Fireworks fund grows but help still needed

The Fourth of July fireworks fund has grown to the point that only about $1,500 needs to be raised, according to Eddie Cole, who is chairing the project for the Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce.

"We will have one of the few fireworks celebrations in West Texas this July 4 and it will be as big as ever," Cole said. "Members of the community have responded to our fund-raising efforts and we are extremely close to being where we need."

For more information, call the chamber office at 263-7641.

Luncheon set Tuesday

The second of four Community Luncheons sponsored by the Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce will be held at 11:45 Tuesday in the East Room of Dorothy Garrett Coliseum. The luncheon is sold-out and no tickets will be available.

State Sen. John T. Montford, D-Lubbock, will be the keynote speaker at the luncheon, which will recognize employees at four local government facilities. The luncheon is sponsored by the Big Spring Herald.

Steers underdogs in state play

By MIKE BUTTS
Staff Writer

Not long after the Big Spring Steers captured the Class 4A Region I baseball championship someone asked coach Bobby Doe what the secret to his team's success was.

"We're underdogs," Doe said. "(Nobody) except us thinks we can do it."

If that's the case, look out, because the Steer's will certainly maintain their role as underdogs at 2:30 Thursday afternoon in Austin's Disch-Falk Field against defending 4A champion Robstown.

The Cotton Pickers have had one of the best, if not the best, 4A baseball program in the state over the last six years. They have been to the state championships five times in that span and have played in the state championship game in the past two seasons.

This year's team posts a 27-6 record and has won 12 of its last 13 games. Perhaps the best indication of the strength of the '92 Cotton Pickers is that the team's winning pitcher in last year's state championship game is now the third man in the team's starting rotation.

Festival deemed success

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

Lightning Saturday night caused the cancellation of a dance to cap off the 9th Annual Heart of the City Festival, reducing weekend crowd turnout, but it was still deemed a success.

The threatening weather was not caused by three rain dances included in performances that afternoon by two groups of Indian dancers, joked Barry Barnett, coordinator for the festival put on by Big Spring Main Street Inc. to promote the downtown area and raise funds for revitalization.

"Some of our members think they caused the rain to come," Barnett said.

An estimated 3,000 to 4,000 attended the weekend event, down from 5,000 to 8,000 attending last year, Barnett said. But funds raised from the 70-booth festival, which cost up to $4,000 to put on, may match the $1,700 from last year.

"The cancellation of the Saturday night dance hurt us quite a bit but I'm very hopeful that we made or exceeded what we did last year," he said. "All the vendors were pretty much happy, I think they all made some money."

But raising funds is not the only purpose of the festival.

"One thing it does do for downtown," he said, "it brings people to the downtown area to look around. There's a lot of things in the downtown area."

Commenting on negative commentaries by a local radio station that the festival is over serving its purpose, he said, "The purpose of this festival, of the 'sideshow' as it was called, is to raise money for the downtown area. We don't have any other way to do it, we don't go knocking from door to door."

Barnett said about 30 volunteers worked half a year, putting social lives on hold in some cases, to bring the festival to fruition.

"Our volunteers for this thing came down and busted their tails for this thing," he said. "We couldn't do this if the volunteers didn't help us."

Highlights of the festival included the Lakota Native American dancers from Odessa Explorer Post 776 and the Wopalanne Native American dancers from Midland Explorer Post 225.

Eight bands played music Friday night and all day Saturday. Destino played Tejano music for a street dance. Heartless, a country-music band that plays some rock 'n' roll, was scheduled to play for a street dance Saturday night.

Heartless was cancelled because of concerns that lightning could jeopardize safety, Barnett said. "It's better to be safe than sorry."

PLO acting head killed

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — The acting head of PLO intelligence was shot to death early today in front of a Paris hotel, the organization said. PLO chairman Yasser Arafat blamed Israel for the assassination, but Israel called the charge "ridiculous."

Atef Bseiso, 44, was killed by seven shots from a gun equipped with a silencer, said Ahmed Abdel-Rahman, the PLO spokesman at the organization's headquarters in Tunis, Tunisia.

In Amman, Jordan, where he is recuperating from brain surgery, Arafat said he had warned PLO officials that "Mossad will follow every one of us, especially before the (Israeli) elections." Mossad is Israel's secret service. Arafat said he had warned Bseiso in particular. "I told him you are going to Europe, so be careful. But the Mossad was waiting for him."

In Jerusalem, a spokesman for Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, Ehud Gol, said, "These allegations are totally and completely ridiculous and they don't even deserve responding to."

Abdel-Rahman said Bseiso was getting out of a taxi with a friend in front of the Meridien Montparnasse, a Left Bank hotel, when the midnight killing occurred. The killer fled the scene.

French police did not immediately confirm the incident.

The assassination was the latest in a series that have depleted the upper ranks of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Three of Arafat's key lieutenants have been assassinated over the past four years, stripping the organization of its leading strategists and leaving the group with no strong candidate to replace the 62-year-old Arafat as PLO chairman if needed.

In a telephone interview, Abdel-Rahman said Israel's government carried out the assassination "to support the Shamir campaign" on the eve of elections, "to say, 'Look, we are very strong, we are the ones who defend the Israeli people.'"

"In fact, they killed an innocent man who was for peace," he said.

Shamir's Likud coalition faces a strong challenge from the Labor Party in Israel's legislative elections June 23.

Palestinian sources in Paris said Bseiso was there for talks with French police about security for PLO representatives in France. Abdel-Rahman, however, said Bseiso was spending the night in Paris en route from Germany to Tunis because he missed a connecting Heavy weekend rains pose tough decisions for area cotton farmers.

Shortly after 2 this morning, a storm cell with cloud tops at about 42,000 feet moved from the east across Big Spring dumping 1.4-1.76 inches of rain on the city in about 30 minutes, according to the National Weather Service and local weather watchers.

Winds topping 60 mph were also reported during the storm, said a NWS official in Midland.

"At 2:25, the one over you had dissipated and another began building near Gal," the NWS spokesman said.

Areas north of Big Spring reported greater amounts with 2.3 inches of rain falling in Knott and a similar amount received in Saturday's thunderstorms.

said Howard County farmer Larry Shaw.

Cotton seeds were buried deeply in mud and water, ruining the seeds, Shaw said. Some of these fields were being planted for the second time this season, he added.

Farmers in Knott and Luther have tough decisions to make with fields full of water and the June 10 deadline for crop insurance passing, Shaw said.

Last year, many farmers planted after this date due to late yet hard rains. An early frost, however, decimated the cotton crops causing small yields of poor quality cotton, according to Herald records.

"It's going to be several days before we can plant again — some are going to have to take the crop insurance on some fields and that's bad because it runs your rates up," Shaw said.

Dallas' teenage curfew still not being enforced

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — A year after Dallas became the first city in the state to pass a teen curfew, the law gathers dust while other cities have begun enforcing their newer ordinances.

Challenges to the Dallas law landed it in court and out of bounds for enforcement, but City Council is expected to refine the ordinance Wednesday so police can begin enforcement.

The revisions are intended to help the curfew pass judicial review, and — like the original ordinance — expected to pass easily.

"I'm sure the ACLU still doesn't like it," said Don Postell, assistant city attorney. "I think they've got problems with the concepts of juvenile curfew ordinance. But from my standpoint, I think we've got it worked out."

The revised ordinance would require those under 17 years old to be off the streets by 11 p.m. weekdays and midnight on weekends.

Joe Cook, executive director of the North Texas office of the American Civil Liberties Union, said the ordinance is unconstitutional and would permit police to harass residents.

"This gives police the license to stop people without probable cause. That's the real serious problem we have with it," Cook said.

Bruce Anton, attorney for those challenging the curfew, said the city has been unable to justify the ordinance. There is nothing to suggest a large number of juvenile crimes occur during the curfew hours, he said.

U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer of Dallas is expected to conduct a hearing soon after the council's vote.

Council originally adopted the ordinance on June 12, 1991, acting at the urging of Police Chief Bill Rathburn, who said police will be able to more effectively deal with gangs and young drug dealers.

Several other Texas cities have proceeded with teen curfews of their own. San Antonio's went into effect on Aug. 7, 1991, Houston's on Nov. 9, 1991, and Fort Worth's on April 1, 1992.

"Our ordinance seems to be working well," said Servio Soto, director of San Antonio's office of youth initiatives. "Officers in the field say it's reduced youth activity by about 60 percent."

"So far, the city council's satisfied, and so are we," Soto said.

In the juvenile division of the Houston police department, Sgt. A.D. Moore said early protests against the ordinance soon subsided, "but our ordinance hasn't been in effect long enough to analyze what effect it will have."

Fort Worth's ordinance calls for a warning letter on the first offense and a fine of up to $200 for repeat violations.

"We have issued 39 warning letters to the parents, but there have been no repeat offenders so far," said Sgt. Calvin E. Wallace of the youth section of the Fort Worth police department.

"Officers on the street tell us they're seeing less groups of kids hanging out at the night spots and things of that nature," Wallace said.

As originally written, the Dallas ordinance called for police officers to give violators two warnings, then take them into custody on subsequent offenses.

"The ordinance now has officers just issue a citation, the same as a speeding ticket. Taking a kid in is a fairly heavy penalty. This is a much better procedure," Postell said.

Those ticketed would have the option of appearing later before a city judge, either to plead guilty or no contest, or to challenge the citation.

The newest version of the ordinance requires officers to ask teens caught after the curfew if they qualify under any of the exceptions to the ordinance: work, school, religious and city-sponsored recreation activities, interstate travel, emergencies and errands for parents and guardians.

"If you're caught speeding but you have a medical emergency, you're probably not going to get a ticket," Postell said. "The same is true here. If it's 2 o'clock in the morning and you've got a 16-year-old kid going to an all-night pharmacy to get medicine for his little brother, that's justifiable."

There has been no wave of protests from movie theaters or other businesses over the proposed ordinance, Postell said.

"Most movies are over in time. If they start at 9, they're probably over about then. I suspect they're not going to have much trouble with that. If there was a problem, they could start their movies a little bit earlier," he added.

"Now, if a kid is out on the street at 1 or 2 o'clock, and he says he's on the way home from a ballgame that ended at 10:30, they're going to have a problem with that."

Juveniles would be allowed to accompany a parent or guardian during curfew hours, or to be out with someone over 18 with the permission of a parent or guardian. Previously, the person in charge had to be at least 21.

Also, in the last session of the Legislature, lawmakers changed the jurisdiction for Class C misdemeanors, Postell said.

"It previously was in state district court if it had to do with juveniles. Now, a Class C misdemeanor, whether juvenile or adult, is going to be handled in municipal court," Postell said.

Austin teen still in hospital

AUSTIN (AP) — A 16-year-old boy remains hospitalized with wounds suffered during a weekend shooting, Sgt. F. Spencer said. "Shots were fired from an adjacent field."

One boy said the shots may have been fired by people who were asked to leave. The first shots came from a passing car, said Macario Gonzalez, 16.

"We just thought it was somebody making pranks," said Gonzalez, who was not injured. "We didn't think anything of it."

Later, they came from a field across from the crowd of 30 to 50 people.

"We heard the shots and saw the flames," Gonzalez said. "Pellets were hitting everywhere and ricocheting off things. Everybody just ran and ducked or jumped behind something."

Fifteen teens were treated and released from hospitals, officials said. Police said they believe at least two others also were hit by gunfire but were not transported to hospitals.

A neighbor said the party had been rowdy for several hours. She heard the gunfire from her home.

"We could hear boom, boom. You could hear the shots," said Virginia Contreras. "I could hear some screaming. There was someone yelling: 'Oh no. Oh no.'"

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Anne Archer plays yet another suffering wife in her latest movie, "Patriot Games."

"Although I have done many other types of parts, casting people kept thinking of me as a wife and mother," she said in Sunday's "The Tennessean."

Archer, who won an Oscar nomination for her role as Michael Douglas' forgiving wife in "Fatal Attraction," plays Harrison Ford's wife and the target of Irish terrorists in the new thriller based on the Tom Clancy book.

"At least Cathy is a strong, bright woman instead of some dippy broad. She's a brilliant eye surgeon, in complete control of herself," the actress said.

NEW YORK — Dionne Warwick ignored warnings about her ailing back and flew to New York to perform at a tribute, despite collapsing hours earlier at the airport.

The 50-year-old Grammy-winning singer flew in a private jet Saturday and arrived while the Friars Club salute to Arista Records chief Clive Davis was under way at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

Lee Solters, club spokesman, said Warwick had been warned by doctors not to fly and collapsed at the Los Angeles airport, missing two flights.

Warwick sang "I'll Never Love This Way Again" with Barry Manilow, who helped hold her up, said Selma Gore, a club spokeswoman.

Officials hope to stop TB despite statewide spread

AUSTIN (AP) — Health officials are hoping the state can help them stop the spread of infectious tuberculosis, which may be nearing epidemic proportions nationwide.

"We have an epidemic (and) our system is not working," said John Bybee director of the Texas Department of Health's TB program. "We don't have the resources to prevent this thing."

The Centers for Disease Control has compiled figures showing the state's TB case jumped from 13.2 per 100,000 people in 1990 to 14.2 in 1991. That boosted the state from seventh to fourth in the nation, behind New York, Hawaii and California. The analysis also showed Austin, with a rate of 24.6 cases per 100,000 people in 1991, up from 21.5 in 1990. The city ranks 16th among the 40 U.S. cities with the worst rates.

TB rates in Houston, Fort Worth and San Antonio also increased in 1991. Dallas was the only major Texas city to see its rate go down.

Dr. Ken Hine, medical director of the TB clinic at the Travis County Health Department, said he wasn't surprised to find where Austin ranked on the list.

"Austin has big city problems now," Hine said. "We have a very large population that lives in poverty. Crack is epidemic (here) and it's associated with TB because people who smoke it do so in close quarters with others who have the disease."

TB is usually passed through the air by people who live in crowded conditions. Most cases are curable with a six- to 12-month regimen of drugs, some of which are toxic and cause discomfort. The disease can be deadly if untreated.

The health department believes one of the best ways to control the statewide epidemic is to begin testing and treating prisoners in city and county jails.

School officials upset following exposure of sex-offender workers

DALLAS (AP) — School officials say they should have been told two employees were serving probation for sex offenses against children even if mental health experts thought they posed no risk.

Two county judges superseded longstanding probation department policy by not telling officials in Dallas and Plano about the employees' records, The Dallas Morning News reported Sunday.

The policy routinely requires probationers to inform their employers when they have committed offenses that pose a special risk, the newspaper said.

Lawyers for the two men, a maintenance worker and a teacher, stressed neither man was technically convicted of crimes since both cases involved non-adjudicated probation.

Because of their particular cases, neither man would pose a risk inside schools, mental health experts told the judges.

In some cases, a judge may have "better information than we do... that this person doesn't pose a risk," said Ron Goethals, director of Dallas County's probation department.

But school officials still think they should have been told.

"Absolutely, I think school districts have a right to know if the offenses are against children," Dallas Independent School District Superintendent Marvin Edwards said. "If we err at all, we should err on behalf of the children."

The News found nearly 200 people who committed felonies in Dallas County were employed by the DISD.

A 1989 state law requires school districts to do criminal background checks on new employees. But The News found many employees with criminal records had been hired since the law took effect.

DISD has taken steps to fire 51 individuals identified when The News requested access to their personnel files.

Those employees either lied on their job applications or had a current conviction or non-adjudicated probation, said Robby Collins.

L.A. seeks legal advice to remove Gates

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Alarmed by Police Chief Daryl Gates' threat to postpone his retirement again, the Police-Commission has moved to hire a lawyer for help in getting the city's top cop to clean out his desk.

"The chief has gone too far," commission President Stanley K. Sheinbaum said Sunday after the panel voted to seek City Council approval for an outside lawyer. A City Council vote was set for Tuesday.

Gates threatened on Friday to put off his June 30 retirement if the city failed to extend the eligibility of eight officers up for promotion. His 2-year-old list of candidates expired Sunday; the chief had no immediate comment.

A delay by Gates could nullify the appointment of his successor.

The City Council probably will agree to an outside lawyer, said Councilman Mike Woo, who has called for Gates' immediate dismissal.

'I think for the first time there's enough courage on the City Council to hear what the people have said and say it's time for Chief Gates to go.'

Mike Woo
L.A. Councilman

"I think for the first time there's enough courage on the City Council to hear what the people have said and say it's time for Chief Gates to go," Woo said.

The 14-year chief has been under pressure to step down since the 1991 videotaped beating of Rodney King. During the furor, he announced plans to leave, but he pushed his retirement date back once, from April to June.

The civilian Police Commission, appointed by Mayor Tom Bradley, can fire Gates for misconduct only.

Woo said the chief's performance during the Los Angeles riots is reason enough for removal. Gates was widely criticized for his department's slow response in the early hours of the riots.

An outside lawyer is needed because the City Attorney's Office has a conflict of interest: It represents Gates in scores of lawsuits.

Gates, who normally attends commission meetings, was absent Sunday.

Sheinbaum said of the man hired to replace Gates, Philadelphia Police Commissioner Willie L.

Williams: "He's cool, he's cool. He understands it, doesn't like it, but there's nothing he can do about it and knows it."

If Gates remains on the job through July 15, city and county officials probably will have certified passage of a police reform measure approved by voters last week.

Under the City Charter amendment, prompted by the King beating, the authority to choose a chief shifts from the commission to the mayor and City Council. Williams, who would become the city's first black chief, was hired by the commission.

If the amendment takes effect without Williams in office, the city will have to advertise the position again.

Some City Council members said if Gates tries to stay, they will try to dock his $177,000 salary to $133,000.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — With three working days left, delegates to the U.N. Earth Summit turned today to one of the trickiest issues at the gathering: who will pay to clean up and protect the environment.

Developing countries want industrialized nations to provide the money and allow recipient governments to decide how it will be spent.

The United States and other industrialized nations, however, are strapped by tight budgets and are unwilling to give up control over what funds they do provide.

Delegates from all 178 U.N. members were to resume sessions today following a weekend recess. They are racing to complete three treaties by Wednesday so that they are ready for signing by the more than 116 heads of state, including President Bush, who is due to arrive by Friday.

Delegates also are crafting the Rio Declaration of environmental principles, which include the principle that polluters must pay for cleaning up their own pollution, and a document called Agenda 21 that spells out how the principles would be enacted and enforced.

The summit's coordinator, Maurice Strong of Canada, says cleanup costs could top $125 billion a year.

Delegates are also lobbying for signatures for two treaties finished last week: one on global warming and the other to protect plant and animal species in danger of extinction.

Both almost certainly will receive the minimum number of signatures by heads of state, including those from Europe and Japan, to be enacted. That made opposition to the latter by Bush, who insists it might hurt U.S. business, hard to explain even to allies.

In Washington, where he met Sunday with Prime Minister John Major of Britain, Bush said he has "nothing to be apologetic for" in his position on Earth Summit issues.

Speaking at a news conference in Camp David, he said his obligation is to protect American jobs as well as the environment.

Australia has signed the treaty on protecting the planet's biological diversity. Ros Kelly, Australia's environmental minister, urged the United States to sign the treaty "if not in the interest of the living things of the planet, then in their own self-interest."

Regarding the global warming treaty, the Bush administration ordered its negotiators to remove a section that would have capped production by a certain date. It was removed.

Helms' condition downgraded

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms stopped breathing and was put on a respirator, but a doctor said his prospects for a full recovery from open-heart surgery remained good.

The 70-year-old conservative Republican underwent heart valve replacement and quadruple bypass surgery Wednesday. He stopped breathing early Sunday.

"Obviously, this setback will extend his stay in the intensive care unit by several days," said Dr. Bertram Coffey, head of anesthesiology at Rex Hospital.

Helms' condition was downgraded from good to fair.

An anesthesiologist in the room at the time used a squeeze bag to force air into Helms' lungs for about a minute until he could be put on the respirator, officials said. Coffey said no effort was needed to keep Helms' heart beating.

The doctor said Helms would be taken off the respirator today.

The problem was caused by an accumulation of fluid in his respiratory tract, Coffey said.

He said doctors are optimistic about Helms' prospects for recovery.

Coronary bypass began in the 1960s as a way of increasing circulation to the heart. The average hospital stay after such surgery is 10 days to two weeks followed by recuperation at home for up to six weeks, doctors said.

Helms, who has championed tobacco interests for years, quit smoking in May, his wife, Dorothy, said last week.

A former TV editorialist and newspaper editor, Helms was elected to the Senate in 1972. His current term runs through 1996.

Japan: Trade practices unfair

TOKYO (AP) — Japan has had a bellyful of criticism of its trade practices and lashed back today with some accusations of its own.

The government's first "Report on Unfair Trade Practices by Major Trading Partners" is rife with complaints about the countries that have most harshly attacked Japanese trading practices, particularly the United States.

An official of the Ministry of International Trade and Industry who presented the paper to reporters said it was intended only as a basis for talks on resolving trade disputes and not to assess blame.

He spoke on condition his name not be used.

U.S. officials who saw the report before it was officially released characterized it as a cathartic exercise — a chance for Japanese bureaucrats to hit back at all the accusations that have been made against Japan, which rang up a world trade surplus of $63.5 billion last year. Japan sold $43.4 billion more in goods to the United States than it bought.

In March, the United States presented its own laundry list of unfair traders, with Japan at the top.

The Japanese report is "tit-for-tat," said Naohiro Amaya, a former top Japanese trade negotiator who now heads a private research center, the Dentsu Institute for Human Studies.

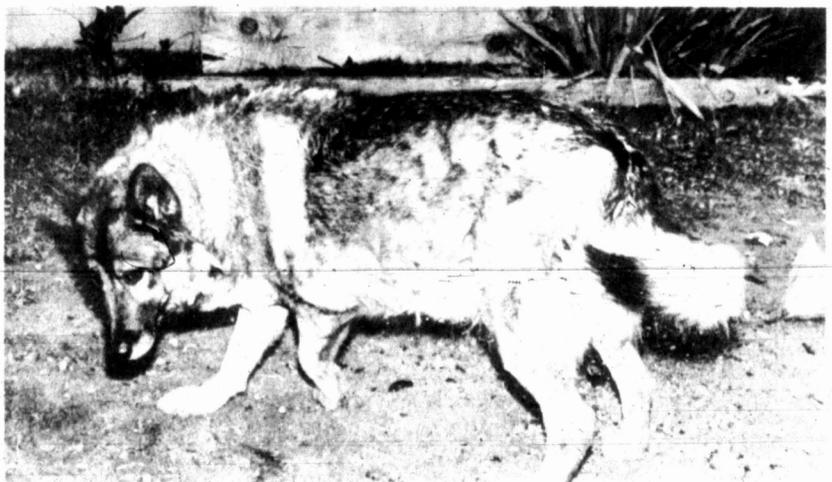

The report accuses the United States of unfair trading policies in nine out of 10 areas, and of frequently abusing international trade rules for its own advantage.

Among the report's charges:

- "Buy American" laws restrict government purchases to mostly U.S. goods and services and discriminate against Japanese products, the same complaint U.S. trade officials have made about Japanese government contracts.

- Trade restrictions imposed for reasons of U.S. national security are unfair because the concept of national security is vaguely defined.

- U.S. requests for voluntary export restraints on such products as cars, steel, machine tools and textiles are "particularly aggressive."

No time to get amendment

Imagine for a moment that President Bush and Congress had been able to come up with a balanced federal budget for fiscal 1993, and on top of that were able to put $10 million per day, or $3.65 billion per year, toward paying off the government's debt. How long would it take to erase the $4 trillion... debt?

One hundred years? Five hundred years? Try more than 1,000 years.

Clearly we have not only burdened our children with massive debt, but also their children, and their children's children, and it gets worse daily.

Congress is expected to vote (this) month on a constitutional amendment that would require a balanced federal budget. If it's approved by Congress, ratification by three-fourths of the states would be necessary before it would become part of the Constitution.

The balanced budget amendment isn't a solution for today. It may be part of an answer five years down the road. It should have been part of the answer a couple of decades ago when the pattern of deficit spending was emerging and the problem was of more manageable size.

We can't afford to let it get any bigger, to allow waiting for ratification of a constitutional amendment to be an excuse for not starting to make the painful choices now.

A vote for tasty tomatoes

Thanks to biotechnology, scientists have replaced the gene that makes tomatoes turn soft with one that doesn't, thereby creating a hothouse tomato that can be vine-ripened and remain tasty while it is shipped and stored, without refrigeration.

Those tasteless hothouse tomatoes now are picked green and sprayed with a gas to help them ripen later.

Civilization is measured by such advances. Some folks, however, aren't so sure, not when the advances are made possible by genetic engineering. They fear that tinkering with genes is a threat to public health and safety and that the government should require more stringent tests of genetically altered products.

They repeated their fears when the Food and Drug Administration gave the go-ahead to the Flavr Savr tomato, the first genetically altered whole food intended for the market.

No one can give absolute guarantees of safety, but the latest approval seems well within acceptable margins.

Assess Balkan conflict now

If trying to follow the murky events in places with names like Bosnia-Herzegovina, Slovenia, Croatia, Macedonia, Serbia and Montenegro tempts you to give up in frustration, resist it.

There is a simplified way to understand the problem... The first four names are of newly independent nations that were once republics in Yugoslavia.

They were willing to accept their former borders when Yugoslavia disintegrated. Serbia and Montenegro, however, control the Yugoslav army and have decided to conquer as much neighboring land as possible.

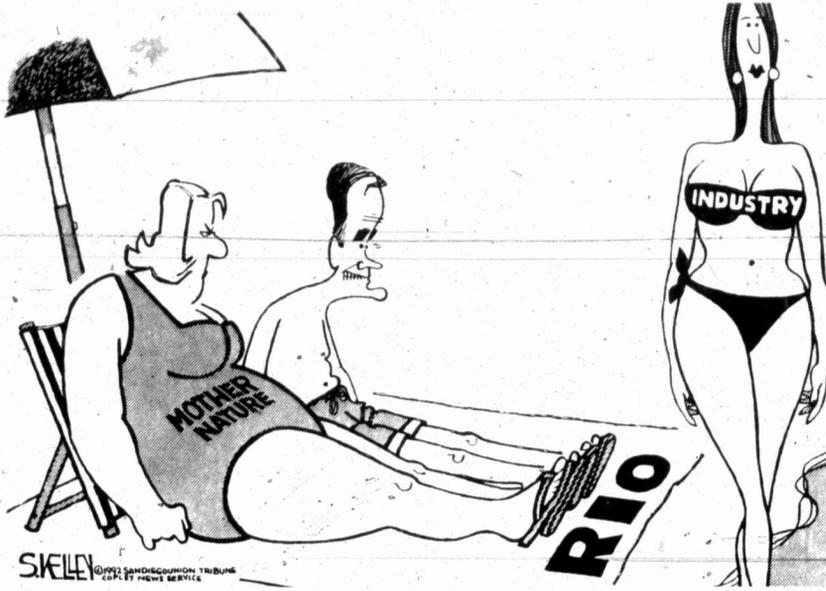

It was realization that a renegade state might be forming in the Balkans that brought Secretary of State James A. Baker to his feet... then the foreign ministers of Great Britain, France, and Belgium to theirs in an effort to spur the United Nations to action.

That action, sanctions including an economic embargo as tough as the one against Iraq, finally came.

Where we stand today in the Balkans compares somewhat to where we stood in the fall of 1990 in the Middle East. The question is whether economic sanctions against an aggressor can eliminate the need for military action to push the aggressor back within its borders.

Take a crash course in the Balkan conflict and urge Congress to begin deliberations on the propriety of U.S. participation in military action there before our forces are deployed as they were in Saudi Arabia.

Zobrest denied equal protection

Young Jim Zobrest is on one side. The state of Arizona is on the other. In between them lies the Constitution. At the moment, Arizona is winning; 18-year-old Jim is losing. Unfairly, wrongly, federal judges have dumped him on the wrong side of the wall that supposedly separates church and state.

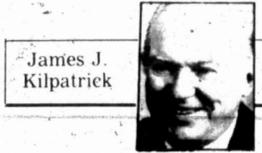

Jim Zobrest is deaf — profoundly, totally deaf. He is also the devout son of a devout Catholic family. For the past four years, as a student in a Catholic high school, he has been the victim of religious discrimination.

If he had gone to a public school, no problem: The state would have provided a sign language interpreter for him. Obedient to their strong religious convictions, Jim's family wanted him to have a Catholic education. Would the state provide a sign language interpreter? The state said no: We will not help a Catholic boy in a Catholic school.

The Zobrest family brought suit in U.S. District Court. The judge ruled that the First Amendment would be violated if Arizona used public funds to provide the interpreter. On May 1 the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed that decision. The vote was 2-1, with Judge Thomas Tang filing a strong dissenting opinion.

The federal courts, and especially the Supreme Court, have thoroughly fouled up the First Amendment law in this field.

Is it constitutional for a chaplain to pray over the Nebraska Legislature? Yes. Is it constitutional for a layman to pray over a high school football game? No. Is a Christmas creche constitutional in a city park? Yes.

James J. Kilpatrick

Is a Christmas creche constitutional in a city hall? No. Is it constitutional for a state to provide textbooks in parochial schools? Yes. Is it constitutional for a state to provide maps and globes? No.

In commenting upon bizarre decisions of the Supreme Court, one always hesitates to use the superlative. Even so, no decisions have been more tortured, less consistent and less principled than the high court's pronouncements in this area.

The confusion arises from a thoughtless metaphor coined by Thomas Jefferson in 1802. In writing to a Baptist community he saw the First Amendment as "building a wall of separation between Church and State." In point of fact, there never has been such a wall. There was no wall when the Constitution was signed "in the Year of Our Lord 1787." There was no wall when the first Congress hired chaplains for House and Senate.

What is this "wall"? It is not unconstitutional for Congress to proclaim Thanksgiving as a holy day. The Pledge of Allegiance declares our nation to be a nation "under God." Every coin attests that "In God We Trust." The Supreme Court itself begins each session with a prayer for divine protection.

The list of anomalies could be much extended. If the Supreme Court agrees to review the Zobrest decision, the court will have to look again at the 1986 case of Larry Witters. It seems directly in point.

Witters, a blind divinity student at a Christian college in Washington state, applied for state aid. He wanted to become a pastor or a missionary. Would such aid amount to support for an establishment of religion? No, said the Supreme Court. The aid to Witters would not advance the cause of religion. It was aid to which other blind students were entitled.

Isn't the same thing true here? The purpose of providing an interpreter is not to advance the cause of religion. It is to advance the cause of Jim Zobrest. An interpreter is not a priest, engaged in religious teaching. An interpreter is only a conduit, a human telephone wire, an impassive and dispassionate connection between the speaking teacher and the deaf student.

The 9th Circuit took 17 months to decide the Zobrest case. The effect of this delay, for which the circuit court alone is responsible, may be to leave the issue in limbo. Jim has just been graduated from Salpointe High, the Catholic school. His parents themselves have paid for his sign language interpreter. The case may now be moot, but the high court often takes cases presenting issues that "evade review but may recur."

It is time for the court to try, once more, to make sense of the Establishment Clause. In the case at hand, Jim Zobrest is deaf. He is entitled to equal protection of the law. Must the court be blind to his needs?

Don't be talking to me about no snakes

There are two schools of thought regarding snakes.

One is the school that always points out that snakes aren't really the epitome of evil and most of them aren't poisonous anyway, so don't be afraid of snakes.

The other is, don't talk to me about no snakes.

I'm a member of the second group.

I'm afraid of snakes. No, I'm terrified at even the thought of a snake. I don't even like to look at pictures of snakes.

When I was a kid, some idiot was always bringing a snake to school to frighten girls. I tried to hide my fear of snakes back then so I wouldn't be called a sissy.

I'm afraid of snakes. No, I'm terrified at even the thought of a snake. I don't even like to look at pictures of snakes.

Being called a sissy was a hard fate. It meant you threw a baseball with too much wrist, were overprotected by your mother and walked funny.

I was able to remain in the 'snake closet until one day the school bully, Frankie Garfield, brought a snake to school and said to me, "Hold my snake, while I go beat up a couple of fourth-graders."

What a dilemma. I had rather put my hand in a lawnmower blade than touch a snake. But if I didn't do what Frankie told me to do, he would do the first dance on my face.

I opted for the first dance. Frankie let me hold one upside the head and called me a sissy, but I didn't have to touch the snake.

The reason I bring all this up is I was thumbing through the paper the other day and there was an article in the Home and Garden section about garter snakes.

It was an article people who aren't afraid of snakes always write. It said garter snakes can live in urban and suburban surroundings, but it's silly to be afraid of them or attempt to kill them because they aren't poisonous and they're important to the ecological balance.

"It's shameless to destroy these snakes," the article said. It also quoted a naturalist as saying snakes with longitudinal stripes, like the garter snake, in this country aren't poisonous.

So what am I supposed to do when I see a snake? "Well, snake, let me see your stripes. Oh, they're longitudinal. That means you aren't poisonous. Here, let me pick you up and you can crawl around on my head and neck."

No way. In the first place I'm not hanging around a snake long enough or getting close enough to see if it has longitudinal stripes or not.

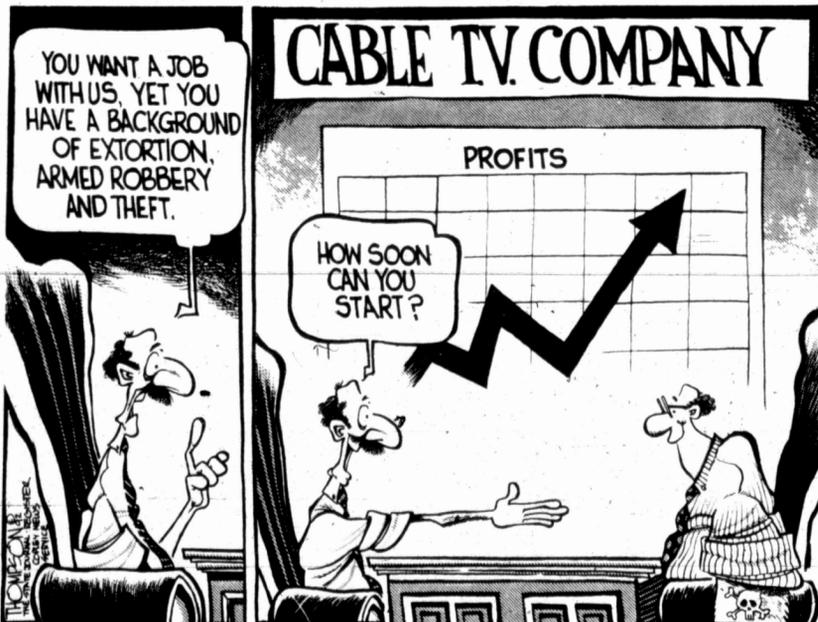

In the second place I'm not absolutely certain about the difference between longitudinal stripes and latitudinal stripes. It's always one of those things I've always had trouble remembering — like which number to invert when dividing fractions.

I've written often here regarding my theory that if you figure there's really only one kind of snake and it will bite you, given half a chance, then you won't ever make a mistake and misread a snake's stripes and wind up having someone suck out the snake's poison. Blech!

To me, there is only one kind of snake, the dreaded copper-headed water rattler. If you run from it, it will chase you. If you lock yourself inside your house and hide in a closet it will wait outside until you finally come out because copper-headed water rattlers have x-ray vision and can see you in there.

And even if you stay in the closet for, say, a week, and the snake has to leave, don't forget the copper-headed water rattler also knows where you work.

To anybody who tries to tell me otherwise, save your breath. It's my phobia and I'm sticking to it.

Bulls use defense to take 2-1 lead over Blazers

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Michael Jordan, prince of mid-air. The Portland Trail Blazers, kings of airball.

Air Jordan wins that matchup every time.

The Chicago Bulls, who have one of the best offensive players the basketball world has ever seen, used defense Sunday to move within two wins of a second successive NBA title.

"They didn't get any points inside like they did the last game," Jordan said after his Bulls held Portland to 36 percent shooting, forced 20 turnovers and won Game 3 of the NBA Finals 94-84. "You have to keep the defensive intensity up for 48 minutes... and we did."

The Bulls had five blocked shots, nine steals and scored 26 points off Portland turnovers as the Blazers tied a club record for fewest points in a playoff game. Portland's 39 second-half points and 15 third-quarter points set team marks.

Jordan scored 26 points and made three steals for Chicago, which had to play great defense because its offense wasn't much better than Portland's.

They turned the ball over 16 times — including five by Jordan, who even had a rare traveling call against him — and shot 42 percent in the second half.

"We made a point to forget about offense and commit to our defense," Chicago coach Phil Jackson said. "There is no way we anticipated as low-scoring a game as this. It was clear these were two tired teams."

Portland looked exhausted from the start. Its first shot was an airball by Jerome Kersey, one of about a half-dozen Blazer breeze-makers. "We played tired," Portland coach Rick Adelman said. "It was a tough trip coming back here."

The teams will have two days of rest before Game 4 on Wednesday night.

Portland's loss continued a Western Conference trend: Since 1989, the west's champions are a combined 0-9 at home in the Finals. That's incredible, considering that those teams were 136-28 at home during the regular seasons and 30-1 in home playoff games until the Finals.

The Trail Blazers were 17-0 in the first three rounds in 1990 and 1992 combined, but 0-4 in their four home championship-round games. Portland split at Detroit in 1990 before getting swept at home to lose the title; it split at Chicago this year before coming home for three games, the first of which it has now lost.

Deja vu? "I don't think that's a factor," Adelman said. "That's two years ago against a different team."

The Bulls' defense was definitely a factor.

"Once you learn how to play on the road, you know you have to control the tempo," said Scottie Pippen, who had 18 points, eight rebounds and seven assists for the Bulls. "We did that with aggressive defense."

The Trail Blazers agreed, but they said it made it too easy for Chicago to defend them.

"When you're sensing that you're not shooting well, especially from the perimeter, you have to start driving and getting easy baskets," Buck Williams said. "We were turning the ball over and taking bad shots. They were too, sometimes, but when they really had to have a basket, they drove and scored."

The only Portland player who made more shots than he missed was Clyde Drexler, who scored 32 points on 9 for 17 from the field and 12 for 12 from the line. The rest of the Blazers shot 31 percent from the floor and 65 percent from the line.

"I give Chicago a lot of credit. They played a great game," Drexler said. "But our success is based on a motion offense. We had no real movement and we didn't get to our spots. Basically, we didn't do the things to win."

Chicago took the lead with an 11-2 first-quarter run and was never caught. Portland had stretches of six minutes in the first half and almost seven minutes in the second half in which it scored nary a basket.

Portland missed 14 of its first 16 shots in the fourth quarter, ruining any chance of a comeback similar to the one they staged in their Game 2 victory at Chicago.

This time, the Bulls simply wouldn't fold. Their ability in the clutch is a major reason they haven't lost two consecutive playoff games since 1990.

"We talked about champions getting off the floor and coming back," Jackson said.

Added guard John Paxson: "It's been our trademark in the playoffs; we've been able to bounce back."

They'll see Wednesday if Portland has that trait, too.

Portland Trail Blazers forward Jerome Kersey, right, knocks the ball away from Chicago Bulls guard Michael Jordan during first quarter action in game three of the NBA finals in Portland Sunday.

Courier, Seles explore futures

PARIS (AP) — Almost before they caught their breath after defending their French Open titles, Jim Courier and Monica Seles confronted the same question.

Can you win Wimbledon? On the red clay of Stade Roland Garros, the world's two top-ranked players again proved they are unconquerable.

Seles was pushed to the limit by Steffi Graf on Saturday before prevailing 6-2, 3-6, 10-8, becoming the first woman in 55 years to win three straight titles here. Courier breezed past nervous Petr Korda 7-5, 6-2, 6-1 in a lopsided two-hour final Sunday for his second straight title.

Each superstar is now halfway to a possible Grand Slam sweep. But next up is the legendary grass at Wimbledon, a tournament neither has come close to winning.

Seles reached the quarterfinals in 1990, but skipped it last year. Courier fell in the quarterfinals last year.

Though Courier likes to avoid hyperbole at his news conferences, he left no doubt that Wimbledon is very much on his mind. Asked about his prospects on grass, he said, "I like my chances on any surface, against anybody in the world."

Could he win Wimbledon this year, he was asked Sunday.

"I'm certainly going to give it every effort," he said. "I played well there last year. I feel I can play well there again. I'll do my best."

Seles sounded equally determined, even though many tennis experts feel her powerful baseline game needs adjustments to succeed on grass.

"If I want to win it, I am going to go in differently this year to Wimbledon," she said. "Hopefully not just satisfied with a quarter-final loss or anything, but hopefully thinking that 'Hey, I can go until the end' — but still having fun, not having pressure."

Graf won Wimbledon last year, in Seles' absence, and said she was eager to get back there.

"It's always special to me," she said. "I've been looking forward to Wimbledon for a long time."

Although the 22-year-old German was disappointed by her cliffhanger loss to Seles, she was delighted to find she had become a crowd favorite. Throughout Saturday's 2-hour, 43-minute battle, the center court fans made clear they preferred her over Seles.

"I really can't say that I have ever had that support before," Graf said. "It was just amazing."

Aside from Courier, most of the men with strong chances at Wimbledon weren't around Roland Garros by Week Two. Stefan Edberg and Michael Stich were upset in the third round, while Boris Becker withdrew before play began.

"The two big favorites for grass are Becker and Edberg," said Kor-

Defending champion Jim Courier of the United States jubilates after he defeated Czech Petr Korda in the final of the French Tennis open at Roland Garros stadium Sunday in Paris.

da after his trouncing by Courier. "Grass is completely different from the other courts."

Courier, who lost only one set in his seven matches here, has now won three career Grand Slam titles and 23 consecutive matches.

Korda, who reached the final without facing a seeded player, showed flashes of brilliance in the opening set. But in the second set, after breaking Courier to take a 1-2 lead, Korda lost his own serve with consecutive double faults.

The No. 7 seed from Prague, Czechoslovakia, lost the next six games, winning only seven points in the process. In all, he committed nine double faults and made 49 unforced errors, compared to only 17 for Courier.

"I played big feet today," Korda said. "I was very nervous... I couldn't play my game. I was trying everything, but nothing was working."

"It was a tough first set," Courier said. "Once I got that under my belt, things seemed to go my way."

Did he feel unbeatable?

"Not unbeatable, no, not at all. I felt that I was playing very well, and someone was going to have to play very well to beat me," Courier said. "I'm very proud of the way I played to win, instead of not to lose."

Courier "deserved to win because he's playing great tennis... He is playing like a machine," Korda said. "Here, everyone was trying their best, and he beat us. We just have to practice harder, and we'll see next time."

Courier said he would head to Palm Springs, Calif., for some pre-Wimbledon practice, then head to England a week before the tournament to work out on grass.

Wimbledon "is a very special place," Courier said. "It has the most history of any court in the world. It's a great tournament."

Seles said she was considering practice sites in Scotland, England and the United States.

The last time the French Open has repeat champions in both men's and women's singles was 1980, with Bjorn Borg and Chris Evert.

Brewers defeat Angels

By The Associated Press

Just when it seemed things couldn't get any worse for the California Angels, they did.

California had three players ejected in its 10-3 loss at Milwaukee on Sunday, the Angels' 17th loss in 21 games. After the game, the Angels learned relief ace Bryan Harvey had been placed on the 15-day disabled list because of a tender right elbow. Catcher Lance Parrish is also hurting.

The Angels, of course, are still without manager Buck Rodgers. He's recovering from multiple injuries sustained when the team bus crashed on the New Jersey Turnpike on May 21.

After being swept in a three-game series by the Brewers, the Angels were also angry.

"This team is down, and when a team is down you don't kick them in the face," catcher Mike Fitzgerald said. "I felt like a couple of times in this series they definitely kicked us in the face while we were down on the ground. If that's the kind of baseball (first base coach) Tim Foli thinks is good baseball and we fight, he's going to pay, too."

The Angels were in a fighting mood in the seventh inning with Milwaukee ahead by seven runs.

itzgerland and acting manager Johnathan.

Elsewhere in the AL it was Boston 4, Cleveland 0; New York 6, Detroit 5; Baltimore 7, Toronto 1; Chicago 6, Oakland 1; Kansas City 4, Seattle 1; and Texas 5, Minnesota 4. Rangers 5, Twins 4 At Arlington, Juan Gonzalez hit three home runs for Texas, including a two-run shot in the eighth. Gonzalez became the fifth player in Rangers' history to hit three homers in a game, and the first since Larry Parrish in 1985.

Trailing by a run, Kevin Reimer opened the eighth with a single and Gonzalez followed with a drive to right off reliever Mark Guthrie (1-1). Gonzalez' performance offset a four-run sixth-inning for Minnesota, keyed by Kent Hrbek's three-run homer that put the Twins up 4-3.

Bobby Witt improved to 7-4. Orioles 7, Blue Jays 1

At Camden Yards, Mike Mussina (7-1) allowed one run in 7-2-3 innings and Cal Ripken had three RBI singles. The victory pushed Baltimore back into first place in the AL East, percentage points ahead of Toronto.

The Orioles scored three runs in the fifth inning to take a 4-1 lead against Dave Stieb (3-5), whose career record against Baltimore fell to 1-6.

Red Sox 4, Indians 0

At Fenway Park, Joe Hesketh and Danny Darwin combined on a seven-hitter as Boston beat Cleveland. It was only Boston's third victory in nine games and its first in that span without Roger Clemens pitching.

Hesketh (2-3) allowed four hits in 6-1-3 innings. After Carlos Martinez's one-out single in the seventh, Hesketh left with a blister on his left middle finger.

The Red Sox wasted a single in each of the first three innings before breaking through against Dave Otto (4-4) with two runs in the fourth.

Yankees 6, Tigers 5

With the Tigers leading 5-4, Danny Tartabull led off the fifth with a single off Walt Terrell (0-7) and Jim Leyritz followed with his fourth homer.

Mickey Tettleton's second career grand slam in the top of the fifth had given Detroit the lead.

Melido Perez (5-4) was the winner despite giving up eight hits and five runs in six innings.

White Sox 6, Athletics 1

At Comiskey Park, Charlie Hough (2-2) pitched a three-hitter and Robin Ventura had three hits, including a homer and a run-scoring double, as Chicago beat Oakland to snap a four-game losing streak. The 44-year-old Hough (2-2) walked three and struck out four.

It was only the second victory in the last 12 games for the White Sox, while Oakland had its five-game winning streak snapped.

Warren Newson hit his first homer of the season to break a 1-1 tie in a two-run fourth against Mike Moore (7-4).

Texas Ranger manager Bobby Valentine, left, argues a third strike call with home plate umpire Terry Craft. Craft threw Valentine out of the game against the Minnesota Twins in Arlington, Texas, Sunday during the sixth inning. Valentine had not been thrown out of a game since June 29, 1990.

Survivors remember killer flood

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) — After 20 years, Tom Hennies still remembers the ones he couldn't rescue from the flood.

In the flash of lightning strikes, he saw them clinging to trees. Above the roar of water, he heard them screaming.

"There was no way we could get out there to help them," says Hennies. "Some of them were falling into the water and hollering for help. Pretty soon it got quiet. They quit yelling."

It was June 9, 1972, and Rapid Creek had become a raging river. It would leave 238 dead and more than 3,000 injured; it would destroy 770 houses, 565 mobile homes and 5,000 vehicles, and cause more than $165 million in damages.

And it would leave the survivors with indelible memories — people like Hennies, who was then a lieutenant and is now the city's police chief. He nearly drowned when his patrol car, by then afloat, was run down by a house.

"Here came a two-story house down the street. I called in and said I was abandoning my car, I was about to be struck by a house," he says. He was pulled from the water by a fire truck crew.

Though western South Dakota weather forecasts had called for isolated thunderstorms, some possibly severe, the storm system built and barely moved. It dumped 12 inches to 14 inches of rain in some parts of the Black Hills from late afternoon into the night.

Automobile wreckage is seen in this aerial photograph of downtown Rapid City, S.D., following a flash flood in June, 1972.

Many Black Hills communities were hit by high water. But the worst catastrophe struck Rapid City, which lies along Rapid Creek below a canyon on the eastern edge of the Black Hills.

Rapid Creek, normally about 5 yards wide and a few feet deep, rose rapidly through the evening.

Survivors describe two walls of water that swept through the streets near the stream. One was unleashed about 10:45 p.m. when the dam gave way at Canyon Lake, a small impoundment at the upstream edge of the city.

"I guess thinking about it, you could hear it coming and it sounded like a freight train," says Jim McKay, a retired truck driver, who was swept away by a 12-foot-high wall of water when he got out of his pickup to help someone with a stalled car.

A floating tree and other debris pinned McKay against the side of a building, his head barely above water. He was rescued seven hours later.

His wife, Cleone, huddled in the back of the pickup with their two children during the night. They saved one man by grabbing him as he drifted past.

"It was a nightmare, and you never get over it," she says, her voice choking with emotion. "We were lucky we didn't lose any of our family."

Ron and LaVonne Masters were not so lucky. The couple gathered their five children and fled the rising waters in their four-wheel-drive Scout, only to be swamped by the walls of water.

"My oldest boy, Steve, said 'Dad, this is all in God's hands.' That was the last words we ever heard from Steve."

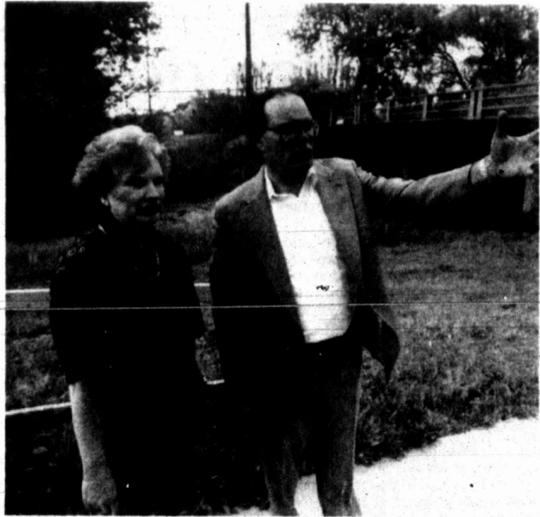

Masters, a minister, kicked the metal-framed window on the passenger side. He squeezed through the 9-inch opening, reached back and pulled out his wife.

Next, he grabbed his 14-year-old daughter Karen, who was holding 2-year-old Timothy. As she came through the opening, the water tore the baby from her arms.

Ron couldn't extract the other three children because another wall of water roared through, leaving the vehicle submerged in the blackness.

The Masters and their daughter spent the next five hours or so clinging to the trees. "You can't even begin to imagine how awful it was," LaVonne says.

Another daughter, JoAnn, sur-

Ron and LaVonne Masters last week recall the killer flood that struck Rapid City, S.D., 20 years ago. The couple and two daughters survived, their three sons died when the waters of Rapid Creek, behind them, swept away their four-wheel-drive Scout as they crossed the bridge, background, to escape the rising waters.

vived the night trapped in an air pocket at the back of the Scout. She said her brothers, ages 8 and 12, had shared the air pocket, but Stephen eventually stopped talking and then Jonathan was gone.

Ron says he'll never forget the look of terror in his 10-year-old daughter's eyes. "It just pierced your soul."

As the sun rose, the water dropped.

National Guard units from a nearby training camp joined police, firefighters and others to rescue those lucky enough to cling to roofs, trees and other perches above the torrent.

Mrs. McKay didn't know her husband had survived until radio announcers listed him among those hospitalized. For days after the flood, people listened to a local radio station to find out who had died and who had survived.

The station read messages telling people where they could contact family members.

Rapid City residents and disaster agencies worked to provide food, clothing and shelter for flood victims. More than 50 morticians were summoned to help prepare bodies for burial.

Work crews began to clear mud from the streets and buildings and to haul away the vehicles, homes and other debris.

Most important, Rapid City got financial aid, including $48 million from the federal urban renewal program, to clean up and take steps to avoid a repeat of the disaster.

The flood plain was cleared of homes and most businesses, and was converted into parks and recreation areas. There is now a green belt along Rapid Creek through the city where people can walk, ride bikes and fish for trout.

Canyon Lake Dam was replaced with a stronger structure, and dikes and levees were built.

In the event of another rainstorm like the 1972 deluge, water will be carried away faster and won't seriously threaten any residential areas, officials say.

But 1972 must never be forgotten — the flood plain must never be built upon again, says Leonard Swanson, who was city public works director at the time.

"It will rain that much again," he says.

STEERS

"Robstown's probably the team to beat, but we're there and we might as well play them first," Doe said.

The Cotton Pickers have a tremendous amount of play off experience, since the last time they didn't make the state championships was in '89. That year Robstown lost the regional championship, and a chance to go to Austin, by one run.

Doe hopes his team will rise to the occasion against the defending champs.

"I hope they'll get up and want to play harder," Doe said. "That's the way we usually do. We'll try to play better fundamentals because we know there a good team."

Depending on which pitcher starts, the Cotton Pickers will have five or six seniors in the starting lineup, all but one of whom were on last year's championship team.

Robstown's three starting pitchers finished the regular season with 2.80, 1.31 and 1.22 ERAs.

Big Spring enters the championships as the Cinderella team. At 15-13-1, the Steers have by far the worst record among the four teams left in the 4A playoffs. Denison and Bridge City are 27-5 and 27-8. They face each other in the 12 noon game Thursday. (For other pairings see page 5-B.)

But as coach Doe will gladly tell anyone who asks, the Steers are accustomed to going against favorites in the playoffs. They have defeated two teams already this year with 20 win seasons. They beat Frenship (21-9-1) in the area round game 1-0 and got past Lamesa (23-7) in last week's Region I championship thriller at Midland, 6-5.

The key to the Steers post season play has been stellar defense and timely hitting. But other than Gerald Cobos's three-hit jewel against Frenship on May 25, Big Spring's pitching has been shaky.

Through the regular season the Steers defense was inconsistent, committing multiple errors on several occasions. But it has come up with many big plays in the three playoff games while committing only three errors.

Left fielder Jon Downey threw a runner out at the plate in the one-run Frenship win, and that game ended on a double play with Mike Oliva throwing out a runner at second after a Cobos strike out.

Against Lamesa Oliva threw Jason Moreno out at second after Moreno had led of the first inning with a single. Moreno would have scored as latter in the inning the Golden Tornadoe got two more hits.

In the fifth inning of the same game shortstop Sammy Gonzales started a crucial 6-4-3 double play. The following batter tripled.

And the Lamesa contest ended on what was the team's biggest defensive play of the year with Oliva tagging out the potential tying run at the plate on a throw from center fielder Abel Hilario.

"That's the key to us winning right now — we're going to have to continue to play good defense," Doe said.

But pitching has been a different story.

In the last two games Big Spring hurlers have walked twelve. Amazingly only one of the seven Burk Burnett batters Frankie Martinez walked in the region semifinal managed to score. However Martinez got the 11-1 victory as he scattered two hits in four and 1/2 innings and the Bulldogs left 10 men on base.

Lamesa got to Cobos for 11 hits in four and 2/3 innings. Martinez was effective for an inning and 2/3 but he loaded the bases in the seventh before Luis Bustamante recorded the final two outs.

"We're going to need stronger pitching in Austin than we had in the last game," Doe said. "So we're going to concentrate on that a little bit in practice."

RAINS

"Maybe people will have to go back with maize or peas or something like that," he said.

The Texas Agricultural Research Station on the northern edge of the city reported 1.76 inches of rain early today. This amount brings the yearly total for Big Spring to 17.46, which is 10 inches more than the average total precipitation for this time of year. These figures parallel records at the National Weather Service and those kept by Tommy Hart of Big Spring, who lives on Purdue Avenue.

Stanton received slightly less, but substantial rainfall this weekend — 91 inches was reported early today and 92 inches in the Saturday storm, according to Grover Springer and others in the Stanton area.

The Moss Creek Lake area picked up 2.1 inches of rain, according to figures from the Colorado Municipal Water District.

Lake J.B. Thomas picked up another 1/2 foot of water placing that lake at 36 percent of total capacity, said CRMWD spokesman Joe Pickle. There is still some flow into this lake as of this morning, he said.

Elsewhere, Lake Spence's level increased a little over one inch and Lake Ivie received flow from a big rain near Paint Rock. Four flood gates were opened to relieve the flow into the already full reservoir. Only one gate remained open as of this morning, however.

Surveys in the past two months indicate that Midland gas prices are lower or the same as prices in Big Spring and both communities tend to have prices higher than Abilene and San Angelo but usually lower than prices in nearby small towns.

What's your beef? West Texas beef of course!

Three words were missing in the second paragraph of a retail gas price survey story published Sunday in the Big Spring Herald, making the paragraph confusing.

The paragraph, with the added words italicized, should have read:

Vermont's tranquility rocked by urban crime

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP) — Vermont has long been a pleasant day's drive away from the crowds, congestion and crime of the big city.

Now, a rash of violent crimes has left law enforcement officials and residents wondering whether that's still the case.

"They say Burlington is turning into the Bronx," said Doddie Ducharme, who lives in the Old North End, the toughest neighborhood in Burlington, which with 40,000 people is Vermont's largest city.

"This is no longer someone's hometown," said Police Chief Kevin Scully. "It's a little big city. We are undergoing a tremendous change."

Burlington residents were shaken by the recent slaying of a 16-year-old girl in apparent retaliation for informing on drug traffickers. Days earlier, a 34-year-old woman was stabbed to death in her apartment.

In October, an employee went on a shooting spree at a battery plant in Bennington, killing the plant manager and injuring two others.

The same month, a woman who had quit a white-collar job in Boston to live in the resort town of Stowe was found bludgeoned and strangled at a waterfall.

'We're now seeing big-city approaches to the drug trade that we haven't seen before.'

William Sorrell County State's Attorney

This week, a man was found dead with a ski pole through his neck in the town of Newfane.

Perhaps the first sign of things to come was the slaying a year ago of a bodyguard and debt collector for a drug dealer, said Chittenden County State's Attorney William Sorrell. Three alleged dealers were arrested in that case.

"We're now seeing big-city approaches to the drug trade that we haven't seen before," Sorrell said.

"More people from New York, Philadelphia and Boston have muscled their way into the local scene and created competition. And they are playing the game in a different way."

Vermont, just a few hours' drive from Montreal, Boston and New York City, has long been a tourist destination. Year-round attractions include hiking, skiing, maple sugar farms and autumn leaf

Burlington, Vt., Police Chief Kevin Scully stands in the city's Old North End recently where the murder of 16-year-old Melissa Wells, in apparent retaliation for informing on alleged drug traf-ficers, has struck fear in residents. Vermonters will be facing increasing drug-related crime and gang violence if they don't cut off the demand for drugs, officials say.

watching. But the rural charm of a state with a population of just 500,000 may also be a lure for criminals, Scully said.

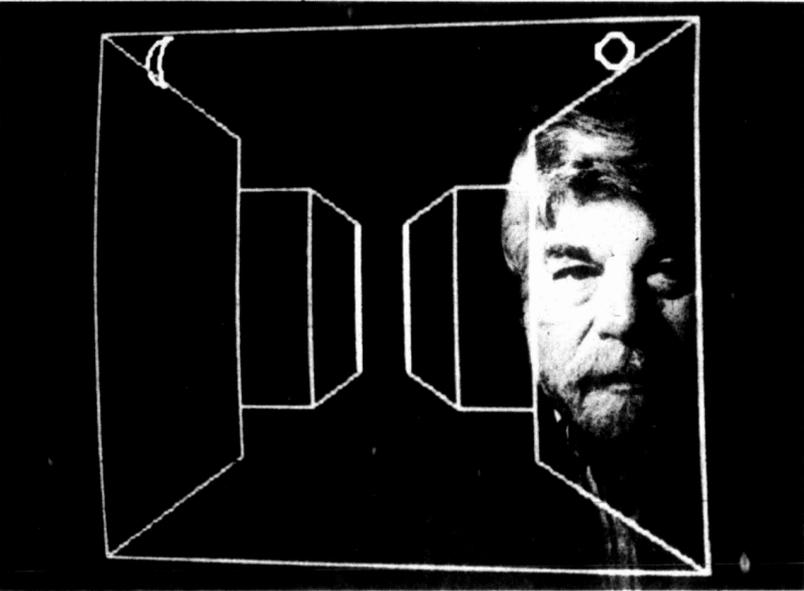

"I think we are viewed in the cities as fertile ground where people can carry out conduct without interference of law enforcement," he said.

Ducharme said the situation in her Burlington neighborhood has gotten so bad she doesn't believe police can protect her. "If you tell the cops, the dealers will come get you and the cops can't do anything," she said. Scully admitted he has his hands full, but in an echo of his big-city counterparts said he can't do a thing without the community's help.

"Even if we had 1,000 police, everyone would not be rendered absolutely safe," he said.

Dr. Thomas Bever is reflected recently in a computer image of a maze he uses in his research at the University of Rochester. Bever's research on college students and lab rats suggest that males and females navigate using different methods.

Men and women do it differently

But they'll both get there just as surely, a researcher says.

After spending four years running rats and college students through mazes, Thomas Bever concluded that females depend more on landmarks to navigate, while males use a system of vectors — calculating how far and in what direction they travel.

Thus, while men are better at reading maps — a skill that meshes well with their vector-based navigation — the sexes do equally well overall at finding their way around, said Bever, a professor of psychology and linguistics at the University of Rochester.

"It's been claimed that males are better navigators than females," he said recently. "We don't find that."

Bever's findings, which have not yet been published, appear to support the work of Christina Williams of Barnard College and Warren Meck of Columbia University, who have linked differences in the way male and female rats navigate to differences in hormone exposure before birth.

They found that when female rats run mazes, they orient themselves in relation to objects in the room such as computers or carts, while male rats rely exclusively on the geometric proportions of the room.

The possibility that men and women navigate the same way as male and female rats is "fascinating," said Dr. Bruce McEwan, a neurobiologist at Rockefeller University who specializes in sex differences.

McEwan has found differences in the male and female hippocampus — a part of the brain that has been shown to affect navigation in rats. "I don't know if that could account for differences in behavior, but it's certainly tempting to think that maybe they're related," he said.

Bever said most people, especially women, use both the male and female systems to navigate. The male system is actually more primitive, he said.

"Having a landmark representation is a much smarter way to get around," he said. "Evolution doesn't need us to walk around with blindfolds."

He said he doesn't know why the sexes gravitate toward different systems of navigation but hopes to investigate whether there are physiological causes.

In his study, student volunteers had to find their way through a figure-eight maze in tunnels beneath the University of Rochester's psychology building. Others ran a computer version of the maze.

On the computer, when symbols marking the intersections and the runner's direction were removed from the maze, the women's performance dropped sharply. The males weren't affected.

But when the shape and proportions of the computer maze were distorted, leaving the landmarks the same, the females did much better.

In the underground tunnels, women were much worse than men at running the maze in two directions — from start to finish and back again. So were female rats running a smaller version of the maze.

Bever thinks that's because the females memorized a set of landmarks to find their way through the maze.

Senate to fund PBS with conditions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans would get more opportunity to talk back to their public broadcasting stations, but less chance to hear or see sexually oriented shows, under legislation passed by the Senate.

The bill, approved 84-11 Wednesday, authorizes $1.1 billion for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting over three years, but with new strings attached.

It would allow so-called indecent programming to be aired on both public and commercial radio and television stations, but only between the hours of midnight and 6 a.m. in most areas.

The money authorized in the bill starts with fiscal 1994 and is the same amount already voted by the House.

But the Senate's bill carries other provisions, including a requirement that CPB provide time for public comment on the quality, creativity, diversity, balance and objectivity of the shows and take those views into account when assessing overall national programming.

If CPB decides the programming is one-sided, it must supply the funds to air opposing views.

The different provisions of the House and Senate bill probably will be resolved by a conference committee of the two houses.

Most public broadcasting is produced by local stations and programmers hired by the Public Broadcasting Service. Money from CPB provides about 17 percent of the support needed for the entire system, with the rest coming from individual donations and corporate and foundation grants.

CPB has strict guidelines for the use of its money, but does not produce any shows itself. It was established as a buffer between the federal government and programming to avoid any appearance of federal control over the media.

Sheila Tate, CPB board chairman, said the Senate bill spells out additional procedures to hear public comment, but doesn't change CPB's mission to protect balance and objectivity.

"It is something we welcome because public broadcasting should be accessible to the public," she said of the bill.

The part of the measure that could lead to dramatic changes is a section restricting the hours most indecent programming may be shown.

Stations that go off the air at midnight could air such programs at 10 p.m. But it means much of the primetime programming aired now could come into question.

It applies only to over-the-air radio and television broadcasts, not cable, which means ABC, CBS, NBC or Fox shows would be affected, but not MTV, the Comedy Channel or HBO, for example.

Indecent programming is defined as that which contains descriptions of "sexual or excretory activities or organs" in terms "patently offensive as measured by contemporary community standards." Currently, such programming is allowed between 8 p.m. and 6 a.m. by the Federal Communications Commission.

The courts have struck down congressional attempts to prohibit indecent programming around the clock, saying there must be a daily period when such material is permitted on the airwaves.

The National Association of Broadcasters says the Senate's latest attempt also defies the First Amendment.

CPB has strict guidelines for the use of its money, but does not produce any shows itself. It was established as a buffer between the federal government and programming to avoid any appearance of federal control over the media.

"If this measure becomes law, we may join with others to challenge it in court," the NAB said.

Conservative Republicans, citing the growing federal deficit, tried to reduce the size of the public broadcasting bill to $825 million over three years.

They said the commercial success of products based on Big Bird and other characters from public TV's "Sesame Street" prove that show, for example, can support itself.

But supporters, including Republican Sen. Ted Stevens of Alaska, said Congress should continue to support the television and radio system that for 25 years has taken free education and culture to the far reaches of the United States.

The $1.1 billion in the bill would be distributed by CPB to local public radio and television stations, PBS and National Public Radio during 1994-96.

There would be $310 million in fiscal 1994, $375 million in 1995 and $425 million for 1996. Current appropriations are $251 million in fiscal 1992 and $253 million in 1993.

South Texas ranch attracting the interest of rich, famous

CARRIZO SPRINGS (AP) — A stroll around the South Texas spread called Crawford Farms confirms the obvious: this is serious money.

The Spanish-style ranch house is huge, its lagoon-style swimming pool luxurious and its indoor cutting horse arena immaculate.

The 3,000-acre ranch about 40 miles from Mexico is the dream estate of gas industry tycoon Don Crawford, who built the place 10 years ago and now is pursuing other pastimes.

On June 11, he'll be looking to sell Crawford Farms at auction, for several million cool dollars. And the list of potential bidders and guests promises to be a who's who of the rich and famous.

"A lot of it is the Texas lifestyle," said William Bone, vice president of New York-based J.P. King Auction Co., which is handling the sale. "The mystique is so strong. People think of Texas rich as different."

Indeed, this ranch is unusual, even by Texas standards.

Start with the show horse arena.

The 65,000-square-foot building has been the site of major cutting horse competitions. It's equipped with electronic score boards, 3,600 bleacher seats and a 100-seat lounge with a full bar known as "Cutter's Cantina."

With the look of a Mexican hacienda, the ranch's main house is the size of a football field. The living room ceiling is 40 feet high, supported by 7,500-pound fir beams. Crawford supervised the woodwork of the home himself, modeling petrified wood fireplaces after one he liked in New Mexico and having wood cabinets constructed in a special building on the property.

Among the ranch's pricey decorations is an elaborate copper and brass chandelier made of pieces from Spain that are more than a century old. Crawford said the chandelier was priced at

The Crawford family and auction company have said Crawford would like to get $16 million to $18 million for the ranch.

$80,000 at a store in New York. He bought it for $49,999.99.

"I told that old boy I didn't want anyone to think I was stupid enough to give $50,000 for a light," Crawford deadpanned.

Another room houses Crawford's collection of 18 rare Belgian-made Browning guns. Those will be auctioned separately the same day the property is sold.

A waterfall flows next to the dark-tiled pool behind the house. And on the back yard grounds Crawford has entertained up to 1,000 guests.

A nearby guest house — one of several on the property — contains four themed rooms: the Alaskan room, South Texas room, Rocky Mountain room and Indian room.

The estate has frontage on the Nueces River, but Crawford says it is flood-proof. A 1,200-acre game preserve on the premises is stocked with exotic animals as well as native turkey, deer and javelina.

The Crawford family and auction company have said Crawford would like to get $16 million to $18 million for the ranch.

Why would Crawford want to sell such a place?

"I've done that," is his answer. "It's time for the ranch to have a new owner... It is a great place. I hope the people that get it are interested in horses."

Bone, with the auction company, said among the potential bidders who have inquired about

Crawford Farms are Texas actors Tommy Lee Jones and Patrick Swayze and a Texas congressman, who Bone would not identify.

Other members of Congress and politicians have said they plan to attend the auction party to mingle with the prominent visitors, Bone said.

Crawford, 58, says he's tired of horses and hunting and now wants to spend time along the Texas coast fishing for speckled trout — which, incidentally, he takes pictures of next to a yard stick before throwing them back to sea.

A stout man partial to good food and drink, Crawford has entertained many a client at Crawford Farms. And several celebrities and politicians have spent time there, including country music star George Strait, golfer Jack Nicklaus and Louisiana Gov. Edwin Edwards.

But Crawford says what he'll miss most is Christmases at the ranch with his family.

Crawford, an Oklahoma native who for years has called Texas home, acquired his millions making gas compressors. He estimates his current worth is somewhere between $20 million and $50 million.

Crawford and his grown sons still are in the oil business, and Crawford says the ranch is not being sold because of financial hardship.

He selected J.P. King to do the auction after learning the New York firm handled the March auction of the thoroughbred breeding and racing establishment Calumet Farms in Kentucky.

At a time when many Texans have sold land because of money problems, J.P. King is promoting the Crawford Farms sale as a symbol of Texas' economic rebound.

Restaurateur takes baby-care case to the court

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A working mother whose restaurant was ordered closed, in part because she changes her son's diapers at work, accused health department officials Friday of declaring a fake emergency.

Jennifer Crafts, whose restaurant in Chicopee was ordered closed this week, spoke before a scheduled hearing on her lawsuit in Hampden Superior Court.

"The issue is whether there is an emergency and whether my store should have been closed — whether the public was ever at risk with the presence of my child."

Jennifer Crafts owner

She sued to demand her restaurant be kept open — at least until she is granted a hearing by Chicopee health officials.

"The issue is whether there is an emergency and whether my store should have been closed — whether the public was ever at risk with the presence of my child," she said in an interview.

Crafts' battle has attracted wide attention as a struggle in the name of working mothers.

Chicopee officials declared the health emergency Wednesday and closed down the breakfast-lunch spot called A.J.'s Place, named after her son, Andrew John.

Crafts made authorities take her operating permit from Andrews' hands before a pack of journalists and television cameras.

Health officials say the 19-month-old's presence violates the state's health code, which says a restaurant cannot operate in any room used as someone's living or sleeping quarters.

"It's child abuse as far as I'm concerned," said the city's health director, Richard Kendra.

Crafts, 29, has refused to seek alternative day care for Andrew,

Restaurant owner Jennifer Crafts, 29, holds her 19-month-old son Andrew John at the door of her restaurant in Chicopee, Mass., which was ordered closed by local health officials. Declaring a health emergency, city officials closed the restaurant because Crafts was caring for her son while she worked.

even though health authorities contend his dirty diapers pose a sanitary problem in a restaurant. They also say he could get hurt at the grill and other kitchen equipment.

Crafts said she quit her job as manager of a chain restaurant and opened her own place 11 months ago to spend more time with her son.

Andrew is a hit with patrons of the eatery in Chicopee, a city outside Springfield. The child had been greeting some customers and acting as unofficial maitre d' — when he was not napping in his playpen in a hall next to the kitchen.

Crafts' husband, John, was sometimes caring for the child at home when his own schedule as a restaurant manager allowed. But the toddler often spent six days a week at A.J.'s Place, from 5 a.m. to 2 p.m., his mother said.

The Crawford Farms' lagoon-style pool, complete with its own water-fall, is just one of the selling points of the 3,000 acre ranch to be auctioned June 11. The ranch, located in Carrizo Springs, about 40 miles from Mexico in South Texas is owned by gas industry tycoon Don Crawford.

State's true colors on adoption

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — When the state of Texas places a child for adoption, social workers look for a loving family and a stable home. And the right skin color.

That policy is under scrutiny as a judge decides whether a San Antonio couple may adopt an 11-month-old Hispanic girl who has lived with them as a foster child since birth.

Bud Peacock, a 39-year-old firefighter, and his wife, Cheryl, were turned down because they only want to adopt 11-month-old Annie and not her half-sister, Anna Marie, 4, who lives with a foster family, state officials said.

The couple had offered to take the half-sister on a trial basis, but the Texas Department of Human Services said no. The state also cited the fact that the Peacocks aren't Hispanic.

"We would like to be able to provide her with the love and spiritual upbringing and the education that is, with us, a sure thing," Mrs. Peacock, a 38-year-old homemaker, said in court last week. "If you yank her out of our home, you don't know what will happen, you just don't know."

The Peacocks declined to comment outside court.

State adoption guidelines list "preservation of (the child's) racial or ethnic heritage," said Patsy Sanders, placement manager for the department. "We do not mandate that."

Thirteen states have laws that say ethnic heritage should be preserved in adoption, according to the National Council for Adoption in Washington D.C.

Most other states have policies similar to Texas, according to the North American Council on Adoptable Children in St. Paul, Minn.

State Rep. Karyne Jones Conley, who has an adopted child, said she will try to change the way Texas places adoptive children.

"I don't want the state to be about segregation and promoting differences," she said.

"In this instance, if it takes a law to make sure no other child is put into this kind of predicament, then that's what I'm willing to do."

Mary Beth Seader, of the National Council for Adoption, said removing a child for ethnic reasons from a loving family can lead to antisocial behavior.

"We consider that child abuse," Ms. Seader says. Texas does approve ethnically mixed adoptions, but Ms. Sanders said its statistics were not immediately available.

As of March, there were 880 children awaiting adoption through the state. Of those, 266 were black and 255 were Hispanic. There were 694 families awaiting adoptive children. Of those, 132 were black and 86 were Hispanic.

David Reilly, director for children's protective services, said the state does not postpone adoptions until an ethnic match is made.

State District Court Judge Tom Rickhoff says he will rule next month on the Peacocks' lawsuit.

Lonely look for love, in print

EDITOR'S NOTE — It used to be church where young folks met. Then it was bars. Now for the lonely, stranded in the big city, it is the columns of newspapers and magazines where would-be lovers meet. Single white female desires to meet single white male and sometimes it ends in marriage.

CHICAGO (AP) — When you're alone and lonely in the big city, you have to start somewhere, and it might as well be in the personal columns of a newspaper you know others of your age read. More and more people are doing just that.

"Ten years ago people I certainly wouldn't have expected to do that sort of thing, are doing it now," says Carolyn Saari, a psychotherapist and professor in Loyola University's School of Social Work.

Saari said growth of the ads is due to the difficulty of meeting people in big cities.

"There are tremendous numbers of single people out there who are very lonely and feeling very unattached, for whom there are not readily available groups for them to go to," she says.

Saari fears the trend is dangerous. "They're meeting people they know absolutely nothing about," she says.

But Dr. Michael Broder, a psychologist and author of "The Art of Living Single," highly recommends the ads.

"The more people you meet the better your chances are of finding the right partner," Broder says. "It's not unlike a job search. There are ways to screen people out very quickly."

He says the ads are popular because "there're a lot more single people nowadays" and because of aging, unattached baby boomers.

Alexa Smith, who studies consumers' lifestyle trends for The Research Department in New York, called the ads part of "a burgeoning industry" of dating and telephone services aimed at singles.

Neither she nor newspaper and advertising associations had any statistics on the number of personal ads. But various papers spoke of significant increases.

In Chicago, for example, personals help fill four to five pages in The Reader, an alternate weekly newspaper.

Tom Yoder, advertising director of The Reader and publisher of Washington City Paper, said The Reader averages about 280 ads a week and the Washington paper about 270.

Both figures represent about a 50 percent increase in the past two years, he says.

Martha Sturgeon of New York Magazine says personal ads have increased steadily over the past few years. "I think we probably have 150 to 200 a week," she says.

The Reader groups the ads according to "Men Seeking Women," "Women Seeking Men," "Men Seeking Men," "Women Seeking Women" and "Other." The last category recently featured a couple seeking a bisexual friend and a man seeking a transvestite "for fine dining, travel, caring."

But more common than "Other" ads are ones like these:

— "SWF, 23, dark blonde, hazel eyes, great smile, sick of the bar scene. Relaxed, traditional, bright, good sense of humor. Interests include skiing, music, romance, the outdoors. Seeks no smoking/drugs, educated SWM, 23-35, with similar interests. The right guy will take a chance and call."

— "SJM, 33 5'7", 140, in creative profession, Richard Dreyfuss looking for a '90s Annie Hall ready to give it up. Call if you are creative, polite, humorous, entertaining, articulate and can appreciate St. Lucia in January, canoeing in Wisc., toy helicopters, Dostoyevsky, pizza, improv, BBQ in the backyard."

Debbie Rolfe, a 28-year-old occupational therapist who lives in the Chicago suburb of Oak Lawn, is a personal-ad success story.

On June 20 she plans to marry Joe Loconte, a 30-year-old Arlington Heights electrical engineer. They met after she answered his Reader ad last year.

Clean limerick betrays its vulgar origins

DEAR ABBY: Enough limericks but if you will, please correct the blie's misperception that Edward Lear (no relation to Norman) vented the limerick. He merely polarized the CLEAN limerick and only because his "Book of nonsense" caught the public's fancy in 1863, although its first publication in 1846 made nary a pple.

The clean limerick fad lasted on five years (thank God), but the main article still exists (and has several centuries) as the main vehicle for vulgar doggerel. Please refer to the excellent, scholarly work "The Limerick" by G. Egman (Bell Publishing), which is a comprehensive introduction, facing the history of this verse form, and gives 1,700 examples of genuine limericks. With few exceptions, they are vulgar, salacious and unfit for family newspapers. In short, indicative of the true nature of the beast.

Abby, I know I said "enough limericks" but they are addictive, aren't they? Example is Professor Morris Bishop's masterpiece:

The limerick is furtive and mean, You must keep her in close quarantine. Or she sneaks to the slums and promptly becomes disorderly, drunk and obscene. — V. APPELMAN. FREEPORT, TEXAS.

DEAR V. APPELMAN: I have received many naughty and bawdy limericks from my readers. Some are so steamy they should be stored in a fireproof vault. Now here's one that's slightly suggestive, but quite witty:

Said a potatote grown and despotice "My tastes are more rich than exotic

"I've always adored 'Making love in a Ford 'Because I am auto-erotic.'"

DEAR ABBY: I recently remarried. My new husband was also previously married. How should I introduce my first husband's relatives who are my former in-laws/ I am very friendly with my ex-husband's nieces and nephews, too. — SECOND-TIME-AROUNDER

DEAR SECOND: There is no reason to call attention to the fact that you were formerly related by marriage. Just introduce your ex-in-laws + nieces and nephews + as "dear" or "old friends," and save the explanatory details for subsequent meetings.

Overseas contacts will take on greater importance early in 1993. Forging a new alliance next March could be the key to lasting career success. Choose a partner whose strengths compliment your own.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: slugger Dave Parker, actor Michael J. Fox, newscaster Marvin Kalb, singer Jackie Wilson.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): An unexpected communication brightens the morning. Although a lunchtime incident is unsettling, the afternoon should unfold smoothly. Diplomacy helps you deal with family arguments.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A surprising development regarding certain social plans may cause tension between you and your mate or another close ally. You could find yourself attracted to an older person. Keep an open mind.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A speculative venture remains much too risky. Protect jointly held resources. Singles can further their romantic aims by attending parties. Set aside more time for reading and learning.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your outlook changes following a confidential chat with a close friend or relative. Combine intellect with intuition on your way up the career ladder.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A change of lifestyle could boost your self-esteem and confidence. Greater tact will help you sidestep verbal confrontations. Deliver stressful news in person.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An early morning message helps you see a career or financial move in a new light. Postpone making a final decision. Spend the evening with an old friend will revive happy memories.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Work harder to reduce projected spending. A creative or artistic venture, properly developed, will bring lasting financial security. Romance becomes even more rewarding.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your studies or travels are interrupted for a good cause. Extravagance could land you in hot water with your partner.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Someone wonderful knocks on your door, possibly a visitor from afar. Making plans for the future brings you new hope and good fortune, too. Be supportive of your loved ones this evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A good time to make key changes, ones you have dearly wanted. Whatever you give, you will get back. Your finest career move may take place behind closed doors. Move too fast in relationships and they are bound for failure.

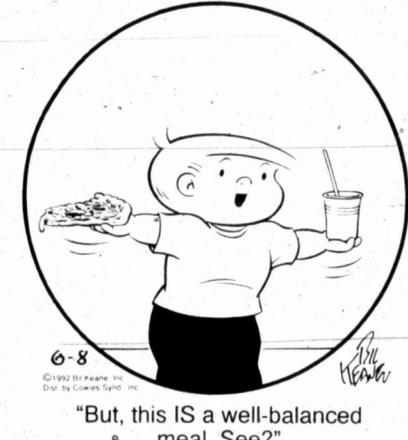

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Take charge of your destiny and you will feel the thrill of success. You can definitely sense which plans are right. Loyal allies are everywhere both day and night. Adhere to a sensible diet.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A fortunate day for your finances. Look into shopping values and try to pull a few strings. If someone will not work with you, move along. Pick up the tempo in romance.
