Moore board's Fraser addresses prison issues

Steve Fraser, vice president of Fraser Industries and a board member of Moore Development for Big Spring, Inc. will represent Big Spring at a meeting of the Federal Bureau of Prisons in Raleigh, N.C. Wednesday and Thursday.

Fraser is one of two persons who will represent communities that have experienced military base closures and where a federal prison is utilizing some of the former base facilities.

Communities that are experiencing closures or cutbacks following action by the Presidential Base Closure Commission last summer will be represented.

"I think this is an excellent opportunity for Big Spring," Fraser said. "I think it speaks well of the way in which the Bureau of Prisons views our community that we would be one of two (communities) chosen."

Fraser will address the group on the working relationship between the community and the prison. He will also address the economic impact the base closing had on the community and show the positive economic impact of the prison on the community.

Aggie Muster tonight

Former students of Texas A&M University will assemble at 7 tonight at Big Spring Country Club for the annual Texas Aggie Muster, according to local chairman David L. Ward, D.D.S.

A social hour precedes the Muster, which dates to 1883. Ward said more than 400 Musters will be held around the world this year. "Wherever Texas A&M former students live or work."

During the Muster, Aggies pay respect to all absent because of death since the last Muster. When the names of the honored dead are called from the Muster Roll, a friend of the deceased answers 'here' for them.

Format change in paper

In an effort to make it easier for readers to locate news and information and to increase the value of advertiser space, the Herald is making three changes in the format of Section B daily.

Beginning today the comics, TV listings, horoscope and Dear Abby will move from the back page of the section and will immediately follow the life! news copy. That move allows for an easier reading flow.

Also, the Herald's former Professional Service Directory moves from inside the Classifieds to the back page of the section and will be printed in black on yellow to draw more attention.

Additionally, the directory name changes to "At Your Service - A Directory of Local Service Businesses."

Moore board negotiating for industry

By GARY SHANKS
Staff Writer

Wright Fibers Inc. and another undisclosed industry were topics of discussion at today's meeting of the Moore Development for Big Spring Inc. board.

Board officials said they are negotiating with an industry to locate in the area. "It is a significant industry and that's all I can say at this time," said board president Owen H. Ivie.

The industry was discussed in executive (closed) session, but no action was taken afterward. The negotiations are still in their infancy, Ivie said.

David McKay of the accounting firm of Lee, Reynolds and Welch, presented an independent audit of the board, which was accepted. No discrepancies were found and the only comment made was that the audit should be completed earlier in the fiscal year in the future, Ivie said.

The Wright Fibers project appears favorable, said Executive Director Ted St. Clair. "One of the (Texas Agriculture Department) staff members was out here and he indicated that we would not have to resubmit the application. We need to submit a letter amending our application for a lesser amount - that letter was overnighted yesterday and they should have it in Austin by (this morning)."

The funding of $1.4 million instead of the original $1.98 million was to be discussed on the 29th and 30th of this month, but the meetings have been changed, St. Clair said. The new times for the meetings are May 5.

The Credit Review Committee will meet on the morning of May 5 and the entire board will decide the issue that afternoon, he said.

St. Clair said that while it is impossible to know what the board will ultimately decide, the aide will strongly recommend funding the project to the board. This will have some bearing on the decision.

The board also discussed areas of the city that can be utilized to house new industry - taking into account the interstate highway and rail access.

Poll shows Perot taking Texas in '92

DALLAS (AP) - Billionaire Ross Perot, a prospective independent presidential candidate, is leading both President Bush and Democrat Bill Clinton in the president's adopted home state, a new Texas survey shows.

The Texas Poll showed that if the vote were held now, Perot would get 35 percent of the vote to Bush's 30 percent. Clinton was a distant third, with 20 percent.

"I'm honored the people of Texas feel that way," Perot said today on CBS "This Morning." "It gives me a great sense of responsibility."

Perot reiterated his charge that Republican operatives in Texas are engaged in a campaign of dirty tricks to discredit him and said the poll demonstrates that "the people have heard all that stuff" and reject it.

He did not mention Clinton, but challenged the Republican Party and Bush to present a positive program. "I would disappear if they would start taking action and stop talking," said Perot, who said it is increasingly apparent to him that his backers will succeed in getting him on the ballot in all, or virtually all, states.

And if that happens, he says, he will follow through on his promise to them to run for president.

As if to underscore the growing consensus that Perot will make the race, he said he resigned Monday from two private clubs that exclude minorities.

The Texas survey, the first anywhere to show the Dallas businessman in front, shook the camps of both the president and the expected Democratic front-runner.

"It is troublesome that a Perot candidacy at this point puts him on an equal par with the president, or a little better now," said Jim Oberwetter, Bush's Texas campaign chairman. "Clearly, the president is going to have to spend more time in Texas."

Trial to highlight DNA evidence

KERRVILLE (AP) - The trial of a Lubbock man accused of raping his retarded sister-in-law will boil down to expert testimony challenging the genetic fingerprinting of DNA blood testing, defense attorneys say.

Testimony in the trial of Jimmy Wayne Wooten, 41, is expected to begin Wednesday in district court before Judge J. Blair Cherry Jr. of Lubbock.

The trial has been moved from Lubbock to Kerrville on a change of venue, because of pre-trial notoriety.

Wooten is accused of raping his 34-year-old sister-in-law, Debra Lynn Thomas, who gave birth to a son Jan. 1, 1991. Ms. Thomas, a former resident of the Lubbock State School, has the IQ of a 2-year-old and does not realize she has given birth.

Wooten, who maintains he is innocent, faces two to 20 years in prison and up to $10,000 in fines if convicted.

The Associated Press does not usually identify rape victims, but Ms. Thomas' name was made public at the request of her sister and legal guardian, Dori Wooten.

Ms. Thomas' rape drew national attention after suspicion initially focused on employees of the Lubbock State School.

But DNA blood tests submitted to police by Wooten and 10 state school employees genetically fingerprinted Wooten as the leading suspect in Ms. Thomas' rape.

Lubbock attorney Chuck Lanehart, who is helping defend Wooten, said the case hinges on whether defense experts can help discredit the DNA results, which have been shown to be 99 percent accurate.

"The DNA issues will be interesting," Lanehart said.

Post: Storage facility filled beyond capacity

HOUSTON (AP) - An underground salt dome storage cavern was filled beyond its intended capacity in the week before a deadly gas explosion near Brenham, The Houston Post reported today.

Texas Railroad Commission officials have said the cavern contained about 287,000 barrels of natural gas liquids at the time of the April 7 blast and that the facility had a capacity of about 336,000 barrels.

However, the Post said in a copyright story that records filed with the commission in 1981 show Seminole Pipeline Co. intended to keep about 150,000 barrels in the Washington County salt dome.

But the discrepancy does not necessarily mean Seminole had too much gas in the cavern, commission spokesman Brian Schaible said.

State officials said last week the blast may have resulted from the facility being overfilled and leaking, but they emphasized other possibilities haven't been ruled out.

The explosion killed three people, injured 18 others and caused at least $6.6 million in property damage.

The Post said that during the commission's inspection of the salt dome last May, regulators found evidence its capacity was much larger than had been originally thought.

Schaible noted that commission regulations would not have required Seminole to amend its initial request for a larger capacity.

David Leslie, a spokesman for Seminole's parent company, Mapco Inc., said he couldn't immediately determine why the company originally requested a permit for a salt dome with a capacity of 150,000 barrels.

Workers draining tunnels

CHICAGO (AP) — Crews slowly pumped water today from the flooded tunnels underneath the Chicago Loop, fearing that faster work could collapse the turn-of-the-century passages and cause old buildings to settle.

"The water levels are dropping slowly, steadily and safely," Mayor Richard M. Daley said Monday.

Pumps were drawing about 4,800 gallons per minute from the passages, which was flooded with millions of gallons April 13 when a tunnel underneath the Chicago River broke.

The tunnels hold electrical and communications equipment, and the flooding forced authorities to shut off power to the area. About 200,000 people were evacuated from downtown buildings.

Engineers said it could take 12 days to pump out all of the water. "We do not want to exceed this rate initially because my technical experts want to watch the situation," said Army Corps of Engineers Lt. Col. Randall Inouye. "If we are suspicious of any structural abnormalities, we will not hesitate to shut off any or all of the pumps."

Afghan guerrillas disagree on new leadership

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — The acting president said today the remnants of ousted President Najibullah's government were ready to surrender power to a rebel-led council. But sources said the guerrilla factions could not agree on a leader.

Abdul Rahim Hatif, a non-communist who took over for Najibullah on Sunday, said the government also would be willing to cede power to a U.N.-organized neutral administration.

"We have no preference because in principle we have agreed on a full transfer of all the powers of the state," Hatif told reporters at the presidential compound.

"We do not want confrontation with the mujahedeen. We do not want bloodshed," he added.

Hatif also said the government had no objection, "in principle," to a U.N. special envoy's efforts to negotiate Najibullah's safe passage out of the country.

All major cities except Kabul are now under the control of the rebel mujahedeen, or Islamic holy warriors, whose leaders met in Pakistan again today to try to form an interim governing council that would take power in Kabul.

Afghan sources said the leaders, divided for years by personal ambitions and petty rivalries, agreed on the makeup of the council but remained deadlocked over who would lead it. Most of the leaders want the council to be headed by Ahmed Shah Masood, a popular commander who engineered the end of Najibullah's six-year rule and the domino-like fall of 13 provinces within days.

But the leader of the strict fundamentalist Hezb-e-Islami faction, Gulbuddin Hekmatyar, is threatening to attack the capital from the group's positions south of Kabul unless the government surrenders within a week.

Hekmatyar has said he would not participate on any council that included Masood, his fiercest rival.

"A solution is not possible. Hekmatyar can't agree to anything that includes Ahmed Shah Masood," said Hekmatyar's Pakistan-based spokesman, Nawab Salim.

With rival rebel groups closing in the capital and the government crippled, residents of Kabul fear the power struggle among competing rebel factions could degenerate into fighting in the capital.

An estimated 2 million Afghans already have died in the nearly 14-year-old civil war, 5 million more have fled their homes.

U.N. envoy Benon Sevan, who has been struggling for months to bring peace to Afghanistan, pleaded with the guerrilla factions Mon-

A large group of rebel mujahedeen marches towards Kabul on the old Salang highway some 10 miles north of the Afghan capital, Tuesday. With rival rebel groups closing in on the capital and the government crippled, the U.N. envoy struggling to bring peace to Afghanistan pleaded with guerilla factions to finally seize the chance.

day to seize the opportunity for peace.

"We are almost there. Don't risk destroying the chance for peace," said Sevan, who is from Cyprus. "We do not have months, not even days, perhaps. There are enough dead people in Afghanistan. There is enough destruction."

Sevan began trying to mediate a settlement of the conflict long before Najibullah fell last week. The United Nations had proposed installing a neutral interim government.

"The majority of the people of Afghanistan are for the peace plan of the United Nations," said Abdul Ghafer, a 45-year-old engineer.

"If there is a fight, it will be terrible. It will destroy the city," Ghafer said.

Masood's rebel alliance wants to name a mujahedeen government to bridge the next six to 12 months until elections, while leaders of Najibullah's Watan Party have been holding out for an interim council of neutral officials.

Prosecutor urges jurors to believe their own eyes

SIMI VALLEY, Calif. (AP) — A prosecutor showed jurors the videotape of the Rodney King beating once again and asked, "Who are you going to believe — the defendants or your own eyes?"

In his closing argument Monday, Deputy District Attorney Terry White portrayed the four white policemen charged with brutalizing the black motorist as lawmen turned lawbreakers.

Defense attorneys were to begin their closing arguments today.

White said the beating, videotaped by a bystander, was characterized by racism, brutality and excessive force. The tape was broadcast nationwide, focusing attention on police brutality and straining race relations in Los Angeles.

"You have to step into the shoes of a reasonable police officer and you have to determine what a reasonable person would have done in this case," the prosecutor told jurors.

On a large television, White played the 81-second videotape that has been dissected over and over during the 2-month-old trial. He then turned and asked, "Now, who are you going to believe — the defendants or your own eyes?"

He said the officers might have behaved differently if they had known a camera was focused on them.

"This was a cover-up, a managed and controlled cover-up," said

White, mocking one defendant's remark that the beating was "a managed and controlled use of force."

Sgt. Stacey Koon, 41, and Officers Laurence Powell, 29, Theodore Briseno, 39, and Timothy Wind, 31, are charged with assaulting King after a car chase on March 3, 1991. Briseno testified that he tried to stop the beating. Koon, Powell and Wind claimed they were trying to subdue King after he resisted.

Officers kicked King, shocked him with a stun gun and clubbed him 56 times with police batons.

The prosecutor focused his harshest attack on Powell, who inflicted the most blows.

White described Powell as a relentlessly brutal assailant who made racist remarks and was heard laughing on a police radio as he called for an ambulance.

"When Laurence Powell took the stand and testified in this case he lied," White said. "The only thing he told the truth about, I believe, is when he spelled his name right."

He said a computer message that Powell sent to a colleague was tantamount to a confession. The message said, "I haven't beaten anyone this bad in a long time."

White said he was unmoved by Briseno's testimony that he tried to protect King. He said Briseno clearly stomped on King's neck and wasn't just trying to hold the motorist down as he claimed.

British comedian Hill dead at age 67

LONDON (AP) — Plump, bug-eyed comedian Benny Hill, who won cult status in the United States but had his TV show axed in Britain in 1989 after critics called it sexist, is dead at age 67.

An autopsy showed he died of a heart attack, Scotland Yard said.

BENNY HILL

Police found his body seated in front of the television in Hill's southwest London apartment on Monday night. They had been sent after neighbors reported they had not seen him around.

Hill initially made his name on British television in the 1950s and began hosting his own TV show in 1955.

A master of sexual double enten-dre, with a pop-eyed leer and a knowing wink, he combined visual and spoken gags, musical parody and mimicry.

His shows always ended with him being chased by scantily-clad young women, irate husbands, policemen and others to a quirky saxophone soundtrack.

His success grew after he signed with Thames Television, part of Britain's commercial TV network, in the late 1960s.

In the 1980s he became a cult figure in the United States. "The Benny Hill Show" — half-hour selections of skits from his British specials — was first broadcast in the United States in 1979 and appeared on dozens of stations.

Pop star Michael Jackson, a Hill fan who visited him in hospital this year, said in a statement from Chicago Monday night: "The world is suffering a great loss of a great talent."

Rock stars honor Freddie Mercury

LONDON (AP) — Some of the biggest names in rock music played for 72,000 fans in Wembley Stadium to help AIDS sufferers and honor a celebrated victim of the disease — late Queen singer Freddie Mercury.

The event is expected to raise more than $17 million to raise AIDS awareness and help victims of the virus, London news reports quoting other Queen members as saying.

Nearly a hundred performers, including Elton John, David Bowie and George Michael, gathered for the 4½ hour concert, which was broadcast on television to 70 countries.

Many in the crowd held red banners bearing Mercury's name. Performers wore the red ribbons that have become a symbol of AIDS awareness.

At one point, actress Elizabeth Taylor, president of the American Foundation for AIDS Research, strode onstage to loud applause.

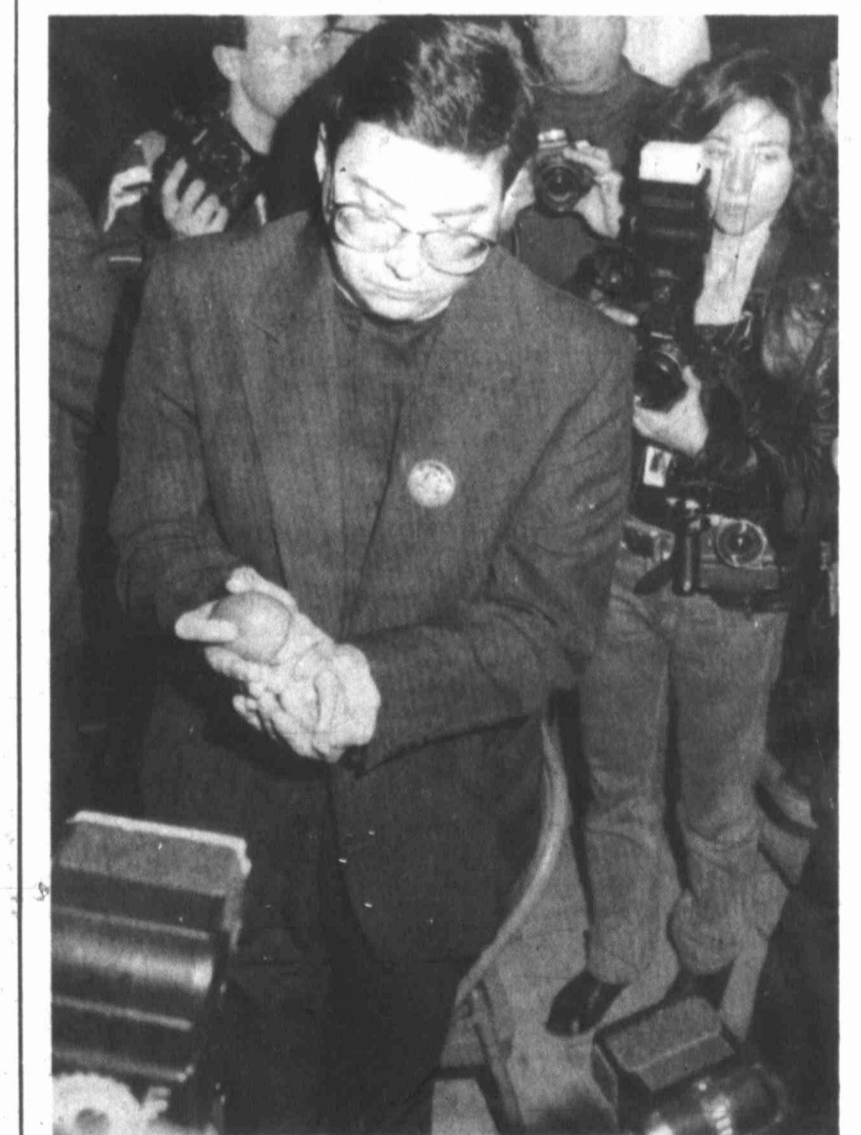

"Protect yourselves," she told the crowd.

"Every time you have sex use a condom. Every single time. Straight sex, gay sex, bisexual sex, use a condom whoever you are.

"And if you use drugs, don't share the needle."

Queen guitarist Brian May said he and fellow band members Roger Taylor and John Deacon were there "to celebrate the life and work and dreams of one Freddie Mercury. We're going to give him the biggest sendoff in history!"

Mercury died of AIDS in November at age 45.

X-rays scan ancient Indian skeletons

National Geographic For AP Special Features
CHICAGO — The same kind of three-dimensional X-ray equipment that helps save human lives will soon be used to take pictures of prehistoric Indian skeletons.

Using computerized tomography (CT) scans, imaging experts hope to develop an electronic archive that eventually could contain 3-D pictures of thousands of skulls and bones currently housed in museums and research centers worldwide.

There's an urgency to the project. Backed by a new federal law, many American Indian tribes are pressing museums and universities to return skeletons and sacred objects to them.

'The X-ray technique known as CT may be the key to a vast electronic museum containing detailed visual information on prehistoric skeletal remains that could be transmitted to scientists around the world.'

Walter C. Hartwig anthropologist

Scientists would like to record meaningful samples of the remains and extract as much information as possible from them before they are given back to the tribes for burial or ritual cremation.

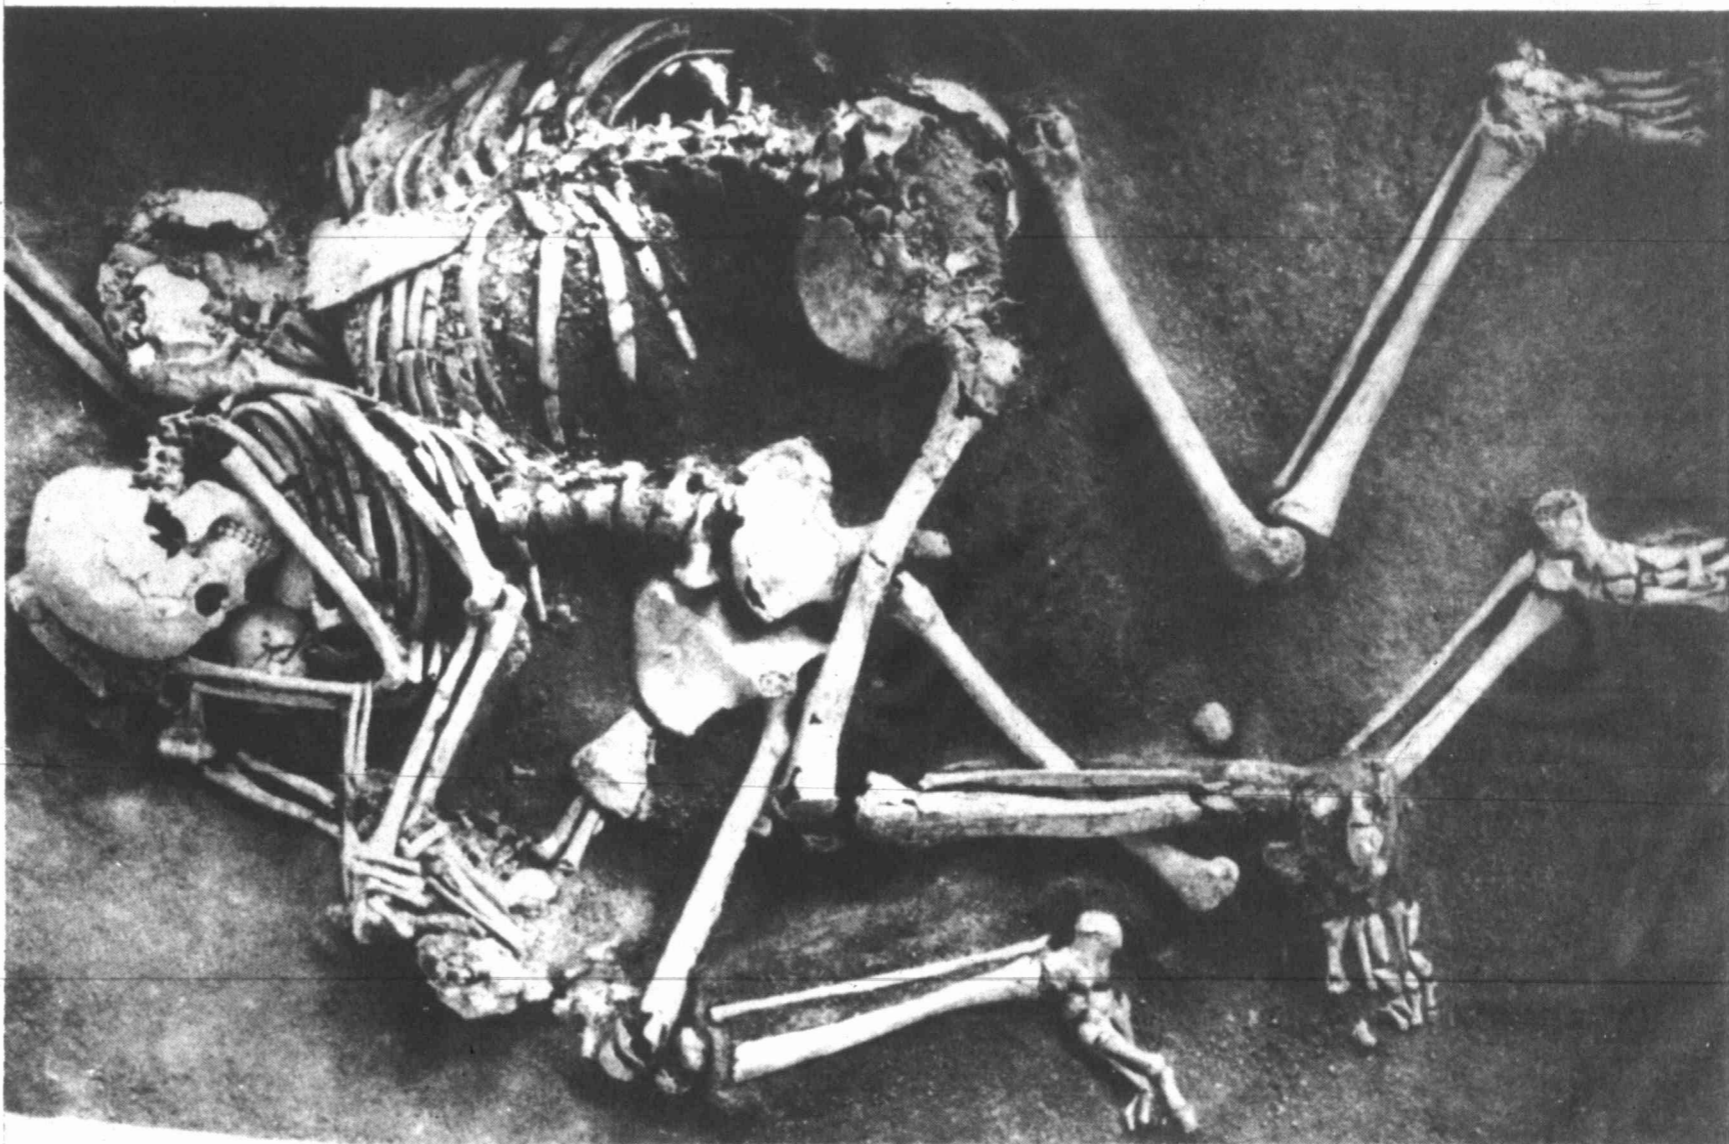

Some tribes object. "The X-ray technique known as CT may be the key to a vast electronic museum containing detailed visual information on prehistoric skeletal remains that could be transmitted to scientists around the world," says Walter C. Hartwig, a University of California anthropologist who is here working on the imaging project.

Hartwig envisions a system that someday would enable scientists to call up detailed 3-D images of prehistoric skeletal remains from the electronic museum and study them on computers in their offices or laboratories.

"The material, of course, wouldn't be limited to American Indian remains but could include rare fossil materials from many parts of the world," he says.

Developed about 20 years ago, CT scanners convert X-ray pictures into digital computer code to make high-resolution video and computer images. With the computer's capacity to manage information, CT can zoom in and scan the anatomy, yielding vivid and precise 3-D views that can be preserved in software for transmission to personal computers.

Depicting bone structures in fine detail, CT scans can show small differences between normal and abnormal tissues in the brain, lungs and other organs.

"The imaging also gives the option for careful anatomical studies inside human skeletal remains," says Donald J. Ortner, chairman of the anthropology department at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C. "You could study a whole series of measurements and dimensions inside the skull that have been virtually inaccessible to anatomists and physical anthropologists for a long time."

Hartwig cautions that the bone "museum" is a long-term project "rather than something we would hope to establish within the next two or three years."

Some of the first remains may come from the Lowie Museum of Anthropology at the University of California at Berkeley. "We'd like to do a small sampling in May of remains from that collection for our prototype, perhaps the skulls of 10 to 15 individuals," says Dr. Robert C. Taylor of the university's medical school in San Francisco, who will do the project's CT scans.

Working with Taylor and William A. Hanson of IBM's Palo Alto, Calif., Scientific Research Center, Hartwig hopes that a simulation of the system will be ready to show museums and universities early next year.

"CT offers tremendous potential for capturing detailed information on our collections," says Douglas H. Ubelaker, curator of anthropology at the Smithsonian. "We realize that we have a limited time, but we'd like to document our material as thoroughly as we can for future scholars and the Indians themselves."

The Smithsonian's collection of 18,600 Indian skeletons is the largest in the country. More than 2,000 skeletons already have been returned for reburial, and eventually all the bones may be repatriated.

Some remains soon will be returned to the Wichita tribe in Anadarko, Okla., for reburial. Tribal leaders say they would be receptive to 3-D imaging. "I see nothing wrong with this technology," says Virgil H. Swift, a tribal historian. "Such a record of our ancestors might someday prove useful."

Other Indians aren't so receptive. "Any disturbance of Indian remains, even with non-destructive X-rays, would be objectionable to the Pawnee Indians of Oklahoma," says Robert M. Peregoy, a senior staff attorney for the "Native American Rights Fund" in Boulder, Colo.

Researchers study new cancer drug

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Researchers are working on alternative ways to make taxol, a promising anti-cancer drug now made from the bark of the endangered Pacific yew tree.

Stanford University scientists said at the recent meeting of the American Chemical Society that they produced taxol using a substance from pine trees called pinene — the chief component of turpentine.

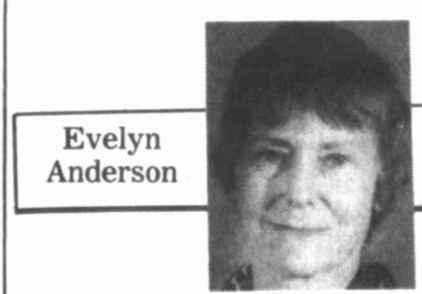

"This costs a penny or less per gram, slightly less than potting soil," said Paul Wender, a Stanford chemistry professor.

Wender, however, cautioned that this taxol would not soon be on the market.

Taxol has been effective in tests on women with advanced breast and ovarian cancer. Those cancers kill more than 50,000 women every year.

The slow-growing trees, a disappearing species in old-growth forests of the Northwest, won't be able to meet the demand for the drug.

University of Florida scientists said they have partially synthesized taxol by combining a naturally occurring part of the drug with a chemically produced part.

BSSH Happenings

Adolescent Services at BSSH welcomed their new unit physician, Dr. John Civello, at a get-acquainted reception on March 9. Dr. Civello and his wife, Jill, came to Big Spring from San Antonio. Their son, Michael, attends school at San Antonio Community College.

Originally from Dallas, Dr. Civello graduated from the University of Dallas with a BS in biochemistry, received his medical degree from the University of Texas Medical School in San Antonio where he also completed his residency in general psychiatry. Volunteer Services Council will have their annual Awards Luncheon at noon on April 30 in the Allred Building at BSSH. Johnnie Lou Avery will be the guest speaker. Everyone is invited. Please call for reservations at 267-8216 ext. 535 by April 28.

Margaret Lloyd, founder of the Big Spring Humane Society and Big Spring Independent School District's teacher at BSSH, recently had three of her students request to help at the animal shelter on I-20. They enjoy their work and agreed to work the four day Easter holiday as well. They clean the animal's cages, feed, assist with inoculations — anything that is needed. These are the first students that have expressed an interest in this kind of volunteer, after-school activity and they are doing an excellent job according to Ms. Lloyd.

Doug Corson, employee on Substance Abuse Services, recently received notification of his certification as an Alcohol Drug Abuse Counselor. Freda Arney, Director of SAS, and Brian Cook, social worker, received their Licensed Chemical Dependency Counselor number with the certification to follow. These certifications are required by the Commission on Alcohol and Drug Abuse, but more than that, it shows the dedication these people have to provide the best services possible to those whom they serve.

Mr. Arney conducts workshops on alcohol and drug dependency for any group that has an interest in that subject. She also has in-service workshops at Howard College for people who are working toward their certification in social work and drug and alcohol counselors. The last of the current series will be April 24 from 9 am to 4 pm. The next series will be held the last Friday of August, September and October. Anyone interested in the group workshops or in-service workshops may call Carla at 267-8216 ext. 275 or Ms. Arney at ext 286.

Work Therapy clients at BSSH have been busy making a variety of hand crafted items to sell. The patients in this program earn wages for their work and they do a very good job. Singletree Gallery on 11th Place has some of their Southwest designs, country crafts and birdhouses for sale and BSSH Credit Union has the hand painted wooden Easter bunnies. All these items can be seen and purchased in the Activity Therapies offices also.

The hospital Safety Committee announced their Safety Award recipients for the second quarter of 1992. The Clinical Award went to Substance Abuse Services; the non-clinical to Quality Oversight Department, and the individual Safety Award to Andy Dominguez employee of Southwest Psychiatric Services.

Congratulations to those who excel in preventing client and employee injuries.

April Employee of the Month for North Psychiatric Services is Gwen Justin, L.V.N. Congratulations.

The retirement of Dr. Harry Davis, the last day of March left a vacancy in the office of Psychological Services. Robert von Rosenberg, Superintendent, said, "Harry provided us with a role model. By recognizing the value within each of the clientele we serve, we too, can continue Dr. Davis' vision by providing only the most superior quality service possible."

Dr. Ann Mann assumed the duties of Chief Clinical Psychologist on April 1. She is well qualified to fulfill all the duties and responsibilities of this place of service. Prior to this position Dr. Mann was Director of Northwest Psychiatric Services, & Northeast Psychiatric Services at BSSH.

Doctors recommend babies sleep on side or back to lower SIDS risk

NEW YORK (AP) — Sleeping on the stomach appears to increase babies' risk of sudden infant death syndrome, the American Academy of Pediatrics says.

In a new policy, the academy recommended putting most babies to sleep on their sides or backs.

At the same time, Dr. John Brooks, a member of the task force that drew up the recommendation, warned that following the precaution will not eliminate SIDS.

And he said parents should not be too concerned if a baby refuses to sleep on its side or back because the risk of SIDS from sleeping on the stomach is small.

"We don't want parents feeling they have to ... spend the night watching their baby to make sure they don't turn on to their stomachs," he said.

'We don't want parents feeling they have to ... spend the night watching their baby to make sure they don't turn on to their stomachs.'

In announcing the recommendation, doctors stressed that it applies only to healthy, full-term babies who lack any of several conditions that indicate they should sleep on their stomachs. Babies with any kind of breathing problem or who vomit excessively should probably stay on their stomachs, Brooks said.

Brooks said there is no proven explanation for the increased risk of SIDS from lying on the stomach, but possibilities include breathing obstruction, lack of fresh air and overheating.

The academy put no age limit on the recommendation, but 90 percent of SIDS cases occur in the first six months, and when babies reach four or five months or older, "they're going to decide what position they sleep in, not you," Brooks said.

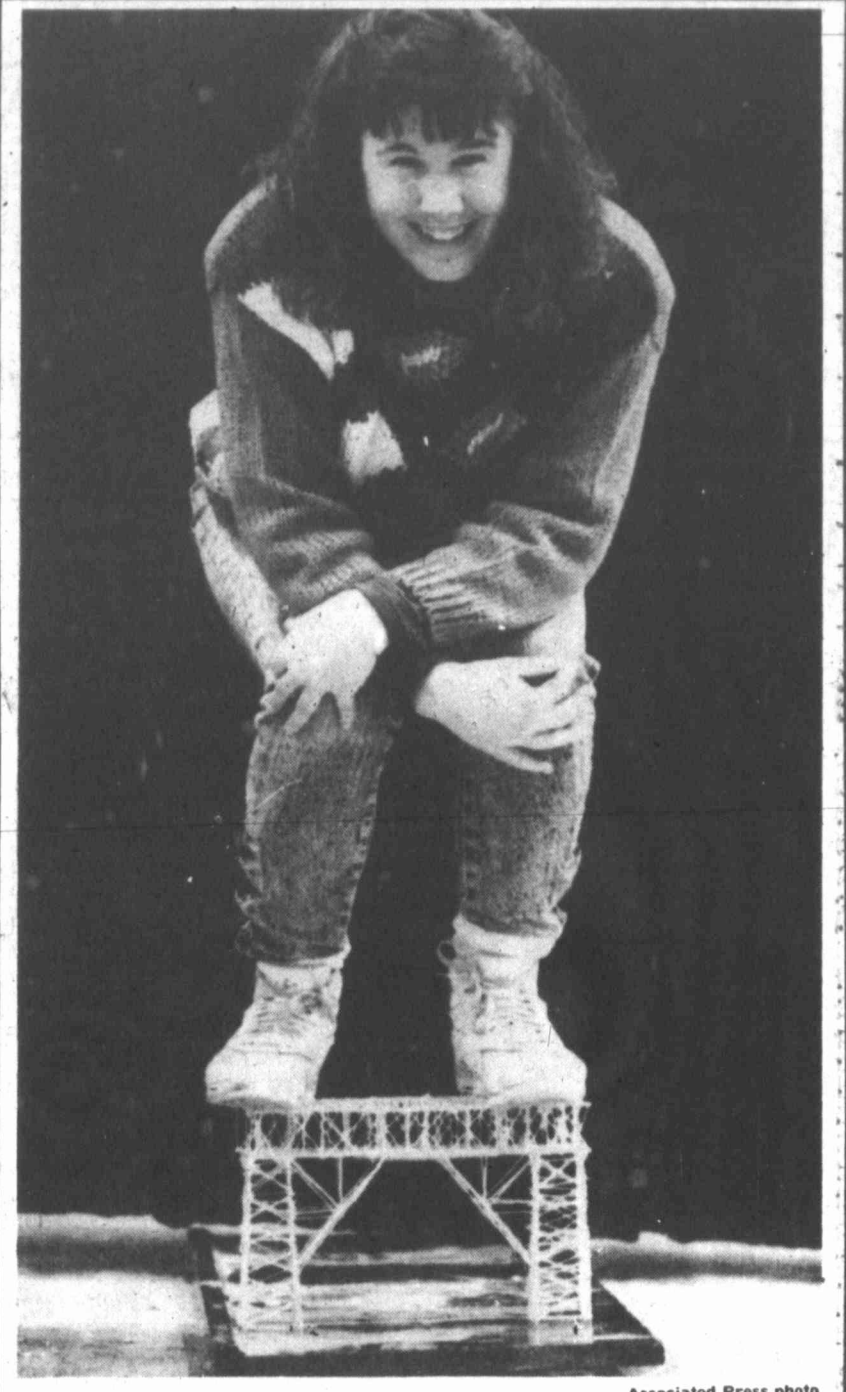

In SIDS, an apparently healthy baby dies without warning during sleep. It strikes in about 1.5 per 1,000 infants born alive, killing some 6,000 American babies a year, Brooks said. No cause or prevention is known.

Thomas Moran, president of the Sudden Infant Death Syndrome Alliance, a volunteer organization based in Columbia, Md., called the recommendation "timely and a sensible one."

Dr. Susan Orenstein, associate professor of pediatrics at the University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine, disagreed.

Her concern has to do with gastroesophageal reflux, in which material leaves a baby's stomach and enters the esophagus. That is common, but in rare instances a baby can inhale the material, causing suffocation or pneumonia, she said.

Movement therapy shortens ICU stays

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Treating critically ill patients with a gentle rocking motion could significantly reduce the time they spend in intensive care units, a study has found.

The movement — or kinetic — therapy uses specially designed beds to keep patients in constant motion, said Dr. Sung C. Choi, professor of biostatistics and neurosurgery at the Medical College of Virginia.

The movement helps reduce the risk of infection and complications from pneumonia and other respiratory problems, which affect about 20 percent of intensive care patients, he said.

"Kinetic therapy can reduce ICU days by 24 percent," said Choi, co-author of the study with Dr. Loren D. Nelson, associate professor of surgery and anesthesiology at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tenn.

The researchers compared results of six independent studies on kinetic therapy involving 419 patients over four years. Their work, which was not funded by outside sources, was published last week in the Journal of Critical Care.

Nelson said statistical analysis of the studies show at least 250,000 intensive care patients in the United States each year suffer from problems that could be helped by kinetic therapy.

"The average duration of the stay for ICU patients, those who got traditional care, was a little over 12 days," he said. "Those randomly assigned to this treatment, their ICU stay was reduced by three days."

The average daily cost for an ICU patient is $1,700 to $3,000, according to the American Hospital Association and a recent study in Chest, a journal on pulmonary medicine.

The potential savings in intensive care costs would be nearly $1.3 billion a year, based on 250,000 patients saving $1,700 a day for three fewer days in intensive care, Nelson said.

Kinetic therapy has been used primarily in intensive care since its introduction in this country in 1975. But its use is increasing for immobilized patients who are out of intensive care, the researchers said.

"We know the number of patients who are at risk who should benefit," Nelson said. "We don't know how many of those are actually getting the bed right now. My guess is a tiny fraction of the 250,000 are getting that treatment."

The special beds swing a patient automatically from side to side. Each cycle lasts about seven minutes.

Even under the best conventional care, a nurse turns a patient once every two hours, Choi said.

Scott J. Ratner, a cardiologist, said he has used kinetic therapy on patients at the Heart Institute of St. Francis Hospital in Roslyn, N.Y., and at Columbia Presbyterian Medical Center, where he was director of intensive care.

"It's probably beneficial," Ratner said. "It's certainly more comfortable. It probably reduces complications. But it's not a substitute for nursing or comprehensive medical care."

Not every ICU patient needs kinetic therapy, but patients immobilized by injury or illness are good candidates, the researchers said.

"In all of these patient groups, it appeared to have benefits of reducing pneumonia and other respiratory complications," Nelson said.

The researchers said the studies showed that kinetic therapy cut in half the number of intensive care patients who got pneumonia. In those cases, continuous motion was applied within 24 hours of the patient's admittance to the hospital and continued until the patient was removed from a respirator.

Why continuous motion prevents the development of pneumonia in ICU patients is not precisely known, Nelson said.

"It's speculated that it works through fluid movement in the lungs," he said. "The other possibility is that normal mucous secretions may be more easily cleared by turning side to side."

The world's oldest and largest organism

NEW YORK (AP) — Squashed by hunters and nibbled by deer, the toadstool can't get any respect in the natural world.

But a mass of tendrils threading the soil beneath a moist northern Michigan wood may put the humble fungus on the map.

Using genetic testing, scientists discovered a single, 1,500-year-old plant that fills 38 acres of soil.

That makes it the largest and one of the oldest organisms on earth, according to a report in the journal Nature.

Scientists confirmed the existence of the subterranean behemoth through genetic testing of its slimy but edible progeny — the honey mushrooms that pop up by the hundreds after fall rains.

The mushrooms growing in a triangular area more than five football fields across had the same genetic fingerprint, meaning they came from one plant.

The largest part of the mushroom plant, called armillaria bulbosa, is an underground mass of cord-like tendrils called rhizomes, which live under a few feet of soil and send up shoots that feed off dead or diseased wood. The mushrooms are the fruit of the plant.

The fungus at the Iron County, Mich., site probably weighs at least 100 tons — about the same as an adult blue whale, said Johann N. Bruhn, a Michigan Technological University research scientist who co-authored the study.

Giant sequoias can weigh as much as 1,000 tons, but much of that is deadwood.

Among mushroom experts, the discovery is sweet vindication.

"Some of the major players in terrestrial ecosystems have been ignored by the scientific community," said Tom Bruns, assistant professor of plant pathology at the University of California at Berkeley.

He cited a recent study that only 5 percent of the 1.5 million estimated fungus species in the world have been identified. Some of the unknown organisms could cure diseases or play other important roles in the environment, Bruns said.

Scientists say armillaria bulbosa is a particularly vital player. The fungus' attacks on sickly hardwood trees are a barometer of declining forest health caused by insect defoliation, air pollution and other factors.

"It will tell us how healthy the woods are," Bruhn said. "Global climate change will have a big effect on its growth."

Bruhn said he and his colleagues, professors Myron L. Smith and James B. Anderson of the University of Toronto, came upon the discovery while conducting research for the Navy.

The Navy is spending $2 million a year to study the ecological effects of the extremely low-frequency electromagnetic field system, known as ELF, that it operates in Michigan and Wisconsin to communicate with its submarines.

Bruhn and the Canadian team set out to catalogue the fungi at a control site many miles from the ELF antenna in 1988. It took three years of collecting specimens to find the boundaries of the big fungus' domain, Bruhn said.

The ELF study isn't finished, but a similar study in Wisconsin found no evidence that ELF hurts the forest, Bruhn said.

By measuring armillaria's rate of growth, the scientists estimated

These mushroom growing free stumps in a Michigan forest are only the tip of an underground massive mushroom. Michigan Technological University scientists have discovered what may be the world's largest and oldest living organism, covering 38 acres that may be 1,500 to 10,000 years old and weighing about 100 tons.

its age at 1,500 years. The oldest recorded tree was a 5,100-year-old bristlecone pine cut down in Nevada. Lichens more than 10,000 years old have been found in the Antarctic.

Repairman caught peeping at naked woman

DEAR ABBY: I am a 30-year-old, happily married woman. Last week my husband was out of town on business. Before he left, without my knowledge, he arranged for a contractor to do some repair work on our chimney.

Anyway, I decided to spend the morning housecleaning. Sometimes, in the privacy of my home, I elect to do my housework in the nude, but I make sure my drapes are drawn. This was such a time.

After an hour or so, I thought I heard a scratching on the roof — then the skylight in our family room came crashing down! Almost scared to death, I ran to the area and saw this contractor staring at me — with severely lacerated hands!

Dear Abby

It turns out that this contractor had come to our house early that morning and was starting to do his work on our chimney when he looked through the skylight and saw me! Interested, he was pressing against the glass skylight hoping for a better view when the accident occurred. (This was the story he told our insurance man.)

To make a long story short, the contractor did sustain a serious injury from the broken glass, and now he is making a claim against our insurance company.

I think he has a lot of nerve. He admits that he was staring at me for at least half an hour. My husband is furious!

I wonder how this man's wife would feel if she knew the full details? I also wonder how this Peeping Tom would feel if some man spied on his wife when she was nude?

I know for a fact that he got a good look at me, since mutual friends have told me that he described my nudity in detail to his buddies.

What do you make of this? — KELLY

DEAR KELLY: The contractor was authorized to be on your property, but your husband should have told you to expect him. Also, the contractor should have let you know beforehand that he would be working on your roof.

You really cannot blame the man for "looking" — but describing your nudity to his buddies in detail is caddish!

Fortunately, you are insured. The injured man has every right to be compensated for his injuries.

DEAR ABBY: You occasionally run letters from readers asking if they should inform a friend of his or her spouse's infidelity, or some other unpleasant "truth." While helping my daughter with an English assignment, I came across this piece of philosophy by the English poet William Blake (1757-1827). It comes from his poem "Auguries of Innocence":

"A truth that's told with bad intent Beats all the lies you can invent."

I plan to have those words framed and placed on my bulletin board at work. — MARCIA BRANDERS, ATLANTA
