Cease-fire reported in Afghan civil war

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — Battles between rival rebels raged on in the streets of Kabul today, but Pakistan and a guerrilla news agency reported late in the day that leaders of the competing factions had agreed to a cease-fire.

Radical Muslim fundamentalists, led by Gulbuddin Hekmatyar, stormed a police garrison near the presidential palace and rocketed southeastern parts of the city held by his more moderate rival, Ahmed Shah Masood.

In Islamabad, Pakistan's capital, a spokesman for the Foreign Ministry, Javed Hussein, said both leaders agreed to a truce. He did not release any details.

Midia, a guerrilla news agency, said Hekmatyar's top aide, Qudbuddin Hilal, signed the peace pact and agreed to recognize an interim governing council formed by other rebel leaders. Hekmatyar earlier denounced the commission as a "fraud and waste of time."

Pakistan's state-owned news agency said the agreement was reached after Pakistani Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif and senior Saudi Arabian officials pleaded for an end to the

The news agency said Sharif and Saudi Arabia's secret service chief, Prince Turki al-Faisal, opened talks with Hekmatyar and Masood early today by radio.

"As a result of the discussions with the two commanders . . . all the groups have agreed to bring all hostilities to an immediate end," the report said.

Tourism money 'clean'

'There is nothing sluggish about the tourism dollar," Brooks said. "I have found in all my research and through the materials I receive from the state convention bureau that travel and tourism is the third largest retail industry and is the seemployment."

But in order to bring in tourism dollars, available facilities need to be refurbished and maintained or new ones need to be constructed. she said.

Available facilities for conventions and conferences include, United Way office, Dorothy Gar rett Coliseum and East Room, Director of Public Works Tom Decell says the trash that collects in the park is beyond the capacity of the man hours he has budgeted, but the problem still remains elsewhere.

"The single biggest problem the city has with maintaining the park, as well as other public places, is the combination of litter and vandalism," he said. "If everyone would treat the park as it is their own, because it is, we could work on manicuring the grass and the upkeep of the Spring more, instead of spending a day picking up disposable diapers, wrappers, cups and other

Perot bashes Bush; Praises Bill Clinton

DALLAS (AP) — Ross Perot says he harbors no ill will toward either party. But the Texas billionaire has been aiming his sharpest barbs at President Bush while sometimes seeming to go out of his way to praise Democrat Bill Clinton.

Perot's blunt rhetoric may reflect what many longtime Perot-watchers say is a deep-seated enmity toward Bush, raising the question of whether winning or driving Bush from office may be uppermost in the fellow Texan's mind.

Recent polls suggest Perot draws support about equally from Democrats and Republicans. But his victory in certain key states like Texas could pose a substantial obstacle to Bush's re-election.

Perot has a history of difficult dealings with Bush over the years, culminating in the Dallas businessman's all-out opposition to Bush's conduct of the Persian Gulf War.

Perot denies bad blood and says he doesn't consider his prospective independent candidacy a grudge match with Bush.

Even though he has spread several hundred thousand dollars in political contributions over the past 15 years to Democratic and Republican candidates alike, much of it to Texans, he has given nothing to Bush, who lived in Texas for 20 years and represented the state in Congress.

And in a gesture that must irritate the president's family, Perot volunteers are operating a busy drivein petition-signing booth in north Dallas.

Glynna Mouton, Al Valdes, Dan Wise and Richard Wright are named on the ballot for the school trustee election May 2. Valdes and Wise are incumbents; Mouton is running for her appointed position created by the resignation of Bobby Baker in June 1991; Wright is a newcomer to the school board.

Issues affecting this campaign for the BSISD include the continuing problem of over-crowded buildings in need of repair. An $11.7 million bond issue designed to build two new facilities and repair roofs to others was defeated by more than 1,900 votes against with 1,463 for, in 1991.

At the heart of the debate about building new schools was the demolition or renovation of Runnels Junior High School.

Runnels, built in 1916, was once the Big Spring High School, and many local residents wish to see the three-story structure renovated and used instead of destroyed or allowed to stand empty. School board trustees are elected and receive no salary for the hours they devote to the school board. Most boards meet once a month, however, BSISD trustees generally attend a special meeting as well.

Wife: Assaults avoidable

PEARLAND (AP) - As many as 23 sexual assault victims could have been spared if authorities would have listened to a woman who claimed her husband was a serial rapist, the woman said.

"I am angry," Linda Bergstrom, 28, told the Houston Chronicle in its Sunday editions. "I'm angry that those girls had to get hurt. Why wouldn't they listen?

Her husband, James Edward Bergstrom, 28, remained jailed without bond late Sunday in connection with those assaults around southern Harris County. A lab technician and former Navy seaman, he was arrested April 1.

A Harris County grand jury has indicted Bergstrom on 15 counts, including charges of aggravated sexual assault, aggravated assault, attempted sexual assault, burglary and aggravated robbery in several parts of Harris County.

But Mrs. Bergstrom, who has been married to Bergstrom since 1985, said she has been trying to convince authorities of the danger for more than three years.

"I knew who I was living with," she said. "It was like living through a nightmare.

Bergstrom's court-appointed attorney, Danny Easterling, said his client would have no comment on the charges or his wife's allegations.

Mrs. Bergstrom said she first spoke with authorities when her husband was suspected in nearly a dozen rapes attributed to the "Redwood Rapist" in Washington state.

"I come home to see guys in suits. They told me that James was seen watching a 53-year-old lady undress. They said they thought he was the 'Redwood Rapist.' Evidently they had been watching the apartment," she recalled. The Navy already had moved the couple when similar allegations arose involving a 16-year-old Naval wife.

But prosecutors were unable to make a case against Bergstrom in the rapes because victims were unable to identify their ski-masked attacker. Bergstrom got probation for trespassing.

Shortly thereafter, the Navy asked Bergstrom to leave his position on a nuclear submarine to avoid court martial proceedings. Investigators said the rapes stopped.

Bergstrom denied the charges, but Mrs. Bergstrom's suspicions were mounting. She spoke with the police and then her husband's commanding officer, who was convinced that her husband was not a rapist.

The couple, then expecting a baby, returned to the Pearland area in 1989.

By then Mrs. Bergstrom said her husband's jealous outbursts and explosive temper had accelerated into beatings and death threats.

The couple's sex life had never been easy on her, a rape victim at 15. He had an aggressive sexual appetite and a fetish for tying her up that made her uncomfortable and afraid, she said.

Police would later say that binding the victims was part of the rapist's ritual. Bergstrom also began jogging - something police said the suspect used as a ruse to locate his victims.

Bergstrom began describing the Washington attacks to his wife, taunting her with details of how he planned and carried out each attack. He confided that he was now spending his lunch breaks peeping into windows, and even drove her around pointing out the houses.

She called local police regularly, offering to show them the houses. She also called "every time I found something" that would suggest her husband was committing crimes, which included handcuffs, rope, a plastic gun and a ski mask in his Pearland Police Capt. E.J. Chapman said he was upset to learn of Mrs. Bergstrom's reports of officer indifference and urged her to file a formal report so that it could be investigated. He said police records indicate only that she once filed a complaint against her husband, but he was unfamiliar with any other contact with the office.

Frustrated by Pearland Police indifference, "I yelled, I screamed, I hollered, I begged and I cried. Then, I left. I tried to help them (police). I tried to help him to stop. Most of all, I was trying to help 'them' - the victims," Mrs. Bergstrom said.

DALLAS (AP) - Lubbock pathologist Ralph Erdmann, indicted and investigated for performing sloppy autopsies across West Texas, says any mistakes he made were caused by a "totally insane" workload.

Erdmann on Sunday told The Dallas Morning News he never intended to do anything wrong.

Pemex has denied responsibility, but on Sunday offered more than $30 million to help rebuild the devastated working-class neighborhood.

Wednesday's blasts injured 1,470 people, damaged or destroyed 1,422 homes, 450 businesses and 600 vehicles, and gouged trenches in five miles of streets, according to the probe, whose results were detailed by Morales Lechuga.

Residents of the stricken Reforma neighborhood were skeptical about whether justice will be done.

'They have now blamed some people," said Fausto Rojas Ramirez, a shopowner in the district. "We will have to wait and see if anyone will be punished."

The latest body was discovered 10-year-old boy.

The probe found that a water main had sprung a leak, eventually corroding and causing a leak in the gasoline pipeline below. The gasoline entered the city sewer system, where it mixed with volatile chemicals including hexane.

On Sunday, police prevented residents from entering one evacuated district near the pipeline break, saying the ground was still saturated with gasoline.

Pemex has claimed the pipe was ruptured by the explosions. However, it issued a statement late Sunday promising $32.8 million to help with reconstruction efforts and try to "mitigate the disgrace." Officials last week estimated the blasts' damage at $300 million. The officials blamed by the probe included Guadalajara's mayor, three city sewer department officials and the state's director of urban development.

Experts: Economy and drugs led to more crime

WASHINGTON (AP) — Crime experts blamed the nation's economic troubles and the illegal drug trade for last year's upswing in violent crimes such as murder, robbery and assault, as well as in crimes against property.

"I think we've seen this coming," said Richard Bennett, professor of justice at American University, who attributed the increase in crime "to the social and economic situation in the urban areas of America.'

"Less and less money is going in for programs in the urban centers" from both federal and state governments, Bennett said. "The little money we spent in the past trying to control this behavior is not there.

Preliminary figures from the FBI's Uniform Crime Reports, released Sunday, show violent crimes reported to police last year increased 5 percent, while reported property crimes rose 2 percent.

The total number of crimes U.S. population, show: reported to police rose 3 percent, continuing a seven-year trend of increases, the 1991 figures showed.

The rate of violent crime per capita rose to the highest level in three decades and the overall crime rate was the second highest since 1960, exceeded only in 1980, according to a comparison of the FBI figures with population figures from the U.S. Census Bureau.

LIFE

According to the FBI figures, reports of murders rose 7 percent, forcible rape and aggravated assault each went up 3 percent and robbery increased 8 percent. The high level of violent crime is 'undoubtedly attributable in part to the drug activity, for which murder is the normal dispute resolution mechanism, and robbery (which often is) the means of getting quick money," said crime expert Alfred Blumstein.

Among property crimes, burglary reports increased 3 percent while larcency-theft and motor vehicle theft both edged up

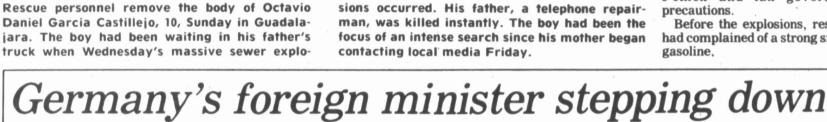

The FBI's figures did not include population estimates for 1991 and, therefore, did not provide a rate of crime per capita.

However, calculations by The Associated Press, based on the FBI's broad percentage changes in reported crime as well as the Census Bureau's estimate of the 1991

• There were 5,880 crimes year. That is the second highest rate in the past three decades.

 The violent crime rate was about 750 per 100,000 residents, the highest in the past three decades.

• The murder rate was 9.9 per 100,000 people, second only to 1980's

Police used traffic barricades to keep them apart as they squared off on opposite sides of a downtown street at the office where abortions are performed.

Opinions from across the U.S. Measure success fairly

The Bush administration has agreed to experimental 'welfare reforms' that it hopes will reduce dependence on the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program. Among the first states to get a waiver from federal guidelines is Wisconsin, which has among the highest welfare benefits in the nation. There, state officials hope to discourage unwed mothers, especially teens, from having more babies by reducing the amount of AFDS paid for subsequent children. Under the plan a single mother with one child would get $440 and with two children only $479. And that would be the limit, whether the mother had three or 13 kids.

In exchange for the cut in benefits, Wisconsin will allow welfare recipients to earn more money and still receive

Will the Wisconsin experiment work? The feds have given the state five years to find out. But success should be measured in human as well as fiscal terms. If the plan simply deepens the under class of wretchedly poor children, that will be even more costly in the long run. The State, Columbia S.C.

Asking trustees to vote against layoffs

To the editor:

I am writing to request members of the Howard County Junior College District Board of Trustees vote in opposition to the layoffs which Dr. Bob Riley will propose at the upcoming board meeting. Furthermore, I request you reconsider Dr. Riley's employment with the college district for reasons I will outline

As an elected member of the HCJCD Board of Trustees, the taxpayers of this county are, indeed, trusting you to oversee the management of the college. As I recall, when the Howard College faculty faced the board two years ago, Dr. Malone stated that as businessmen and doctors the board didn't have the time to "look into these matters." That, "Dr. Riley was hired to do his job, and that the board would allow him to run the college as he saw

. I feel that there are some viable questions to which the board should demand answers. These questions should be addressed to Dr. Riley. Without regulation of his actions, the college could experience a situation similar to the savings and loan crisis. Without regulation, poor decisions proceed unchecked toward chaos. If board members will take the responaibility with which the taxpayers of Howard County have entrusted them, they will look into the items which I will discuss and take action to correct this crisis.

 At a time when the college is facing such a major financial crisis that faculty and staff are being laid off, why was a new dean's position created? Are any administrators being laid off or simply repositioned?

 Monies have been mismanaged. Why, in this time of growth, is the college virtually "broke" with fittle reserve funds? The state cuts have not yet been specifically announced, nor have the cuts affected us at this date. How much reserves do we have? How does it compare to two years ago? Where has it gone?

· How do the new "satellite" campuses outside Howard County, (Snyder, San Angelo, Kerrville, Brownwood, Junction and Fredericksburg) benefit the taxpayers of Howard County? Even though numbers are juggled, some local tax dollars must be being used for these campuses.

• The district has maintained six vice presidents for the last year. This is three times as many is some schools 10 times the size of the HCJCD.

• The cuts in faculty will certainly lead to a student recession. For example, if 20 students who would be recruited to Howard College in theatre go elsewhere, the impact will be felt in the humanities, sciences, speech, computer sence, physical education, developmental studies, etc. These students simply will not be here to take these required subjects needed for graduation and/or transfer. Twenty less full time students will reduce one class for five to eight instructors or the equivalent of yet one more full time position to be eliminated. Multiply this by the six-plus instructors scheduled for nonreappointment and a serious problem arises. I believe that the administration will argue that this will not happen. It may not happen as a pure theory, but it will happen to a devastating degree. They may make an argument that part-time faculty will fill the void. Part-time faculty do not recruit, and students prefer and learn better from full-time qualified faculty. I am sure that our accrediting agency, the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools and governing body the Texas Coordinating Board, will support my opinion.

 Closing arts programs is in direct opposition to stated college district goals, No. 1 and No. 10. Without the arts, the college will not be able to meet the postsecondary educational needs of the people of Howard County. Nor will it be able to provide "an environment in which social and cultural growth is encouraged" or "developing an image of the campuses as cultural center.

 Speech and theatre have in the past been one department. If considered so, both are in "the black." In addition, art is in "the black." Furthermore, suggestions for improvement, change, or regulation from faculty have continually been ignored by the administration.

• It is my understanding that eliminating presidential "perks" would save at least one faculty position.

 It is my belief that continuously maintaining a climate of fear among employees is morally wrong and definitely not Christlike. I believe that if the board were to survey, anonymously, the entire staff, faculty and yes, administrators, the results would show the vast majority live in fear of losing their positions should they speak truth or opinion. If a survey is conducted please have the courage to reveal the honest results.

For these reasons and some I'm sure remain untold, I again ask board members vote in opposition to the layoffs proposed and reconsider the continued employment of Dr. Bob E. Riley. My concern is and has always been for my students, education and fair treatment for all persons. I believe this is supported by my actions as an employee of Howard

With sincere concern.

One small step toward sanity

 ${\bf WASHINGTON-It\ escaped}$ much public notice, but the Consumer Product Safety Commission did something sensible the other day. It rejected a proposal to require labeling of balloons, marbles, small balls, and certain toys with small parts. Ralph Nader's outfit was accordingly outraged.

What a pleasure it is to write something nice about the commission! It is a pleasure seldom experienced. The memory rolls back 20 years. There was the time the commission funded a great study of tricycles. At last the consultants came up with a conclusion for the ages. Are you ready?

"As children grow older, their legs grow longer.

Then there was the study of accidents in bathtubs. The consultants, after exhaustive consultation, advised the commission that "slips and falls are the major causes of bathtub accidents." It was something to think about.

There was the Case of the Oriental Dolls. It involved an importer of those elaborately dressed dolls — the kind that cost a bundle and are intended to be displayed in glass cases. But the costumes were held in place by pins! The pins might prick someone! Take them out this instant!

Power mowers! The commission propounded regulations on power mowers that would have made them 22 pounds heavier than a Patton tank, and with better armor. There was the matter of formaldehyde foam insulation, which the commission irresponsibly banned. And there was the proposal to question accident victims who had been brought to emergency wards even before an intern could begin to sew them up.

ago to require labeling of certain toys that might present a hazard to children from 3 to 5 years of age. The proposal, naturally, came from the Consumer Federation of America (CFA), which regards living and breathing as hazardous occupations and hence subject to federal prohibition.

Nader's Public Interest Research Group (PIRG) climbed aboard. The commission issued a Notice of Proposed Rulemaking, and the staff was off to the races. After months of study, the staff concluded that marbles, balls, balloons and toys with small parts present such dangers that they should bear warning labels. On March 18 the commissioners voted 3-0 against the staff recommendation on marbles, balls and toys. The vote was 2-1 against requiring labels on packages of balloons. The reaction was predictable. PIRG and CFA denounced the commission as a "do-nothing" agency. A lady at the CFA said that "apparently, saving children's lives is not important to this agency." A staff attorney at PIRG blamed the Bush administration for the decision "to ignore the 15 toy-related choking world, our world

I'm thinking of going into politics. I want to become a highranking member of the White House staff.

I guess I'm best suited for vice president since there would be very little work to do.

You take our current vice president, Dan Quayle. He goes to fund raisers and plays golf. Nice work if you can get it.

I could go to fund raisers and I love-golf.

The reason I want to become a high-ranking White House official like Dan Quayle is I want to have military aircraft available to me whenever I want to use it.

I have to fly a lot, and it's a real hassle out there with everybody else and his uncle John flying with Planes are crowded, planes are late, and, believe it or not, there are times Delta isn't ready when I But if I had military aircraft standing by, I wouldn't have to deal with any of that. I wouldn't even have to fight with other passengers to get my choice of magazines on commercial flights. All this came to me when I read about President Bush defending his vice president's use of military aircraft. 'No, he has not," said the president when asked if the vice president had done anything wrong by using military aircraft to go to fund raisers and play golf. I also read where a White House spokesman said the vice president had Air Force Two at his disposal and, as the article said, "Is entitled to recreation the same as

That's true, except for the 'same as anyone'

anyone else.'

I'm entitled to my recreation, but I still have to fly commercial What would even things out is if I also could get on the horn and say, "Hey, guys, crank up Air Force Two! I'm ready for some heavy duty recreation.'

All of us like an occasional perk ourselves once in a while, but we still have to live in the real world. Not only do we have to fly commercial, we also have to make sure there's money in our bank accounts when we write a check. We also have to go out and buy groceries and see that price scanner that stunned President Bush when he went into a supermarket apparently for the first time since he left Yale.

The problem with office holders getting a lot of perks is it goes to their heads and they become little kings and queens and forget about the rest of us.

How can somebody with a huge jet awaiting his whim to go play golf relate to somebody who doesn't have a job or even a home.

How can somebody who has kited hundreds of checks over the years, just because nobody would dare suggest he was doing something wrong, understand having a house full of children and no health insurance because it's gotten too expensive. I may be on to something here, folks. The reason we have a Congress and a White House that seems never able to deal with real problems of real people is they live in one world and we live in another.

Theirs is perks and planes. Ours is work and strains.

I haven't figured out exactly how I'm going to become vice president and enjoy all the trappngs, but I'm working on it.

Emtman top NFL draft selection

NEW YORK (AP) — A falling star rises from the bottom, while a college sensation gets to start at the top.

On a busy day of bartering, with the Dallas Cowboys making almost as many swaps as picks and the Atlanta Falcons trading for a pick they owned when things began, the biggest moves might have involved Eric Dickerson and Desmond

The Indianapolis Colts, who added significantly to their defense with the top two picks - Steve Emtman and Quentin Coryatt also added to their offense by subtraction when they dealt Dickerson to the Los Angeles Raiders for two mid-round choices.

Dickerson was suspended for refusing to practice last season and it was clear for weeks that the Colts wanted to get rid of the NFL's No. 3 career rusher. On Sunday, they reached agreement with the Raiders, a haven for disgruntled talents, sending Dickerson to Los Angeles for a fourth- and an eightround choice.

"I'm happy and relieved,"
Dickerson said. "It's almost like getting drafted all over again. I've always wanted to be a part of the Raiders organization and I really just want to have a chance to go out and win a Super Bowl."

The team that won the Super Redskins, added to their arsenal in style. GM Charley Casserly traded up two spots on the first round, switching with Cincinnati, to take Howard, the Heisman Trophy winner from Michigan. Redskins up with that pace. Tampa Bay, Phoenix, Philadelphia, Minnesota and Houston were without first-round picks in what could be the final draft. The 10-year agreement between the players and management on the draft expires with this one and players have talked about challenging the system with an antitrust suit.

Commuters look for a way to work

BERLIN (AP). - Hundreds of thousands of Germans walked, rode bicycles or hitchhiked to work today as a first wave of public employees' strikes hit many parts of the country.

Union officials said the strikes would be the biggest labor stoppages in post-war Germany.

The extensive and efficient networks of buses, subways and local commuter trains stood idle in west Berlin and in Stuttgart, Hanover and dozens of other western German cities. The jump in the number of private cars on the road brought traffic to a standstill in many areas.

The eastern part of the country, struggling with the transition from a communist to a capitalist economy, was not affected.

Union officials said 35,000 public transportation workers were taking part in the strikes, which are to be followed by other walkouts throughout the week.

The transport union said transit workers would return to the job in west Berlin on Tuesday, but no timetable was set for Munich, Stuttgart and other cities.

'We are leaving it up to local go on," union spokesman Juergen western Germany.

Klasske said in Stuttgart.

It was the first public employees' strike since 1974. In previous years, the public employee unions came to quick compromises on wage demands, but the workers are upset because their incomes are being eroded by 4.7 percent inflation and increased taxes to support unification with eastern Germany.

Their unions are demanding a 9.5 percent pay increase. Government officials say they cannot come anywhere near that.

Public transportation was the primary target of the first day, although thousands of workers in other sectors also stayed off the

In the central state of Hesse, garbage collectors refused to pick up trash. Harbor workers struck in Hamburg, disrupting the city's busy shipping traffic.

Some intercity train service was affected. In Hamburg, striking railroad workers blocked a depot for high-speed trains trying to prevent outside firms from carrying out maintenance work.

Airport workers are among those scheduled to strike in coming days. Postal workers already were on union leaders how long the strikes strike at 30 post offices across

Child's arms reattached

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) - A 6-year-old Wisconsin boy's arms were torn off in a farm accident, and doctors reattached them in an eight-hour operation.

Michael Conoboy of Chetek, Wis., was in critical but stable condition today at St. Paul-Ramsey Medical Center, a nursing supervisor said.

The boy's arms were ripped off on Saturday, when he and his 14-year-old brother were sitting on the long metal arm of a "walking" irrigation system in a field near their rural home. The child's clothing apparently caught in a drive shaft that turns the system's wheels, authorities said.

His brother Matthew Neisler, suffered a broken wrist in the accident.

The two walked home, leaving one arm in the field, emergency room nurse Tom Flottum said. Neighbors drove Michael nine miles to Barron Memorial Medical Center in Barron, Wis. Authorities later found the other arm in the field and rushed it to the hospital.

"He was alert and talking with us the whole time he was here," Flottum said.

A helicopter took Michael 80 miles to the St. Paul hospital, and surgery began three hours after the accident, officials said.

The boy was scheduled for more surgery today, a hospital spokeswoman said. His age and the quick action of neighbors and emergency officials greatly increased his prospects for recovery,

The case was similar to that of 18-year-old John Thompson of Hurdsfield, N.D., whose arms were severed in a farm accident in mid-January. Thompson, who was alone, got into his house and dialed for help with a pencil held between his teeth

The option that would cost $504,500 does require the replacement of the old system with a central system. The highest costing option calls for demolition of the existing center and constructing a new 9,600-square-foot facility at the same location.

Decell and the board have been criticized for using an out-of-town firm. Critics contend that the job could be done by locals for a fraction of the price.

In his defense, Decell said, "With one full-time certified architect in the phone book, we went to a firm who had the full blown capabilities to do what we needed. This is not taking anything away from or judging the locals, but it is a matter of scale. You can not compare apples with oranges.' He added, "When you are dealing with a public facility, specifications must be made before you accept bids from contractors. We can not just say we want the roof replaced and allow contractors to make their own specifications.

The remodeling of the center is still in its early phase. The board must collect funds to cover the refurbishment costs. It will then go

City Council to vote on settling lawsuit tonight

By GARY SHANKS

Staff Writer

A resolution allowing Midland attorney Rick Strange to settle the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC) redistricting lawsuit will be voted on by the Big Spring City Council in tonight's meeting.

The suit was filed in 1991 by LULAC and has been the topic of numerous closed sessions of the council.

Several variations of the current, three at-large, three singlemember-district council elections, are acceptable to LULAC, according to San Antonio Attorney Rolando Rios.

LULAC will accept six singlemember districts along a new district map, which sets aside two districts with a Hispanic majority. Also acceptable is the current district map with two council members elected from each district, Rios said.

Family finds history across the ocean

By Lea Whitehead for the Herald

In 1873 John McCorquodale, age 18, and three other young lads left their native Scotland to make their fortunes in America.

With some experience in sheep raising, the foursome felt their best opportunities could be found in Texas. They first settled in Throckmorton County, and eventually migrated to the Garden City area in 1912.

John had married Anna Talk in Throckmorton and brought her to West Texas. He raised a family five girls and one son - and developed a business as a breeder of Rambouillet sheep. He corresponded with relatives back in Scotland and often dreamed of revisiting his boyhood home.

The McCorquodale family home near Garden City burned in the 1920s, destroying letters, photos, the family Bible and other personal things. John's wife died, and the children went to live with his sister. John died in 1927 at the age of 62; he is buried in a rural cemetary along with his three friends from Scotland.

With his death, the links in the Texan and Scottish McCorquodale family chain were broken.

Only one of John McCorquodale's daughters is still living: Anna Hardy, 86, of Big Spring. Anna has hazy memories of her girlhood in Garden City; she has visited her father's resting place there. Over the years she tried to find some of her family's ties, but there wasn't much to go on.

Her daughter, Millie Cunningham, got caught up in her mother's search for the McCorquodale roots. Nearly 10 years ago, Millie and her sister, Mona Roche, Killeen, took a trip to Oban. When they visited the city's municipal building, they found that a fire early in this century had wiped out records for the years they needed to research.

Christina McIntyre, wrote letters to U.S. newspapers and other publications, asking for help in locating John, but they never received any response. Eventually both passed away.

States to visit his only remaining family.

The funeral home did indeed have a record of John McCorquodale. He had passed away May 14, 1927, and the body was sent to Garden City for burial.

Phone calls to Garden City sources failed to turn up anything further, and Harry believed he had reached another dead end. But a kindly deputy sheriff, Fred

Now the fence is falling down. Technology, the changing nature of work and the growing number of women in the labor force are redefining the office and home, experts say. People trying to balance their work and personal lives are also blending the two.

"It used to be you never brought your family problems to work, and you never brought your work home to your family," said Robert E. Kelly, a business professor and author at Carnegie Mellon University.

'Now it goes both ways: People bring their pets and their kids to work, and they bring their lap-top computers and their beepers

The dawn of computers, fax machines and portable phones has made it possible to work anywhere, anytime. That can be a blessing or a bane.

'Traditionally, the women have been the care-givers, the nurturers, the people who take care of the children, the dogs, the cats, everything in the house," she said. "Suddenly there isn't anyone any longer at home.

Slightly more than half the women with infants were in the labor force last year, compared to about a third in 1980, according to the U.S. Census Bureau.

Mobile Americans have left behind the relatives who could help out in a pinch. Even those who still live near family often find that the aunts, sisters and grandmothers they would turn to have jobs, too.

The average professional is spending more time at work, about 47.5 hours a week, Fortino said. The long hours make it tough to find time for personal matters, such as errands or phone calls, so people are devoting more time at the office to those things, he said.

Study finds California's workfare program pays program is paying off by cutting welfare costs and boosting participants' earnings, a study

The 7-year-old program, known as Greater Avenues for Independence, requires most heads of households with no children under 3 to work, get job training or receive education as long as they are on welfare.

The study found that single parents taking part in GAIN earned 17 percent more than a control group of those who had not joined the program. The GAIN group also received 5 percent less in welfare during the same year.

The largest program of its kind in the nation, GAIN was a model for a 1988 federal law requiring every state to run a work, education or training program for welfare recipients. The law provides up to $1 billion a year in matching funds.

Sen. Daniel Patrick Movnihan. D-N.Y., who helped write the law,

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - told The New York Times the California's pioneering workfare, study findings were "very positive" and especially heartening because California's program is "still in what's basically a start-up mode."

The study, which focused on 33,000 welfare recipients in six California counties, was conducted by the non-profit Manpower Demonstration Research Corp. of New York. It was released today.

Judith M. Gueron, president of the research organization, said the results suggest what might be achieved by the federally backed programs

"Although it is still too early to paint a full picture, the shortterm findings suggest that this kind of approach is worth pursing," she said.

Christopher Jencks, a Northwestern University sociologist, disagreed, saying "small, positive benefits" won't solve the problem of burgeoning welfare

Mexican prison labor stirs controversy

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) Sawdust, floating on air, drifts from the cracked window in Tito Guzman Peralta's jailhouse workshop and settles on the concrete sidewalk and white stuccoed windowsill.

It stirs again only when prisoners rush past on their way to jobs in a trinket factory, a leather shop or another work place in the Juarez federal prison's labor quarter.

"I can make anything to order," says Guzman, who has learned to carve ornate wooden furniture in the traditional Mexican style while serving time for dealing heroin.

Guzman, like roughly half the prison's 1,100 inmates, works eight hours a day in an effort to keep food on his family's table while he's in jail, and to make a little extra money to buy comfort in a prison where most things, including conjugal visits from his wife, are allowed.

But a proposal to expand the work program by having a couponsorting company set up shop in the prison has drawn the anger of a San Antonio congressman, who denounces the coupon work as slave labor that will take jobs from the United States.

Prison officials defend the program, saying it provides vital skills that can turn inmates' lives around.

Guzman has been one of the beneficiaries. Inside his concrete block workshop, Guzman, considered the prison's master wood craftsman after four years in the slammer, whipped out a plastic binder and showed a visitor photographs of the ornate wooden tables, chairs, cabinets and bed frames he carves. "Just bring me a magazine picture of what you want, and I'll make it - mirror frames, bird cages, whatever you want," he said. Guzman's steady hands have won him business from a Juarez home decorator and a job offer from the owner of a woodworking shop on the outside — a proposition he plans to accept when he's released from jail in about six

Prison officials defend the program, saying it provides vital skills that can turn inmates' lives around.

Work space and resources are limited and job training inside the prison, known as CeReSo, mostly happens only when an older inmate is willing to pass the secrets of his trade to an apprentice before he's done serving his time. CeReSo is a Spanish acronym for Social Rehabilitation Center.

Though the prison is trying to drum up sewing and manufacturing contracts from private business, only about half of the prisoners who work there do so through the prison's organized labor programs, work therapy manager Gilberto Enriquez Miranda said. Dozens more shine shoes for prisoners and visitors who wander daily through the maze of fences in the prison yard.

They weave leather belts at makeshift work benches in their cells or on open patios. They cut teardrop-shaped leather key chains to sell on Sunday — family day — or they cook, cut hair, mend clothing and bake for other prisoners willing to pay for the

The prison has recently tried to expand its work program and give it more structure by inviting a Mexican coupon-sorting company that would eventually employ hundreds of inmates on prison grounds. The company would supply supervision and training to turn inmates into maquiladora workers, the prison would supply the manpower, and the company would keep the profits.

The company, Tecnicas Unidas de Mexico, wants to rent a newly of the prison grounds, hire by U.S. retailers, then ship the coupons back to the United States constructed warehouse on a corner prisoners to sort oupons collected for disposal or further processing. But U.S. Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, has asked the U.S.

Customs Service to deny the company's request for import permits under a 50-year-old federal law that forbids the importation of products made with slave or forced

Gonzalez worries that cheap prison labor would quicken the flight of U.S. jobs to Mexico, where workers in assembly plants for years have supplied low-cost manpower to U.S. and other foreign corporations.

Gonzalez's accusations have frustrated officials at the prison, where some work programs — a sewing shop where guard uniforms and intramural sports T-shirts are made - already are idle for lack of work. Prison officials say a structured maquiladora-like factory such as the one Tecnicas Unidas has proposed would give inmates training that could help them find jobs and legally support their families when they are released.

"I don't know this congressman personally," jail administrator Jose Grajeda said. "But I'm sure that if he came, he'd see what was going on and he'd stop making those accusations. We aren't cutting cocaine or growing marijuana. This is clean, honest work. The salary that we pay here is the same as what they'd get on the outside.'

The work programs at the Juarez prison are similar to those in U.S. prisons, where inmates make street signs, license plates and furniture for government office buildings. But at the Juarez prison, the inmate is mostly in charge of his own business. In all but a few lines of work, the profit belongs to the craftsman. And the prisoner gets out of jail one day early for every two days that he works.

Guzman makes furniture and decorative items for a handful of clients in the private sector and for people who hear about his work through word of mouth.

Schroeder, promised he would call around among some of the area oldtimers to see if he could come up with any tips.

The Oban connection didn't hold out much hope that the officer would go to the bother, but sure enough, two days later, the deputy had come up with two names. The first name didn't pan out. But Maxine Steel put Harry on the trail again. Yes, she knew about John McCorquodale. She remembered the family had a son, James Archibald, who had been killed in World War I. She passed along the name of Allie B. Cook, another longtime Glasscock County resident. And Cook said he knew the name of a relative of John McCorquodale who lived in Big Spring. That name was Anna Hardy.

When the phone rang at Anna's home that day, her daughter, Millie Cunningham, answered. The caller, in a distinct Scottish brogue, asked "Do you know John McCorquodale?" The impossible dream had come true. The McCorquodale family ties had come together again. Harry Brown was a recent visitor in Big Spring. He and Millie spent a great deal of time trying to piece the family history together. The family was small. Many of John's brothers and sisters had not married. And many of his children born in Texas remained single. When John's wife died and his offspring went to live with his sister, the family history was further

They took him to see the ranch where John had raised sheep in Garden City, and to the cemetary where he was laid to rest. Harry's only vision of the place where his great-uncle had settled long ago was based on scenes from TV's "Dallas," still popular in re-

"It was so beautiful," Millie recalls. "Why would he have ever

But Harry was equally thrilled with what he found here. He finds the area picturesque and the residents the friendliest he has ever encountered.

But even more than that, says Harry, "Look at what all those people (who came to America) did! Just look at America!"

U.S. households no longer shrinking

WASHINGTON (AP) - Hard times have helped halt a 140-year trend toward fewer Americans living under one roof, the Census

A study by the agency, released Wednesday, says Americans last year interrupted the tendency toward less togetherness that has long defined the nation's way of living. In 1850, on average nearly six people lived in each dwelling. Now it's close to 2.5 people, a number that has staved about the same for three years. The onset of recession in 1989 also helped keep households from getting smaller, as hard times kept adult children from leaving parents to form their own, individual households. If offspring can't maintain their standard of living when they leave home, some may choose to keep living with their parents, said Census Bureau demographer Steve Rawlings, author of the study.

In a sign that American families were having trouble making ends meet, the number of households in which married couples or single adults with children lived with relatives rose for two straight years.

Patricia Ruggles, senior researcher at The Urban Institute, predicted that household size will start contracting again once the recession ends.

But she noted that broader changes in the economy discourage youngsters from leaving home early.

"If you're a high school graduate or not even a high school graduate and looking for a job, you're going to make a lot less today than you would have in 1960," she said. "Housing prices are much higher compared to what young workers are likely to

Today's young adults deal with the problem by marrying later, having children later and working more hours, she said. Another reason households quit getting smaller is because the huge baby-boom generation is having children of its own. "The baby boomers now are past family formation," said demographer Carl Haub of the Population Reference Bureau. But "If they're spacing children, some of them are having them now.

Generally, people born from 1946 through 1964 are considered baby boomers.

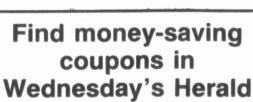

Among the bureau's other

-There were 94.3 million households last year, about 1 million more than in 1990. The average of 2.63 people in a household compares with 2.76 in 1980, 3.14 in 1970, 3.67 in 1940 and 4.76 in 1900

-Although household size has stabilized, people are having fewer children. In 1970, about one family in six had three or more children. Last year, only one family in 14 had that many.

-There were 10.1 million single-parent households last year, nearly triple the number 20 years earlier. -Children lived in about a third of the nation's households. That's down from nearly half in 1970.

THE FAMILY CIRCUS

DEAR ABBY: My brother and his wife are very staunch believers in their religion. Last year their church had their 14-year-old son send out letters to not only friends, neighbors and relatives, but to friends and relatives of his grandparents as well. The letters requested a $100 donation to help send this boy to a two-month religious camp in Europe to help spread the word.

To say that we were aghast is to put it mildly. Everyone felt that if his parents wanted him to have this proselytizing experience and training, they should foot the bill themselves. (They can well afford

DEAR AGHAST: I know of no "tactful" way to tell anyone that he has a lot of guts hitting on his relatives, friends and neighbors for donations to send his son to a religious retreat — especially when he can foot the bill himself.

And don't worry about causing a 'serious rift" in your family. Nervy people need to be told when they have gone too far. To cave in to their demands would only invite more of the same. Trust me!

DEAR ABBY: I recently read a letter in your column about a restaurant regular who gets offended by servers who ask, "Do you want any change back?" I have been a waitress for 15 years, and I've asked customers that several times if (1) I am extremely busy -asking will save time and steps — or (2) the change is obviously 15 percent. Now this may sound rude, but it's
