Paso.

Congress

1985 farm bill established federal price support levels for commodities for the next five years, but many analysts predict that further cuts in those levels will have to be made because of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

In the agriculture budget, cut-backs are also expected to be made in the Agriculture Extension Service for 1986.

The 4.3 percent reduction required in most federal agencies to comply with the deficit act in 1986 will be passed directly through to the extension service, according to Agriculture Department officials. The extension service now maintains local agriculture agents in every Texas county.

Gramm-Rudman-Hollings cut-backs might also affect Texas military interests, with across-the-board reductions in all the services. Navy officials have said they would put a high priority on continuing with homeporting plans for the Gulf Coast, however, where a major Navy battleship task force has been assigned to Corpus Christi later this decade. Several task force support ships also would go to a new Houston-Galveston base.

State government revenues might also be affected by the deficit reduction plan because of a delay in passage of a budget reconciliation bill that holds a compromise that divides disputed offshore oil and gas revenues with the federal government.

Under the compromise, Texas state government would receive an immediate $456 million in revenues that probably would go toward state public education.

Plea

The defense and state also began selecting jurors from a panel of 47 persons to hear the case of Lee Winchester, a former secretary in Justice of the Peace Lewis Heflin's office, who has been charged with misapplication of fiduciary property.

Salazar's plea bargain was reached this morning between District Attorney Rick Hamby and court-appointed attorney Robert Miller, who represents Salazar.

The sentencing took into account charges of unauthorized use of a motor vehicle for which Salazar was indicted by Deaf Smith County grand jurors in December, said Hamby.

Salazar was arrested in November 1984 and charged with aggravated sexual assault of a woman in her early 30's at a westside apartment complex.

Earlier, Salazar's attorney had made a motion to suppress a written confession he had allegedly given police after his arrest. Gregg overruled the motion.

This morning, Gregg overruled a motion by Winchester's attorney Wayne Basden to dismiss her grand jury indictment.

She was indicted in October for theft of more than $750 but less than $20,000.

The indictment contains 21 counts charging her with holding monies "as a fiduciary but not as a commercial bailee" and "in a manner that involved substantial risk of loss to those persons for whose benefit the property was held."

Basden argued that the indictment did not contain any definition of a fiduciary agreement the defendant allegedly held in her position as secretary in Heflin's office.

Robert Morris, assistant district attorney who is prosecuting the case, said the statute Winchester is charged with states persons who are acting in a fiduciary capacity but not as a commercial bailee may be tried under the law.

Hunger

Continued from page 1-A for the Department of Human Services, said that an average of 815 people in Wilbarger County receive food stamps every month. She said that more people are probably eligible, but there are many reasons they don't take them.

People in the rural counties are independent, she said. "We find that people in these rural counties are the last ones to apply for food stamps. They have food pantries and other programs that serve them, too," she said.

Social service agencies said they don't know of anyone who is hungry and not receiving some form of help.

But one person several residents mentioned in separate interviews as someone they thought could be hungry is Kathleen Arrant, a 61-year-old blind woman. Even Ms. Arrant, however, said that although she needs to move into a government housing, she is not hungry.

"(Meals-on-Wheels) brings me a hot meal. I'm happy with the food," she said. "I just definitely need a place to live."

Ms. Arrant supports herself, a 16-year-old granddaughter and the teen-ager's infant daughter on $330 a month Social Security, $75 a month Social Security Disability Insurance and $153 in food stamps.

Kathleen Hindman, director of the local Meals-on-Wheels program, said it is not uncommon to find people who will participate in that program but not seek food stamps or accept government commodities.

"Usually they are old. They have worked for themselves all of their lives and they can't see going on welfare.

Lesotho premier ousted

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Government radio in the African kingdom of Lesotho said today that the paramilitary force had ousted Prime Minister Leabua Jonathan and that Maj. Gen. Justin Lekhanya would rule as chairman of a military council.

The official radio in the mountain kingdom, which is completely surrounded by South Africa, said King Moshoeshoe II will remain head of state. It reported that top civil servants in each government ministry will be temporarily in charge of their departments.

Residents of the capital, Maseru, contacted by telephone, said they heard intermittent automatic weapons fire near the Makoanyane paramilitary barracks on the edge of the city late Sunday.

93 killed in crash

GUATEMALA CITY — Authorities say they have recovered the bodies of 93 people killed in the crash of an airliner taking tourists to Mayan ruins in the jungle of northern Guatemala, but have not determined the cause of the country's worst air disaster.

The twin-engine Caravelle jet operated by the private Aerovias airlines crashed Saturday as it approached the Santa Elena airport, about 150 miles north of Guatemala City.

According to reports from the State Department and the airline, eight Americans were among the dead. There were no survivors.

Yemen fighting goes on

QURAIISH BORDER POST, South Yemen — Frontier guards said fighting between Marxist factions continued in this pro-Soviet country's capital, and a news agency said a broadcast claiming to come from the capital reported the ouster of President Ali Nasser Mohammed.

But the British Broadcasting Corp. and an Israeli radio monitor said Mohammed was on his way back to the capital, Aden, after flying to Ethiopia from his war-torn country on Saturday.

Fighting in South Yemen broke out on Jan. 13, apparently after a coup attempt by hardline Marxists opposed to Mohammed's reported desire to liberalize the economy and to improve relations with Western-backed Arab countries.

Alternative to embargo

TRIPOLI, Libya — U.S. companies faced with President Reagan's deadline of Feb. 1 to end their business in Libya may be able to find foreign firms to cover their operations without violating the law, diplomatic and commercial sources say.

At stake are the American companies' multi-billion-dollar investments in the North African nation's oil and construction industry.

Tunnel link approved

LILLE, France — President Francois Mitterrand and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher today announced that their countries will be linked by a $6.8 billion twin railroad tunnel under the English Channel.

The winning plan for the privately financed project was submitted by Channel Tunnel Group/France-Manche, a French-British consortium. It calls for a 39-mile double-bore tunnel for trains and special shuttle trains to carry cars and trucks.

King holiday

Nation remembers leader who had dream

By The Associated Press

Veterans of civil rights struggles in the United States and South Africa joined to remember Martin Luther King Jr. and his ideals as the nation today observed the first federal holiday honoring a black leader.

Marches and rallies were scheduled today in several state capitals, including Boston, Indianapolis, Nashville, Tenn., Columbia, S.C., and Olympia, Wash., as well as Cincinnati, Ohio.

In Alabama, where King's civil rights crusade began in 1955 with a boycott of Montgomery city buses, a 14-foot statue of King was to be unveiled today in Birmingham near the 16th Street Baptist Church, where four young black girls were killed in a bombing.

In Montgomery, a prayer and church service are planned at the Dexter Avenue King Memorial Baptist Church, where King was pastor in the late 1950s, followed by a ceremony on the Capitol steps about a block from the church.

In Nashville, state Rep. Pete Drew, who headed a committee appointed by Gov. Lamar Alexander to draw attention to the holiday, asked Tennesseans to ring bells, honk car horns and flash their headlights today in honor of King.

South African Bishop Desmond Tutu, the 1984 winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, stood Sunday in the pulpit in Atlanta once occupied by King and promised a campaign of civil disobedience against apartheid laws in his white-ruled nation.

Later in the day, the Rev. Jesse Jackson also spoke to worshippers at the Ebenezer Baptist Church in Atlanta, where King was minister, and afterwards led them to the slain civil rights leader's grave for a candlelight vigil.

"This is holy ground," he said at the grave. "This ain't no ordinary place. This ain't no ordinary man. These candles must not go out, because we should be burning on the inside."

Jackson, one of the 1964 Nobel Peace Prize winner's early disciples in the fight for racial equality, recalled that King spent his last birthday, his 39th, planning a demonstration, even though he was tired and had a headache.

"He wanted to turn back," Jackson recalled. "But he knew he had to go on, to do God's will. So he spent his last birthday alive organizing a demonstration for justice, for feeding the hungry, for empowerment."

King was shot to death in April, 1968, in Memphis, Tenn., where he had been leading demonstrations on behalf of striking city sanitation workers.

Tutu, the keynote speaker at an international conference honoring King, said that if the South African government does not change its racial policies, he would lead "a campaign of civil disobedience against unjust laws."

"Our people are peaceful to a fault," he said. "We are stupid, for we keep going up against an intransigent government. They use tear gas, bullets, dogs and whips."

A train derailment in Washington state Sunday forced organizers of a "Freedom Train" to switch to buses to carry 400 poor, elderly and handicapped people to the state capital today for celebrations of King's birthday. Twenty-eight people were injured in the derailment.

In Buffalo, N.Y., vandals painted a bust of King white Sunday night, but city parks officials pledged to have the paint removed in time for today's holiday, police said.

An unidentified caller told police "white men are painting the statue," in Martin Luther King Park, authorities said this morning. A house-to-house check by police yielded no clues, police said.

Throughout Ohio, people gathered over the weekend at churches, schools and community centers for services to commemorate King's life.

King's cousin, the Rev. Joel King Jr., 34, a Columbus minister, told one gathering that the holiday should be a day when "we recommit ourselves as individuals to the cause of human rights and civil rights and do something to help the underprivileged, black and white."

In Chicago, Gov. James R. Thompson and Mayor Harold Washington told 5,000 people attending a rally Sunday that a monument to King would be built near a spartan $90-a-month ghetto home where King began pressing for open housing in the city.

Harry Belafonte and Bill Cosby will be co-hosts tonight of a three-city celebration of King's birthday. They will be joined in New York's Radio City Music Hall by Ashford & Simpson, Ruben Blades, Tito Puente, Bette Midler, Billy Joel and Al Jarreau, among others.

Body pulled from river

FORT WORTH — A body believed to be that of a female teen-ager has been pulled from the Trinity River after two Arlington boys reported hooking it while fishing, police say.

Officers said the body was not immediately identified.

The body was clad in a woman's leotard, jeans, a canvas-type jacket, white socks and tennis shoes, according to homicide detective Lonnie Gilmore. He said the body did not appear to be decomposed.

Cpl. J.D. Grady said two Arlington boys, 13 and 15, were fishing between two breaker dams when they found the body.

Inmates protest

HOUSTON — About a dozen fathers in Harris County Jail are refusing meals to protest being incarcerated for failing to make child support payments, officials said.

Inmate Edward Gibbs, a longshoreman who has had trouble finding work, said he began the hunger strike Jan. 12 and 10 other inmates joined him.

Gibbs, 37, said many of the jailed fathers have been unable to make child support payments because they cannot find work or have other financial hardships.

Escapes back in jail

INDIANAPOLIS — After two days of freedom, two Indiana State Prison inmates are back in custody today, facing possible criminal and disciplinary charges stemming from their escape, authorities say.

A police special weapons team stormed a mobile home behind a house early Sunday to recapture the two men who escaped Thursday night from the prison in Michigan City.

Sanford Ray Marshall, 45, serving 60 years for killing two Marion County sheriff's deputies, and Steven Douglas Bilyeu, 38, serving 32 years for theft and burglary, were returned to the prison and placed in segregated disciplinary cells.

Trainers mourn horses

ELMONT, N.Y. — Anguished horse trainers mourned the loss of 45 thoroughbreds suffocated by an early morning fire at a Belmont Park Racetrack barn that left the animals looking "like they're asleep," a fire official said.

A barn sprinkler system broke down late last week and was to be repaired by today, officials said. Track officials said the barn was worth $1 million and the horses were valued at up to $5 million.

The dense, rolling smoke from the fire that started in the middle of the green barn felled the horses quickly and probably with little pain, Assistant Fire Chief John Loser said.

Project to fight hunger

TAFT, Calif. — Nearly 100 celebrities, including Kenny Rogers and Diana Ross, joined 1,200 townspeople in forming a mile-long human chain for a video promoting the "Hands Across America" project for hunger relief.

The three-minute video is to be played during the Super Bowl pre-game show Sunday. It touts the plan of Ken Kragen, organizer of USA For Africa's successful "We Are The World" album and video for starving Africans, to raise up to $100 million for America's hungry by linking hands across the nation May 25.

Survey misleads on Reagan rating

A recent New York Times poll showing that a record number of blacks and women now support President Reagan's performance is dangerously misleading because it gives the impression that blacks and women as a whole are faring very well under this administration. Supporters of the president are likely to waste no time in using these results to argue that civil rights leaders and others who oppose the administration's domestic policies and profess to speak for the poor are in fact out of touch with their own constituencies.

The poll, conducted in mid-December, said that 67 percent of women and 56 percent of blacks approved of how the president was handling his job. A similar poll in November put black approval of the president's performance at 38 percent and women's approval at 60 percent. One glaring defect in the poll is that it encourages the impression that the economic fortunes of blacks have taken a dramatic turn for the better — in less than a month's time, at that — under this administration.

But the sudden, sharp shift in black opinion — assuming there has been such a shift — may be due to the timing of the poll and the economic makeup of those surveyed. How many unemployed and marginally employed women and blacks were included in the survey? How many households headed by impoverished females were polled?

The pervasive unemployment among blacks and the widespread poverty among female-headed households ought to tell us that there is something terribly misleading about a poll that tries to convince us that blacks in particular approve of the job performance of President Reagan. His promise of prosperity has yet to touch those on the lower end of the economic spectrum, where a sizable segment of the black population seems permanently stuck.

Shopping mall can invite who it wants

Last month New York State's highest court went against the prevailing winds by upholding the rights of private property against an expansive and perverse interpretation of constitutional liberties. The case, which allowed a shopping mall to prohibit leafleting for political causes, is a recognition of the sources of individual freedom and an antidote to the errors of the United States Supreme Court.

Smith Haven Mall, a privately owned shopping center on Long Island, has long forbidden political activities of any kind — to the point of once evicting a U.S. senator intent on campaigning for reelection. When members of two groups opposed to nuclear power showed up to pass out leaflets in the summer of 1980, they were told to leave. They sued, claiming the New York constitution's free speech guarantee assured them the right to proselytize in the mall.

The reason they didn't take their case to the federal courts is obvious. The Supreme Court has ruled that outsiders have no First Amendment right to leaflet in privately owned shopping centers — while insisting that the owners have no inviolable right to stop them.

In a 1983 case, the court deferred to the states, saying they are free to force shopping centers to allow such activities. This lawsuit asked New York's highest court to accept that invitation.

It declined. New York's constitution was designed "as a check on governmental, not private, conduct," the court concluded. "Smith Haven Mall is not the functional equivalent of a government."

One judge dissented, noting that in the past "the public had the unquestioned right to disseminate ideas in the open marketplace. Now that the marketplace has a roof over it, and is called a mall, we should not abridge that right."

He misses the crucial difference: the mall's private ownership. The rights that define private property include the right to exclude — whether it is a homeowner deciding whom to invite to a party, a restaurant refusing customers without shoes or the United Way's inclusion of some charities but not others. To overrule such choices is to restrict freedom and to impose unwanted burdens.

By the same token, the mall owners should have a perfect right to invite members of the public for some purposes but not others. There is no reason to believe the mall's anti-leafleting policy conflicts with the preferences of most mall-goers. If it did, the owner would have a financial incentive to change it.

Shoppers as well as mall owners would lose if the dissenting judge had given his way. His remedy would give the leafleters the right to inflict themselves on people who resent such contact and prefer to shop where they can avoid it.

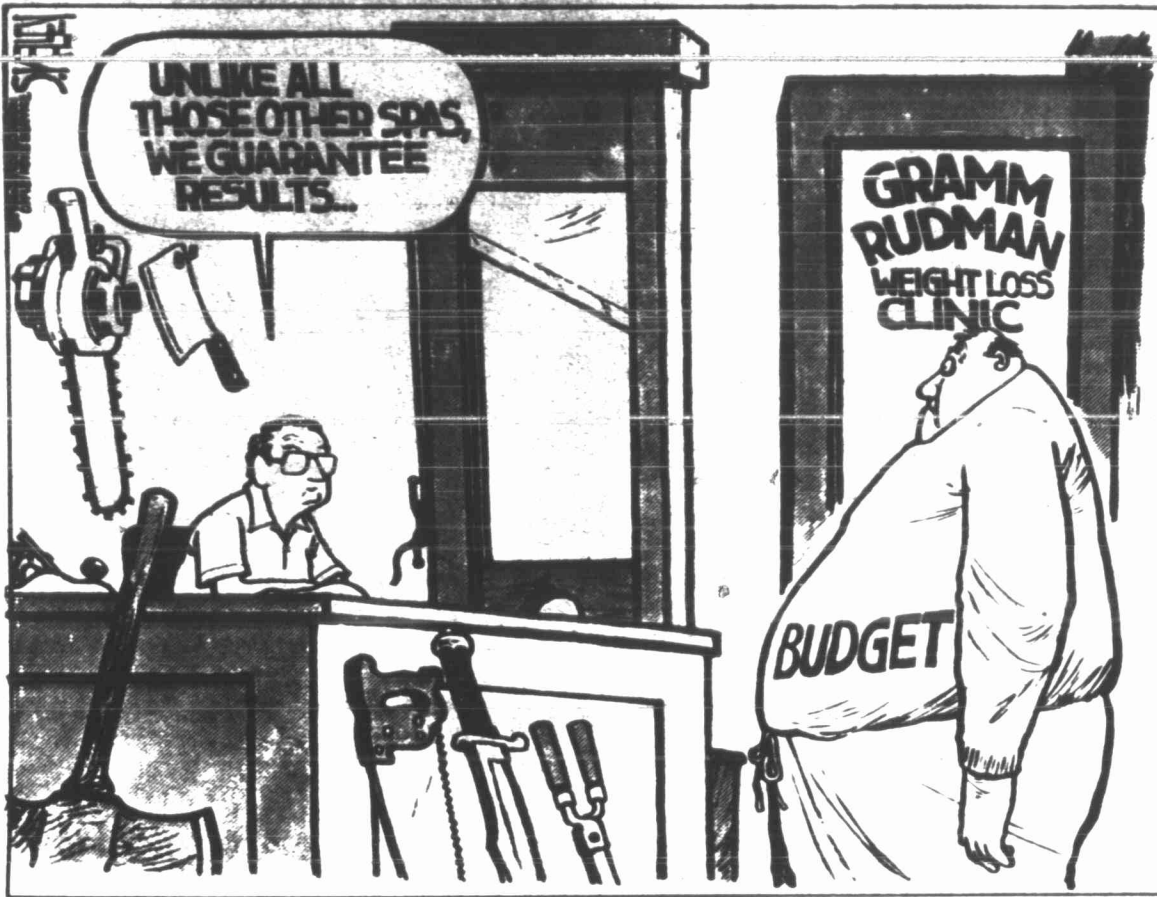

Worse is the affront to property rights. The Supreme Court has ruled elsewhere that a newspaper can't be forced to publish messages against its will. To do so means making the owners' property, acquired through their effort and at their risk, the equivalent of public goods.

The mall owner is no different. Having invested his labor and funds in a shopping center, he shouldn't be made the servant of those who have not. His own right to free expression, after all, should include the right not to express any views — nor to make his property available for others to express theirs.

This may call to mind the cynic who said freedom of the press is for those who own one. But free expression is indeed an attribute of property, which includes the individual's right to use his mind, voice, labor and capital to propagate whatever views he holds. If the state can dictate the uses of those forms of property, it does not enhance freedom but harms it.

The New York court, unlike its federal counterpart, understands that. The anti-nuclear groups have no right to appropriate the property of the mall owners for uses they reject — any more than the mall owners have the right to use the anti-nuclear group's photocopier to print advertising circulars. Undercutting property rights means depriving free speech and other rights of their surest foundation.

Israeli super spy was behind the case of the Navy turncoat

By JACK ANDERSON and DALE VAN ATTA

WASHINGTON — Among the espionage cases that shook the Washington establishment last year, none was more surprising than the revelation that Jonathan Jay Pollard, a Navy intelligence analyst, had been spying for Israel.

After first denying that Pollard had been furnishing them with secrets, embarrassed Israeli officials admitted the charges and allowed U.S. investigators to interrogate the Israeli Embassy personnel involved.

The mystery man behind the Pollard caper was a swashbuckling super-spy, Rafi Eitan (not to be confused with former chief of staff of the Israeli army, Rafael Eitan). He has served his country effectively in the shadowy world of espionage and covert operations for over 35 years. Those who know Eitan well assure us that he would never intentionally harm the United States, or deliberately endanger U.S.-Israeli cooperation. But he is an Israeli patriot first, and has never shrunk from using extreme methods to achieve his goals, regardless of legal or diplomatic niceties. In this case, he was after technological information that he felt was vital to Israel's security.

It's not widely known, but the diminutive Eitan was the person responsible for one of Israel's intelligence's most famous coups: the tracking, capture and kidnapping of Nazi war criminal Adolph Eichmann in Buenos Aires 25 years ago. The operation was undeniably illegal, and caused an outcry from the Argentine government.

Eitan's mentor, Issar Harel, chief of Israeli intelligence at the time, told the story of the Eichmann capture in a book, The House on Garibaldi Street (a reference to Eichmann's house). Harel identified the agent-in-charge only by his code-name, Gabi, but our associate Lucette Lagnado has learned that he was, in fact, Eitan.

Gabi Eitan was put in charge of the Eichmann mission, and he supervised every detail, from setting up the safe house and tracking Eichmann's every move, to snatching him on the streets of suburban Buenos Aires and smuggling him out of the country to Israel. Eichmann was hanged after a show trial that revealed him as the unrepentant technician who arranged for the transportation of millions of European Jews to the Nazi death camps.

Another Nazi fugitive on Gabi-Eitan's list was Dr. Josef Mengele, the notorious "Angel of Death" who decided whether Jews at Auschwitz were gassed immediately or consigned to the living hell of his quack genetic experiments.

After taking Eichmann to Israel, Eitan returned to South America to continue the search for Mengele. His team of agents finally located the doctor in a well-protected hideout in Paraguay. With characteristic coolness, Eitan weighed the odds of a successful attack on the villa and decided they were too great. There was a substantial chance of failure, and even if the Israeli commando team could overpower Mengele's Paraguayan guards, it would be a bloody operation. The plan was dropped.

GAS ATTACK: Congressional opponents of President Reagan's plans to produce deadly nerve gas and other chemical weapons are trying some new tactics to block the funds he wants to add to the $72 million already appropriated. They've got evidence that shows the binary artillery shells are not, as has been claimed, harmless until the two ingredients are combined. One of the two chemicals, called DF, could cause a Bhopal-style disaster in this country if it leaked out of manufacturing plants in concentrated doses. Opponents also argue that the United States already has enough chemical artillery shells to nerve-gas most of the Soviet Union.

QU'EST-CE QUE C'EST?: The French secret service, which got caught in the fatal bombing of the anti-nuclear protest ship Rainbow Warrior, has evidently been out of control for some time. Our intelligence sources say the French counterspy agency in 1981 spread rumors in Paris that Libya had staged a takeover in Chad. At the same time, the spooks were spreading word in Tripoli that France was launching armed intervention in Chad. The French agents were clearly trying to force their government to become more heavily involved against Libya in Chad.

MINI-EDITORIAL: Navy Secretary John Lehman professes to be a devout believer in competitive bidding to keep costs down on defense contracts. So does Rep. Joseph Addabbo, D-N.Y. But apparently there are limits to their devotion — namely, when a company in Addabbo's district wants a Navy contract. Addabbo is chairman of the defense appropriations subcommittee; perhaps that's why Lehman bent his own rules to see that the favored company got the contract. General Accounting Office investigators concluded that the bidding should be opened up to at least three other companies.

Road to election is paved with IOUs

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

WASHINGTON (AP) — Twenty years ago, Richard M. Nixon set out upon a yearlong quest for political IOUs, traveling from one end of America to the other to help Republican candidates. Two years later many of them returned the favor by supporting Nixon for the 1968 GOP presidential nomination.

Nixon's 1966 campaigning set a pattern that presidential aspirants follow to this day.

But today's hopefuls must do their campaigning under rules that are the product of the so-called Watergate reforms enacted to prevent a repeat of the abuses of the 1972 Nixon re-election campaign.

The question now before the Federal Election Commission is whether there is all that much difference between what Nixon could do in 1966 and what presidential hopefuls can do in 1986.

For one thing, Nixon wasn't required to tell anybody how he financed his travels, where he got the money or how he spent it. And if he wanted to mix a little overt presidential campaigning with his appearances on behalf of congressional candidates, that was OK.

The Watergate scandal, with its lurid tales of money laundering and shopping bags filled with $100 bills and millions of dollars in illegal corporate contributions, triggered a big revision of campaign finance laws that included enactment of public financing of presidential campaigns and creation of the FEC to serve as watchdog on candidates.

As so often happens in Washington, the reforms produced many unanticipated, and in some case, unintended consequences. Foremost among them was the proliferation of political action committees. Unions set them up. So did corporations and finally politicians, particularly those hoping to follow the Nixon strategy to the White House.

It's a practice that has no partisan bounds. Edward M. Kennedy and Walter F. Mondale have had PACs and so have Ronald Reagan and Howard H. Baker Jr.

The FEC is looking at all this activity and trying to decide if presidential aspirants are using their PACs to slip around some of the legal restrictions on campaign activity.

The FEC examination was prompted by a request from Baker's PAC for an interpretation of the rules. Technically, the Baker request would apply only to his PAC, but the inquiry was clearly designed to establish precedents that would apply to other potential 1988 candidates, particularly Vice President George Bush and Rep. Jack Kemp.

"We felt that if what they were doing was legal, we were at a disadvantage," said James Cannon, vice chairman of Baker's Republican Majority Fund.

Cannon contends Baker has played by the rules and has set up a "testing-the-waters" fund to finance activity designed to determine whether he has enough support to make a credible run for the GOP presidential nomination.

If Baker decides to become a candidate, whatever money he spent testing the waters would be charged against the spending limits for the 1988 campaign.

Baker's potential rivals aren't testing the waters. None of their current activity would be charged against the 1988 spending limits. They claim they are simply out in the country trying to help elect other Republicans.

Don't ask Bush about 1988. He won't talk about it, at least not in public. He is obsessed with 1986, with the need to retain Republican control of the Senate.

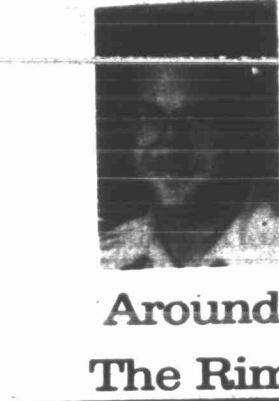

"Richard Nixon showed us the way to success for the party in 1968 was the campaign trail in 1966," the vice president told a recent political gathering.

But how much can be done this year without forcing some politicians to make more overt moves directed at 1988?

The big test may come this summer in Michigan where Republicans plan to elect precinct delegates, the first step in a process that will lead directly to choosing the state's delegation of the 1988 Republican National Convention.

Anyone who asks them what they are up to in Michigan will get the same response: They are trying to help the state Republican Party. It's too early to think about 1988.

Around The Rim

By TIM APPEL

It's a television match made in heaven.

The best team in the National Football League vs the Cinderella wild-card team that won every playoff game on the road to obtain its spot on the field of the New Orleans Superdome for Super Bowl XX.

Last year, in both college and pro football, it was the pass-happy teams that won both the NCAA championships and the berths to the Super Bowl. But "Papa Bear" Hallas smiles once again, as those teams who rely on the run and a tough defense have reached the pinnacle of the football world.

Chicago did what no team had ever done before in playoff history; shut out their opponents in two games straight. The greatest defense in the NFL, since the Steel Curtain last decade accomplished this feat, and managed to score two touchdowns in the process.

A bizarre combination of players indeed, the Bears have some unique players: a mohawk-haired quarterback that butts heads with his offensive linemen after touchdowns, a 306-pounder that not only plays defense, but doubles as a running back and a receiver and an entire team that plays as if they were backyard players just out having fun and making TV videos.

New England, with a 2-3 record early in the season, also seems to be a team of destiny. They seemingly have no high-powered offense or defense in their favor, but they manage to play as one, taking victories that were thought to be way out of reach.

So we have the makings of Super Bowl XX. In a year that has turned out to be one of the biggest media feasts in sports history, this grand finale will be their dessert for the year.

The game itself will pit Tony Eason vs Jim McMahon, Craig James vs Walter Payton. The Bears vs the Patriots.

Is this an aspect we will see up to Super Sunday? More likely, we'll be bombarded with a certain large defensive lineman from Chicago porking out on hamburgers and guzzling enough soda pop to make him float in the air like the Goodyear blimp.

Chicago really wanted to destroy Miami to avenge its only loss of the season, and may be somewhat let-down, but in the end, the Bears should prevail handily, and the only betting the oddsmakers should give out is what Jim McMahon's headband will say that week.

Chicago 25, New England 10. Opinions expressed in this column are those of the staff writer and do not necessarily reflect the views of the newspaper's management.

Castle family carries on musical talents of recent Forum meeting

By CARLEEN EVERETT
Lifestyle Writer

What do Hank Williams, Sr. and Hank Williams, Jr., Johnny Cash and Rosanne Cash, and Pat and Debbie Boone have in common?

They're families who've become famous because of their musical talents. The Castle family is a local example of this characteristic of musical ability. Instead of two generations of musicians they have continued it with five — beginning with the late J.D. Castle and continuing with Tom, T.J., Shelton and Jeff, all of Big Spring.

J.D. Castle moved to Big Spring from Bryan at the turn of the century. His great-grandson, Shelton Castle, said J.D. was one of the finest amateur left-handed fiddle players.

Tom Castle was the next generation of the musical family tree. As a young man, Tom played professionally for dances and studio sessions. After he married he gave up his career and played only for benefits.

At 84, Tom is still playing for benefits three to four times a week. He is also a champion fiddle player in the Howard-Glasscock County area and winner of the Hoyle Nix Award.

Tom's son, T.J., started playing rhythm guitar and singing after World War II in the late 1940s. He was also a farmer in Big Spring and his wife, Louella operated their family-owned store.

He said with the help of Tennessee Ernie Ford he received a recording contract with Starday Records. Starday Records was also The Beatles' first label.

T.J. said Elvis Presley, Waylon Jennings, George Jones, Johnny Cash and Sonny James would perform the opening act for his show. These top name artists were trying to "make it" during this time. T.J. also performed for The Louisiana Hay Ride which is comparable to The Grand Ole Opry today.

On his way to stardom with a couple of hit singles on the charts, T.J. developed a throat disorder and had to quit playing music professionally in 1952.

The Castle family has been playing music for five generations. It began with J.D., who's photo is in the foreground. Other musical family members include Tom, left, T.J., Shelton and Jeff.

The fourth generation, T.J.'s son, Shelton, started playing guitar at age five. Shelton plays lead, bass and steel guitar. At 13, Shelton was playing bass in local clubs. In 1973, he started playing lead guitar.

"I bought a car and I needed a job to pay for it. The only job available was for a lead guitar player. I knew four chords and figured the rest out as I went along," Shelton said.

During Shelton's musical career, he has performed in groups with artists such as: Michael Murphy, Johnny Cantrell and Opus III and has had the opportunity to record in the studio many times.

"I started 'Ennea' (Greek for nine since it was a nine piece band). We recorded an album, had our own T.V. show (The Best of Both Worlds, which aired on channel 2) and toured all over the country. It took a lot of money to keep the band going and I almost went broke doing it," Shelton said. They broke up in 1978. Shelton's next venture, with partner Denny McCullough, in the business and music industry was when he started Westwind Production Company, booking other bands, and his own band "Westwind."

The two men have started a new band "The Heart of Texas." It is a local quintet with Shelton Castle, lead guitar; Denny McCullough, steel guitar; Bee Haley from L.A., lead vocals, back-up vocals and rhythm guitar; J.R. Hayes from Nashville, lead vocals, back-up vocals and bass guitar; Frank Aciri, back-up vocals and drums; and Kevin Sneed, sound technician.

"The Heart of Texas" plays in Big Spring's local clubs and in the Permian Basin area. Jeff, Shelton's son, is five and has the music in him, Shelton said. Jeff is learning the guitar and also wants to play the piano.

The Modern Woman's Forum met in the home of Evie Eastham on Jan. 10 to hear a program on "San Angelo's Pride."

Nola Whitaker presented the program. She said that when people see the Concho River, it dispels the idea that San Angelo is in a desert, even though the city is nicknamed "Oasis of the West." She said citizens have worked hard to make the river a place everyone can enjoy.

Parks line the river through downtown San Angelo. Four miles of lighted hike and bike trails, water fountains, picnic trails, a footbridge and parking areas make the river attractive to residents and visitors. A municipal golf course is located on the river.

In 1980 the city voted a $2.1 million bond for river beautification after five years of research. River bottom cleanup and zone changes were proposed. The city hopes to build restaurants, hotels, apartment houses and shops on private areas of the river section of town.

The next meeting for the club is Feb. 14 in the home of Goldye Moad. All members will participate in a Tacky Day and Jokes event.

"Going Bald?"

Here's Help If Cause is Sebum

HOUSTON, Texas — If you have symptoms of "sebum" hair loss; oily or greasy forehead; dandruff, dry or oily; itchy scalp; and if your hair pulls out easily on top of your head, here's help.

A firm of laboratory consultants has developed a scientifically advanced formula and regimen to remove and control the continuous discharge of toxic sebum, so the scalp can function normally and effectively. This, in turn, reduces hair loss, stimulates natural hair cell production ... and reverses the balding process.

This scientific regimen has proven so successful the firm invites you to try it for 32 days, at their risk, and see for yourself.

These experts point out that the majority of cases of excessive hair fall and baldness are the beginning and more fully developed stages of male pattern baldness and cannot be helped.

But, if your hair loss is caused or effected by sebum, here is help.

Everyone has a full head of hair until some time after puberty. In the case of hair loss caused by "sebum", the problem starts when the male hormone production reaches its peak. This causes an excessive discharge of toxic sebum, which if not properly controlled, will gradually destroy the hair-producing cells on top of the head.

Hair loss caused by sebum can also run in your family, and, if you wait until you are slick bald and your hair-producing cells are destroyed, you are beyond help.

So, if you still have any hair on top of your head, and would like to reverse the balding process ... now is the time to do something about it before it's too late.

Loesch Laboratory Consultants, Inc., will supply you with treatment for 32 days ... at their risk ... if you have the sebum symptoms and are not already slick bald. Just send them the information below. Or call, them toll-free at 1-800-231-7157 (in Texas 1-600-620-6227) 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m., Monday thru Thursday and they will send complete information. Your reply places you under no obligation whatsoever. ADV.

Dear Abby

Vet who served country can't get treated

DEAR ABBY: My father was rushed to the hospital with a sudden stroke. He is also suffering from heart failure and diabetes.

Dad is a World War II veteran, so we got in touch with the veterans service and were told that as soon as Dad's condition stabilized, he could be transferred to the veterans hospital, where he would be eligible for his veterans benefits.

Well, Dad's condition finally stabilized, but the veterans hospital refused to take him. Why? Because he was not taken to the veterans hospital first!

Abby, Dad has earned the right to be treated at the veterans hospital, but because we didn't know about the "rule," he is being denied the benefits he earned. He served his country when it needed him, and now, just because he went to the "wrong" hospital first, it's as though he didn't spend a day in the Army! This is so unfair.

I am the proud daughter of "The Big Swede," Ove H. Anderson, but sign me...

ANNA IN HILLSBORO, ORE.

DEAR ANNA: You need to know your father's rights and how to get them, so I recommend you get the newly published paperback titled "The Viet Vet Survival Guide."

It contains valuable up-to-date information for ALL veterans — male and female — not just those from the Vietnam era.

Realizing the average Vietnam veteran did not get past high school, the authors use plain language and short sentences. They tell how to get medical care, psychiatric counseling, disability compensation, housing, and even how to apply for loans and upgrade bad discharges. They also deal with issues from Agent Orange to postwar stress, drug and alcohol dependency, and patients' rights, and clearly spell out what a veteran and his dependents are entitled to.

The "Viet Vet Survival Guide" (published by Ballantine) is available for $3.95 in most bookstores — or send $4.50 (check or money order) to VVA Product Sales, P.O. Box 3666, Santa Rosa, Calif. 95402.

CONFIDENTIAL TO HURTING IN HILTON HEAD, S.C.: Give your grief a chance to express itself. Cry your eyes out. Let yourself go and let the tears flow. It's healthy.

Dr. Donohue

Pernicious anemia not so pernicious

Dear Dr. Donohue: I wish you would give me what information you can on "pernicious anemia." My son, 42, just found out he has it. Is there a cure for it? Does drinking aggravate it? He has either a can of beer or a cup of coffee in his hand most of the time. And he is a heavy smoker. — A.R.

Anemia is red blood cell deficiency. Pernicious anemia is a form that has a nutritional background. Before that aspect was recognized and before treatment for it came into being, it was, indeed, a pernicious ailment, and many did die from it.

Today, we know that the cause is the body's inability to absorb vitamin B-12. That's because the stomach doesn't produce a substance, the intrinsic factor, which normally permits the absorption of that vitamin.

Because vitamin B-12 is vital for the body's production of red blood cells, anemia results. But that doesn't have to happen anymore. As soon as the intrinsic factor deficiency is recognized, the person starts taking vitamin B-12 injections, bypassing the stomach and digestive tract entirely. He takes these injections for life. Were it not for our knowledge of the problem and the way we've found to get around it, pernicious anemia would be as pernicious as ever.

As much as I know you desperately want me to do it, I cannot relate any of your son's pernicious habits to his pernicious anemia. But certainly, he must have some hints by now that nicotine, caffeine and alcohol do not represent the foundation for a long and healthful idea.

Dear Dr. Donohue: I'm an active elderly man. My doctor tells me I have a low red blood count and he wants to take GI tract X-rays front to back with special devices. Is that needed? Would iron help my count or would vitamin B-12 help? I've heard of that helping. — W.K.

Read the above item, please. Unless that (pernicious anemia) is what's behind your low count, the vitamin B-12 isn't going to be the answer. As for iron, that might help — but you still have to find the cause of the anemia.

The misunderstanding implicit in your letter comes up often, and it makes me realize the hazy concept many people have of anemia. In any anemia, finding the cause from among other possibilities is the first priority. You don't jump to conclusions about iron or vitamins.

This is why your doctor insists on the gastrointestinal tract studies. A low red cell count can result from the oozing of minute quantities of blood into the digestive tract. Tumors of the intestines may lurk behind you. You won't usually notice blood in stool from this kind of bleeding. Go along with your doctor. He's on the right trail.

There's an old saying — if your feet hurt, you hurt all over. Dr. Donohue's booklet, "Relief and Care of Your Feet," shows you how to avoid and take care of foot problems. To get your copy, write to Dr. Donohue in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 11210, Chicago, IL 60611, enclosing a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope and $1.00.

Extension Homemakers vote to assist with stock show

The City Extension Homemakers Club met recently in the home of Jowill Etchison and planned to work during the 4-H Stock Show Jan. 23-25.

Two new members, Otelia Fortune and Lou Vincent, were welcomed. Carolyn Reed was a guest.

Mildred Callihan, president, distributed year books.

J.J. Pickle spoke to the club on the Texas Sesquicentennial plans. Six national flags have flown over this territory since Spanish ship captains off Galveston Bay claimed "all this land" for the King of Spain.

A French captain made a similar claim for France from his ship in the mouth of the Mississippi River.

The "Louisiana Purchase" by the United States followed. Mexico won independence from Spain and the territory included what is now Texas.

Colonists were invited to settle this territory. Settlers came from the U.S. With their political ideas of "free men with a right to vote," there was soon a challenge with the Mexican government.

Battles erupted at Goliad and the Alamo. Gen. Sam Houston began gathering an army of volunteers while he retreated toward the Sabine River with Santa Anna's vast army following him.

The City Club will begin its cooperation with the birthday year by making an "Antique Button Fair."

The next meeting will be with Lois Johnston Feb. 14. Members should bring cards with a display of antique buttons and a history of buttons on the card.

BSSH unit is meeting topic

The Big Spring Child Study Club met recently in the home of Alice Haynes with Donna Terry and Jeane Bristow as co-hostesses.

Guest speaker was Connie Edgemon, a counselor with the Big Spring State Hospital. She discussed the adolescent unit at the state hospital.

Diane Murphy was a guest. The next meeting is Feb. 12 in the home of Sherri Key.

Madeen Blair is guest artist

Madeen Blair, local artist, will be guest speaker at the Big Spring Art Association meeting at 7:30 p.m. in the art department at Howard College.

Blair works with all types of media. She is a longtime Big Spring resident and has been painting for 20 years. Her demonstration will center around watercolors.

TRAVEL TALK by Mary Valli

CRUISE WEAR

The very word "cruise" conjures up visions of bejeweled ladies and handsome gentlemen fluttering off to dinner in floating organza dresses and white wing collars. All that glamor can be there if one wishes or it can be radically modified. In days of yore when people dressed formally for dinner at home, a cruise was an extension and expansion of that formality. It was a place to see and be seen in one's finest. In those days of high tea and higher society, only the very wealthy could afford to take a sea trip. In our socially leveled days, cruises are much less formal events. One or two dashing outfits will be fine. On most ships, gentlemen, those outfits do not always need to include a tuxedo or dinner jacket. A dark business suit or blue blazer with appropriate trousers generally will be satisfactory.

A cruise is an exciting and welcome alternative to most travel dreams. It allows the best of both worlds. The excitement of visiting foreign ports and shopping plus sun and fun-filled days of ship board activity can be yours. Come in today to BIG SPRING TRAVEL, 608 Scurry, and let us show you the many ocean choices that are available to help you relax and have the vacation of a lifetime. Tel. 263-0225. Open 8:30-5:30 Mon.-Fri. Stop in and ask us about a group trip to the Caribbean where everyone can enjoy the great sport of scuba diving.

Lendl bests Becker in Masters

NEW YORK (AP) — Being No. 1 in the world is like being the "fastest gun in the West." Everybody is aiming to out-draw you.

On Sunday, it was Boris Becker's turn to challenge Ivan Lendl, the king of men's tennis.

The 18-year-old redhead from West Germany has the tools: the overpowering serve, the rifle-shot groundstrokes from both sides, the crisp volleys and the enthusiasm of youth.

Lendl, however, had emotion and experience to go along with the big shots. And then there's the pressure that comes with facing No. 1.

"When he's flying on emotion, it's tough to beat him," Becker admitted after he fell to Lendl 6-2, 7-6, 6-3 in the championship of the $500,000 Nabisco Masters. "In the tiebreaker, I didn't play any bad points. It was just that he played better."

Becker boomed nine aces to six for Lendl. The teen-ager had 12 service winners to nine for Lendl. But the West German had 41 unforced errors, many of those coming by trying to hit the perfect shot, one that Lendl couldn't possibly get to.

Becker hit one of those "certain winners" during a remarkable rally in the third game of the final set, a rally that saw both players race from side to side, from the baseline to the net, keeping the ball in play. Then, with a lunge, Becker volleyed the ball into an open court, Lendl going the wrong way at the net and on the sideline.

But, somehow, the Czechoslovakian right-hander changed direction, raced toward the baseline and, while turning, whipped a forehand that sailed over the net, over the prone Becker and landed safely inside the baseline.

The shot brought a standing ovation from the Madison Square Garden crowd. And even Becker, after regaining his feet, had to applaud.

For Lendl, it was just another point won — and, just possibly, another point made to the newest pretender to the throne.

Players like (Mats) Wilander and (Anders) Jarryd are fast, too, but when they get to the ball they miss the ball," Becker said. "They get to the ball, but he's (Lendl) still playing a great shot when he gets to the ball."

"He's probably the fastest, and that's probably what I have to learn, to get a little faster."

Making a record sixth trip to the Masters final, Lendl said experience also played a key role in his victory.

"It was the sixth straight year I have been in the final, and for him it was the first time," Lendl said. "It was the first time for him going into the big match and a lot was expected of him."

"There was so much pressure on him that I don't think he handled it as well as he will after a few more times. He was making a lot of errors and wasn't doing the things he normally does well."

Experience also played a key role in Lendl's controlling the tempo of the match. Time and again he would straighten out his shoelaces or take extra time to get ready either to serve or to return serve. He made Becker play to his tune.

Lendl said one reason he used the delaying tactics was because he had been ill with the flu a week ago.

"I was trying to take as much time between points as possible because I was worried about my conditions after being in bed for four days," said Lendl, who dropped his serve only three times during the tournament. "I tried to slow down the pace a little bit and save my energy."

Then, there was the attempt to disrupt Becker's rhythm.

"He likes to fast-serve me sometimes," Lendl said, "not in the sense that he would do it unfairly; he just is faster than I am."

"But when I was younger, I was always ready and always had to wait, especially with (Jimmy) Connors and (John) McEnroe. I just learned to play slower because of those two guys."

"I think Boris will have to learn that too."

The two began the match by holding serve through the first four games. Then Lendl ran off the next four games to close out the first set. It was as if Becker didn't know what had hit him, and after he dropped his service in the seventh game, he slammed his racket to the floor.

He then began the second set by racing out to a 3-0 lead, breaking Lendl in the second game. His sixth ace closed out the fifth game and, despite two double-faults, he held serve again in the seventh game to take a 5-2 lead.

Lendl slammed his fourth ace of the match in holding his service in the eighth game before Becker served to level the match at one set apiece.

"I could have won it at 6-3 and it would have been a new match," Becker said. "But I played a bad point at 30-all. Then I lost the game. Then he came back."

The break put Lendl back on serve, and he held at 15 to pull to 5-5. He also fought off a set point in the 12th game to send the set into a tiebreaker.

Becker double-faulted to begin the tiebreak, but won the next point with a powerful forehand to pull even at 1-1. The West German would not win another point in the tiebreaker.

In the third set, it was Lendl who grabbed a 3-0 lead. On the final point of the third game, a cross-court forehand volley, Becker crashed through a railing alongside the court, cutting his right knee.

"I wasn't really excited about the three-minute injury timeout," Lendl said. "But there was definitely a cut on his leg and the rules say he could use it."

"He used the rules to his best advantage. I had momentum going and I knew it was going to be another ballgame afterwards unless I jumped on him and break his serve somehow. But he had three great first serves and one almost-ace second serve."

"Then he did something new on the ad court on my second serve and just broke me."

Becker pulled to 3-3 before Lendl, the world's top-ranked player, showed how he captured the U.S. Open and 10 other tournaments in 1985. He held at 30, broke Becker at 30, then closed out the two-hour, 21-minute match at love.

The loss, however, didn't dampen the teen-ager's enthusiasm or determination.

"In our matches, it just depends on a few balls," he said. "The last four times (they've played) he made the balls. The next four times, I'm going to make the balls."

Ivan Lendl, the world's top-rated tennis player, returns a shot to Boris Becker during Sunday's Masters tennis final at Madison Square Garden. Lendl defeated the West German prodigy in straight sets to take his third straight Masters title.

Tripuka guns down Lakers

By The Associated Press
Kelly Tripuka, who had made only two of eight three-point shots all season, made the best of his ninth attempt.

Tripuka took a pass that was nearly intercepted by Los Angeles and swished a high-arching three-pointer with two seconds left to give the Detroit Pistons a 118-115 NBA victory over the Lakers Sunday.

NBA Roundup

"I like to have the ball when the game is on the line," Tripuka said. "I saw James Worthy running at me. He actually had his hands on the ball and I got it away from him. I just let it fly."

"We both got our hands on it," Worthy said of the pass from Bill Laimbeer to Tripuka. "But he had a better grip than I did, and when I turned back around, he was squared away and I was just hoping it wouldn't go in."

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored a season-high 38 points for the Lakers, and Worthy had 28. Seven players scored between 12 and 18 points for the Pistons, led by guards Joe Dumars and Isiah Thomas with 18 each.

Detroit's victory was its third straight after losing 13 of 15, while the Lakers lost for only the seventh time in 38 games.

"We're executing better on offense," Pistons Coach Chuck Daly said of the short winning streak. "We're not going crazy. We're not just running around out there. We're getting better shots."

Detroit made 63 percent of its field goal attempts in the second period, taking a 43-27 lead on a dunk by Earl Cureton 3:32 into the quarter.

Mavericks 131, Rockets 96
Dallas, playing without injured leading scorer Mark Aguirre, nevertheless handled division-leading Houston with ease.

The Mavericks outscored the Rockets 29-13 for a 37-22 lead after one quarter and built a 37-point margin in the fourth period. Rolando Blackman had 27 points and Sam Perkins 18 points and 11 rebounds for Dallas.

Akeem Olatunji had 31 points and 17 rebounds for the Rockets, who still lead the Midwest Division by 3½ games. Starting guards John Lucas and Lewis Lloyd combined for only eight points on 1-for-17 shooting.

Bucks 122, Warriors 109
Terry Cummings scored 19 of his 23 points in the second half as Milwaukee turned a 14-point deficit into a 17-point lead with a 42-11 spurt against Golden State.

Cummings was 2-for-13 from the field in the first half as the Warriors led 62-52 at halftime, then extended their advantage to 72-58. But the Bucks scored 30 of the next 38 points to finish the third quarter ahead 88-80, and a 12-3 run at the start of the fourth period made it 100-83.

Sidney Moncrief added 22 points for Milwaukee, which leads the Central Division by five games. Purvis Short and Eric Floyd led the Warriors with 23 and 22, respectively.

Bullets 112, Bulls 98
Jeff Malone tied his career-high with 40 points, including 26 in the second half, to lead Washington over Chicago, which lost its fourth straight game.

Malone scored 12 of Washington's first 14 points in the third quarter as the Bullets increased a 56-48 halftime lead to 68-56. The Bulls got no closer than five points the rest of the way.

Dan Roundfield made eight of 10 field goals and scored 20 points for Washington, which recorded 14 blocked shots, including six by rookie Manute Bol. Orlando Woolridge paced Chicago with 20.

Spurs 116, Trail Blazers 105
San Antonio snapped Portland's four-game winning streak as Alvin Robertson scored 24 points and Artis Gilmore 23 for the Spurs.

The game was tied 50-50 at halftime, but a rebound basket by Steve Johnson gave the Spurs a 64-63 lead in the third period, and they never lost it.

Mychal Thompson led all scorers with 25 points for the Trail Blazers, while Clyde Drexler added 20 points and 13 assists.

Hammond win Hope Classic

PALM DESERT, Calif. (AP) — Donnie Hammond sweated out John Cook's 20-foot putt for eagle on the final hole of regulation and then won on the first extra hole Sunday to win the Bob Hope Chrysler Classic and its $108,000 first prize.

Hammond, 28, claimed the first victory of his four-year PGA career with a 10-foot birdie putt that curled into the cup on the first extra hole. Cook, whose birdie on the 90th hole had forced the fifth consecutive sudden-death playoff in the tournament, has not won since the Canadian Open in 1983.

Long garners O'Brien Award

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Iowa quarterback Chuck Long, who threw for 10,461 yards in four years at Iowa, has been selected as the 1985 recipient of the Davey O'Brien Award.

The award, named for the former Texas Christian quarterback who won the Heisman Trophy in 1938, was initiated as a regional award in 1977 and changed four years later to a national award exclusively for quarterbacks.

Spinks-Holmes rematch on tap

ATLANTA (AP) — Michael Spinks will defend the International Boxing Federation heavyweight title in a rematch with Larry Holmes sometime in April as one of a series of bouts leading to an undisputed heavyweight champion in 1987.

The Holmes-Spinks rematch and the series of seven title fights was announced Friday by promoters Don King and Butch Lewis and Seth Abraham, president of sports programming for Home Box Office, which will broadcast the fights.

No financial figure for the package was released, but the figure has been estimated as high as $26 million for the entire package. "This is a boxing series for the fans," Abrahams said. "A people's champion will emerge."

On new marathon course

Cummings wins Houston race

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — The new route for the 1986 Houston-Tenneco Marathon was a welcome change for winner Paul Cummings of the United States and runner-up David Edge of Canada.

But defending champion Marty Froelick had one complaint.

"It was about three miles too long," said Froelick, who was overtaken in the final miles Sunday by Cummings, who then won a 350-yard sprint with Edge for the $25,000 first prize.

Cummings won with a time of 2 hours, 11 minutes and 31 seconds, while Edge earned $15,000 with a second place time of 2:11:39.

England's Veronique Marot also found the course to her liking, leading most of the way to defeat American Francie Larrieu Smith, who was running her first marathon.

Marot earned $25,000 for her 2:31:33 finish, and Smith received a $15,000 payday with a time of 2:33:36.

The 1986 event changed from a double circuit from downtown through Memorial Park to a single route that took the 3,974 runners through many of the city's ethnic neighborhoods.

Officials estimated more than 200,000 fans lined the 26-mile, 385-yard course.

At different points, the runners were blessed by a Catholic priest, serenaded by Mexican mariachi bands, entertained by a belly dancer and encouraged by high school cheerleaders and bands.

"Last year's course was like watching grass grow," Edge said. "It's a long way around and the crowds were great this year."

Froelick overtook early leader Michael Scheytt of West Germany at the start of the 20th mile, but he had immediate competition for the lead from a closing pack that included Cummings and Edge.

"We started picking up the pace at the 19-mile mark and I was confident that we could catch him (Froelick)," Cummings said. "I think it was a case of strength at the end. We just started running stronger."
