Sendoff scheduled for Austin-bound Steers

Fans wishing to see the Big Spring Steers baseball team off to Austin for the state championships can do so Wednesday morning. The Steers' team bus leaves at 10 a.m. from the school parking lot next to Blackenship Field. The team will make the first trip in school history to the state baseball championship. It goes against the Robstown Cotton Pickers in a Class 4A state semi-final game at 2:30 p.m. Thursday at Ditch-Falk Field. Officials said that the Lions Club will fly black-and-gold BSHS flags, which usually are set up only during football season, along Gregg Street Thursday. Craig Fischer is organizing a charter bus to Austin for local supporters of the team. It will leave about 6 a.m. Thursday at a cost of $65 per person. For more information, contact Fischer at 264-3643 or 264-3647. The Steers reached the state tournament thanks to a 6-5 win over Lamesa in the Region 1-4A final last Thursday in Midland's Angel Field. To reach Ditch-Falk, exit Martin Luther King Boulevard off of Interstate Highway 35 and go east (away from the University of Texas campus). The stadium is just north (on the left) of Martin Luther King at IH 35.

Reunion set for June 13

The 15th Annual Cannibal Draw Reunion will be held at the La Posada Restaurant Saturday, according to Coordinator H.M. Underwood. The reunion is for longtime friends who were born or grew up in old eastside Big Spring before 1930, Underwood said. The reunion begins at 5:30 p.m. Saturday with visitation at the restaurant; the meal will be one hour later. Door prizes will be offered, Underwood said. For more information, contact Underwood at 263-0915.

Robstown: 'Average' defending champ

By MIKE BUTTS Staff Writer Big Spring Steer fans who want to get an idea of how good the Robstown Cotton Pickers are had better not listen to Robstown coach Steve Castro. Castro insists his squad, which faces Big Spring in the Class 4A baseball state semifinals Thursday in Austin, is an "average high school team" with "average ball players." Everybody should be so average. The Cotton Pickers are defending 4A state champions. The school makes the trip to the state championships in Austin so frequently it should consider building a dormitory next to Ditch-Falk Field, the site of the state semifinals and final games. Robstown played in the state finals the last two years and reached the semifinals five of the last six seasons. They have won their district three times in six years. The Cotton Pickers have lost one game since March 31. Sophomore starting pitchers Ignacio Gonzalez (12-1) and Gilbert Olivarez (7-1) threw 163 strike outs in 108 innings in the regular season.

"I think right now pitching is the strength of the team — being able to keep runners off base," Castro says. The defending champs will not scare anybody with their hitting. "We've never been a team that has seven or eight .300 hitters," Castro says. "We're a low scoring team that takes advantage of opportunities. We're just average (offensively)." DH and third baseman Stevie Velasquez (.383) and second baseman Jesse Garcia (.398) lead Robstown in hitting, but they are the only .300 hitters on the team. Although the left-handed Gonzalez has the best numbers on the club, Castro says he hasn't made a decision on who to start against Big Spring because he says the unique atmosphere in Austin requires experience as much as it does talent. "We just want to pick (a starter) who shows he really wants to win — who's better prepared," Castro says. Along with the artificial turf at Ditch-Falk, a factor that will make the game different is the crowd. PLEASE SEE STEERS, PAGE 6A

Water spills over the top of a dam at Comance Trail Lake this morning. More than one inch of rain fell on Big Spring late Monday, causing flooding on several Howard County roads.

Storms cause more problems

By GARY SHANKS Staff Writer Rain-soaked fields caused a foot or more of flooding on parts of U.S. Highway 87 as another 1.82 inches of rain fell late Monday. As of 9 a.m. today, water remained on the highway, but continued to recede. At times Monday night and early today, however, several hundred yards of highway were hidden between flooded fields. "There was not enough force (in the running water) to wash a car off the road, but you could kind of lose your bearings," said Melvin Dorn, maintenance supervisor of the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation in Howard County. The highway department personnel were at Rip Griffin's Truck Stop warning travelers of the hazardous conditions to the north. Several still continued north on the highway without incident, he said. Several roads in the north part of the county are under water as they are in neighboring Martin and Dawson counties, according to Martin County Sheriff's Deputies. The two storm cells that passed through Big Spring brought the precipitation totals for the year to 19.28 — almost twice the normal rainfall for this time of year, according to National Weather Service officials. The most severe areas of the storm system were to the south and northeast of Midland, with tornadoes reported near McCombs and 52,000-foot cloud tops. The storms that passed through Big Spring were estimated to have cloud tops of 45,000 feet or more, an NWS spokesman said. Although the low pressure trough that has been centered on the Texas-New Mexico border is breaking down, higher temperatures today are expected to fuel more thunderstorms in the Permian Basin area late today, he said.

Perot meets with mayors

The ASSOCIATED PRESS DALLAS — For 12 years, Boston Mayor Ray Flynn says, the White House and Congress have ignored the nation's cities. To get their attention now, Flynn came to a shiny glass office tower for an audience with a billionaire. Nothing catches eyes and raises eyebrows in politics these days like calling on Ross Perot. That's exactly what a delegation of five big-city mayors, representing the U.S. Conference of Mayors, did Monday. After meeting for more than two hours at the request of the undeclared independent presidential candidate, the mayors said Perot was receptive, declaring he wanted to be a "domestic agenda" president who would make creating jobs and revitalizing urban America his top priority. "If there's a tone of frustration that is in our voice today that brings us here to Dallas, Texas, because nobody is listening to us or respecting the people that we represent, well then that's ex-

County officials nix ex-deputy's benefits

By PATRICK DRISCOLL Staff Writer County officials changed course and decided not to pay June health benefits on behalf of former Deputy Sheriff Jimmy Wallace, who was on forced administrative leave without pay. County Treasurer Bonnie Franklin had included the $506 county payment for Wallace's health benefits in the payroll for June but, after conferring with the county judge last week, decided not to pay. "It's not paid and we're not going to pay it," County Judge Ben Lockhart said. Wallace, placed on leave after filing for office against Sheriff A.N. Standard — who said the candidacy was a conflict of interest — was sent a registered letter informing him of the stopped health benefit payments, Franklin said. WALLACE HAS THE OPTION OF MAKING THE MONTHLY PAYMENT HIMSELF FOR THE NEXT 18 MONTHS. The county had paid April and May health benefits for Wallace after he lost the Democratic nomination to Standard in March. Following registered letters from the sheriff's office, Wallace and Standard met several times unsuccessfully to negotiate Wallace's job status since the election. Franklin and Lockhart changed course following a story last week in the Big Spring Herald in which Standard, who has sole discretion to put Wallace back on regular duties or terminate his employment if Wallace does not quit, was quoted as saying he never asked that health benefits be paid for Wallace. "I have not presently asked nor

Officials visiting SWCID

By MARTHA E. FLORES Staff Writer Lynn Levery from the Governor's Director of Education of Office and State Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock were scheduled to arrive at the SouthWest Collegiate Institute for the Deaf this morning. Levery and Montford were accompanied by Bob White, Texas School for the Deaf governing board member, said Margaret Justus, assistant press secretary at the Governor's office. Justus added the visit was a follow-up to Levery's visit in early May. When contacted this morning, Howard College Dean of Institute Research and Information Linda Conway said state officials will meet with SWCID faculty and staff at 9:30 a.m. and then meet with a different group at 10:30 a.m. Conway said the different group consisted of HC administration, including herself, HC President Bob E. Riley was flying in from Austin to meet with the group, she said. Ron Brasel, SWCID vice-president, said he interrupted his vacation to be present for the team's visit. The first visit to SWCID took place May 7. Its purpose was to collect information about the conflict between SWCID and HC administration. Levery and Roger Lobodda, associate program director from the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board's Community College and Technical Institutes division were accompanied by Angel Ramos and an interpreter. The team spent about four and half hours with SWCID students, faculty and staff. They concluded their visit by meeting with Brasel, Riley and Cheri Sparks, HC vice-president for institutional advancement. The conflict began in late March when Riley announced layoffs for the HC district, which included the layoff of SWCID recruiter Bob Coltrane. By April 16, more than two-thirds of the SWCID students began demonstrating. The demonstrators requested six items to be examined and rectified, which included the reinstatement of Coltrane, renovations to the Dental Laboratory Technology PLEASE SEE SWCID, PAGE 6A

Rural residents trying to derail high speed train

AUSTIN (AP) — A proposed bullet train that would whisk passengers across rural Texas at 200 mph has united farmers and ranchers, who are traditionally on opposite sides of the fence.

Builders of the rail system would have to fence in 600 miles of land to make way for trains that would run day and night, linking Houston, Dallas, San Antonio and Austin.

"Farmers have a tough enough time as it is," said Heather Morris, a second-generation farmer from Dawson, about 60 miles south of Dallas.

Kenneth Johnson, who raises ostriches on his Central Texas ranch, complained, "It's going to destroy people's whole lives."

Morris and Johnson were among several opponents who spoke out against the proposal during a recent hearing in Corsicana. It's one of 39 hearings to help develop a report on the train's environmental impact.

Ranchers a century ago fought to keep the range open for their grazing cattle while farmers fenced in their land to protect struggling crops.

But many people, such as Gary Murphy, now consider themselves both farmers and ranchers. The division is between agricultural interests and the railroad.

"I've got cattle, and am concerned about how the noise is going to affect milk production," Murphy, who is from Dawson, said. "We feel the market value of our land is affected. The proposal's already hurting it, and it's certainly going to hurt it more."

Rural Texans worry that the bullet train could change their way of life, said Clint Miller, an executive with the company running the hearings. Some have drawn more than 300 people.

"Other than being threatened to be chased out of town with a stick, things are going very well," Miller said.

The 50-year franchise to build and operate the nearly $6 billion train system went to a group of American and French investors, managed by Idaho-based Morrison Knudsen Corp. The initial routes are scheduled to be in operation by the end of the century.

However, many rural residents are concerned about losing or being blocked from their land. They also worry about how the noise of the train and its electric lines will affect their livestock.

The train "will only be benefiting people in metropolitan areas, with destruction to prime farmland," said Bill Curtis, a rancher from Cryer Creek.

The state is sensitive to the concerns, said Bob Neely, executive director of the Texas High-Speed Rail Authority.

He said "it's like any other major public works project. The most recent is comparing it to the interstate highway system, where there was tremendous opposition."

Bullet train opponents are giving farmers and ranchers false information, such as saying the power to condemn land will be in the hands of private builders instead of governmental entities, said Neely.

Dallas-area church mourns deaths

RICHARDSON (AP) — One of the Dallas area's largest Chinese Christian churches today was mourning the collision that killed five retreat-bound van occupants and landed 10 others in North and East Texas hospitals.

Nine teenagers remain hospitalized, seven in critical or serious condition.

Authorities said Betty Lim, 26, of Dallas ran a stop sign Monday at a wooded intersection near Mineola in East Texas. A cement truck on U.S. Highway broadsided the Dallas Chinese Bible Church van on Farm-To-Market Road 564.

The van was one of three headed together to the Brookhaven Youth Camp in Hawkins for a weeklong retreat.

Funeral arrangements are pending at Restland Funeral Home in Dallas for the five: Ms. Lim; Audrey Chiang, 16, of Arlington; Jonathan C. Fang, 17, of Irving; Adelina Lau, 18, of Arlington; and Raymond Ng, of Arlington, age unknown.

A recording Monday night at the Hawkins camp announced the camp had been canceled this week because of the tragedy. "Would you please pray for those families that lost loved ones," said a man who identified himself as Tom Hanson.

Relatives and friends waited for word together at the worship center in the Dallas suburb of Richardson, where a sudden spring thunderstorm forced many to sprint toward fellow congregation members standing at the door.

They greeted each other silently, often with hugs and tears.

"Everybody is praying for comfort from the Lord and for their safety," congregation member Sharon Tung said. "We're kneeling down."

Reporters were not allowed inside.

"We are having a tragedy. I'm sorry," said spokesman Christopher Chen, shutting the church's door.

The accident occurred at about 12:26 p.m. in Wood County, about 80 miles east of Dallas.

"This is the worst accident I've seen in eight years as an EMS pilot," said Doug Zink, a pilot for East Texas Medical.

Skid marks marred the width of the road. Grass was scorched where the burning van halted.

At least 23 collisions have occurred at the intersection in the past decade, Department of Public Safety spokesmen said.

Licensing for Africanized Bee extermination debated

WESLACO (AP) — The ongoing migration of the Africanized honeybees is forcing many agencies to get involved in extermination efforts, which in turn is presenting a new challenge for pest control regulators.

Texas law requires pest control operators to be licensed. But it's taking more than exterminators to fight the so-called killer bees: beekeepers, fire and health departments and other agencies are also taking part.

The Structural Pest Control Board is considering the best way to regulate those new efforts and may decide to require licenses for everyone exterminating the bees, board Chairman John Gonzalez said Monday.

But the board must avoid interfering with agencies that respond to emergency calls, he said.

"We're not trying to impede them," said Gonzalez, noting that the board will likely make exceptions in emergencies.

The board held a meeting Monday to gather input from many of the Rio Grande Valley officials who have been dealing with the aggressive insects — and confusion over control regulations — the longest.

Officials will consider testimony from the meeting before deciding on new regulations.

Many of those testifying favored dropping licensing requirements for emergency personnel altogether, especially since they generally only use soapy water, not pesticides, to destroy the bees.

"In this instance we'd been doing well until the federal government stepped in and said soap and water was a pesticide," said state Rep. Renato Cuellar.

Edinburg Fire Chief Johnny Economedes said his department has continued to answer emergency calls even though it was apparently violating pest control laws.

But Benny Mathis, the board's executive director, pointed out that state officials had not been enforcing the licensing rule when it came to emergency agencies.

"We never said that they couldn't," respond, Mathis said.

Mathis and Gonzalez conceded, however, that there have been widespread misconceptions about licensing regulations. In fact, some agencies stopped responding to calls because they didn't know if they were legally allowed to kill the bees.

Consequently, part of the hearing was taken up by pleas for clarification. Some fire department and health officials asked the board for guidelines on just who needed certification.

WASHINGTON (AP) — America's between-meal eating habits are catching on abroad as the U.S. snack food industry pursues a booming overseas business in candy, salted peanuts and corn chips.

Sweets seem to be the world's favorite snack. Since 1986, U.S. exports of candy, cakes and cookies grew nearly fourfold, from $116 million to $454 million in 1991, according to the June issue of the Agriculture Department's AgExport magazine.

International tastes for potato chips, pretzels, peanuts and popcorn also are growing rapidly. The $20.4 million spent on such treats in the last quarter of 1991 is a 23 percent increase over the same months a year earlier, said the magazine.

Foreign Agricultural Service analysts predict that snack food is catching on so fast worldwide that it could be a billion-dollar export industry for the United States by mid-decade.

Canada is the best customer, followed by Mexico, Japan and South Korea.

Companies are experimenting with new flavors, product themes and brighter packaging to appeal to the tastes of various cultures.

They're also pushing traditionally American snacking holidays on other countries.

Think what it would mean for U.S. snack manufacturers if Halloween was caught on across the globe. "AgExport" says American snack companies have influenced the Japanese to pick up on it.

There are about 50 food science programs across the country.

One is at Purdue University where food educator Connie Weaver says she gets regular calls from officials in the food industry who say they are expanding their food science departments.

The new federal regulations will require more detailed information about ingredients and the amount of fat, sodium and cholesterol in each food. They are scheduled to go into effect in May 1993, although the food industry is pushing for an extension.

Foods that never have carried this information will be required to do so. Companies that have concentrated predominantly on flavor are putting more emphasis than ever on how their foods fit with scientific and government recommendations for healthy diets.

Food executives lecture at Purdue as a regular part of the curriculum.

"They used to say the driving consumer demand they were addressing was quality, taste or convenience. Now they are saying nutrition," said Weaver. "People's interest in health and nutrition has been the No. 1 research and development focus."

Names in the news

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — "Good Morning America" co-host Joan Lunden has been ordered to pay her estranged husband $18,000 a month in support.

Lunden, 41, filed for divorce earlier this year from TV producer Michael Krauss, 52. They had been married for almost 14 years and have three daughters.

Justice Nicholas Colabella last week ordered Lunden to pay Krauss $18,000 a month in interim support and to pay half his unreimbursed medical expenses.

"Why the courts don't tell a husband who has been living off his wife to go out and get a job is beyond my comprehension," Lunden, who reportedly makes $2 million a year, said in a statement.

Krauss' lawyer, Norman Sheresky, said that his client had devoted himself to his family and that Krauss had hoped things could be settled amicably.

In light of the decision, he said, "Maybe things will get better. They should divide what they have and get on with their lives."

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Fans of the Andy Griffith Show picnicked and played at events such as Goober's Arm Wrestling Contest and Opie's Sack Races during the first Mayberry Founder's Day Picnic.

"It's a good club to be in because you know Dan Quayle isn't going to say anything bad about it," joked Dan Velding, referring to the vice president's remarks about TV character Murphy Brown having a child out of wedlock.

About 70 people attended Sunday's event. The international fan club boasts 20,000 members, said Lyle Fales, president of the Grand Rapids and western Michigan chapters of the Andy Griffith Show Rerun Watchers Club.

The series ran from 1960 to 1968.

MBANZA CONGO, Angola (AP) — Pope John Paul II surprised farmer Paulo Temuen, his wife and eight children by joining them for a glass of lemonade.

"Do you own land? Do you grow enough to feed everyone? Do your children go to school? Do you study hard?" the pope asked the Temuens in Portuguese during his 15-minute chat on Monday.

Before leaving, the pope slipped Temuen an envelope, saying, "This is for all of you." It was a gift of $500. Temuen had to ask reporters what the green bills were.

John Paul came to Mbanza Congo, black Africa's oldest church mission, to lay the cornerstone of a cathedral. He is on a weeklong trip to Angola.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Barbara Bush kept a low profile on her 67th birthday.

The first lady attended no public events on Monday.

President Bush, asked what he bought his wife, told reporters, "Same thing as last year."

He added jokingly, "I've got to run out now and find something."

Mrs. Bush has said she and her husband do not exchange presents.

Garth Brooks voted entertainer of year

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Alan Jackson won three awards and fans voted Garth Brooks entertainer of the year at the 26th annual TNN-Music City News Country Awards show Monday night.

Brooks, who has sold more than 17 million copies of his three albums, including his latest, "Ropin' the Wind," had been nominated in five categories, but won only entertainer of the year.

He wasn't present to accept during the show televised live from the Grand Ole Opry on The Nashville Network.

The winners were chosen by subscribers to the monthly country music publication Music City News who mailed in written ballots, and by TNN viewers who voted by calling a 900 telephone number.

Jackman, co host of the show, once worked in TNN's mailroom. He was nominated for six awards this year, winning for male artist of the year and album and single of the year for "Don't Rock the Jukebox."

"The last two years I've been real fortunate, and so many people have been involved," Jackson said.

Cowboy star Roy Rogers was honored for his more than 25 years in entertainment with the Living Legend award. Singer Emmylou Harris was honored for her humanitarian work with the Minnie Pearl Award.

Dolly Parton and Ricky Van Shelton, who recorded the hit "Rockin' Years," upset the Grammy-winning New Nashville Cats (Vince Gill, Mark O'Connor, Ricky Skaggs and Steve Wariner) for the vocal collaboration award.

The two also won the video award for the song. Other entertainers held out strangleholds in their categories. The Statler Brothers collected the vocal group award for the 21st time in the awards' 26-year history.

The Statler Brothers last lost in 1983 to Alabama.

"What do we do for longevity — we eat a lot of beans," said Don Reid. "We're very fortunate. The fans like what we do, and they continue to like what we do."

The Judds picked up the vocal duo award for a seventh straight year despite the fact that daughter Wynonna has been working as a solo act since their final concert last December.

Ray Stevens took home comedian of the year for a seventh straight year, and the Chuck Wagon Gang won the gospel group award for the third time since 1988.

Reba McEntire added to her collection with her seventh female artist award in the last eight years.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Employees who went to work at Ross Perot's Electronic Data Systems signed contracts that gave the company the right to investigate their private lives, prohibited them from leaving to compete with EDS and stipulated how they could dress at work.

One form obtained by The Associated Press, dated May 1980, notified each new employee that EDS reserved the right to scrutinize his "character, general reputation, personal characteristics and mode of living." EDS workers were required to read and sign the document as a condition of employment.

An 88-page EDS employee manual obtained by the AP contained a section entitled "Personal Standards," and explained that a worker's "character, integrity and behavior, both on and off the job, determine the image EDS has in the community. Therefore, your standards of conduct must at all times be above reproach."

Perot, preparing an independent run for the White House, did not respond to a reporter's written list of questions about the personnel documents.

But last week, Perot said he strongly believes in an individual's right to privacy.

Milledge Hart III, who was president of EDS from 1962 to 1978, said that while the company conducted background checks of prospective employees, he did not recall a document that could authorize probes after a worker was hired.

"I don't remember the 'mode of living' thing, but there was nothing of that nature happening when I was there," said Hart, now a businessman in Dallas. "I don't think we ever investigated anyone."

Perot founded EDS in 1962 and built the computer services company into a multi-million dollar concern before selling it to General Motors Corp. in 1984.

He ran a tight ship at EDS, and insisted on tough standards for his employees.

The handbook for new employees spelled out what men and women could wear on the job.

Men were expected to wear "conservative shirts.... Following approval by the location manager, short-sleeved shirts may be worn during the warmest summer months."

"These shirts were to be worn with 'a conservative business suit,' and complemented by 'a conservative business tie, color-coordinated with suit and shirt.' Footwear was to be 'all-leather, lace-up, slip-on or wing-tip shoes.'"

"Neatly trimmed" moustaches were acceptable, but full beards were not, and hair could not be below the collar, the document says.

Women were expected to wear "a skirted suit, dress, skirt and blouse or skirt and sweater." Pantsuits were not to be worn by "management personnel, systems engineers, corporate and financial personnel or secretaries," but exceptions could be made "during the coldest winter months."

A separate handbook prepared for clerical employees and some secretaries was less strict on the dress code.

Hart explained the dress code by saying, "Some of the managers said their guys had no idea what kind of clothes to buy. So we wrote up a document spelling it out."

Ross Perot stands in front of Electronic Data Systems employees in Auburn Hills, Mich., in this 1985 photo from files. Employees who came to work at Perot's Electronic Data Systems signed contracts that gave the company the right to investigate their private lives, forbid them from leaving to compete with EDS and stipulated how they could dress at work.

The non-compete document notified new hires that any computer technology or product they developed while working for the company remained the exclusive property of EDS, and that they had to keep secret all research methodology and business strategies.

Those who left EDS were prohibited for three years from recruiting EDS employees for their own spinoff company, competing with EDS or any of its subsidiaries within 200 miles of any American city where EDS did business, or using any EDS-developed technology in their own private business pursuits.

EDS employees also were prohibited from taking a job with competitors during that three-year period.

Hart said the non-compete clause was like others in the industry at the time, and that EDS successfully defended it.

"The non-competes he was offering were more restrictive, and were much longer than industry average, and were probably not enforceable," said Andrew Sherwood, chairman of Goodrich and Sherwood.

Earth Summit achieves one of its major goals

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — After 2½ years of tedious negotiations, Earth Summit delegates have approved a new United Nations body to monitor compliance with environmental treaties and gauge progress toward the summit's goals.

Environmentalists praised the establishment Monday of the U.N. Commission on Sustainable Development, calling it one of the summit's major accomplishments.

In a joint news release, four environmental groups said the commission will provide a way to hold governments accountable for their actions on the environment.

It will also be a forum for the continuation of negotiations begun at the Earth Summit, they said.

"I think it's one of the most significant accomplishments" of the gathering, said Kathy Sessions of the United Nations Association of the United States.

Although the commission's regulations will not be legally binding, they will create what Sessions called "soft law" that can lead to legally binding treaties.

Scott Hajost of the Environmental Defense Fund was more circumspect about the commission. "The proof is going to be in the followup by governments," said Hajost, a former State Department attorney.

He praised the United States for its role in the negotiations establishing the commission: "The United States was fairly constructive on this issue." While the United States was being praised for its work on the commission, it was being criticized for pressing some of its European allies not to split with it over the issue of global warming.

U.S. officials sent letters to Austria, Switzerland and Britain urging them not to support the so-called "like-minded countries" declaration, drafted by the Austrians, Swiss and Dutch, according to European officials.

The declaration calls for the reduction of carbon dioxide emissions to 1990 levels by the year 2000, a provision that European countries had wanted to include in the global warming treaty prepared for the Earth Summit.

United States opposition forced the Europeans to drop their demand, and the treaty now suggests — but does not require — that emission levels be reduced. The release of carbon dioxide and other gases, most often through the burning of fossil fuels, is believed to contribute to global warming.

Michael Young, deputy head of the U.S. summit delegation, was asked about the pressure tactics at a news briefing. He drew peals of derisive laughter when he said, "The United States never puts pressure on anybody."

The controversy over the like-minded countries declaration threatens to widen the rift between the United States and some of its allies over Washington's steadfast opposition to the treaty on preserving the globe's biological diversity.

President Bush on Sunday reiterated his position that the treaty would hurt U.S. industry and cost American jobs.

Led by Germany, the European Community, which has expressed concern about the isolation of the United States at the summit, is drafting another, weaker declaration that it hopes to offer as a substitute for the like-minded countries declaration, said Lauren Jan Brinkhoorst, the European Community's spokesman.

Debate over press rights vs. privacy rights provoked by latest royal woes

LONDON (AP) — London newspapers, not normally known for self-restraint, have seized on reports of trouble in the marriage of Prince Charles and Princess Diana with potboiling glee.

The sea of sensationalist headlines is provoking emotional accusations of betrayal and sordid behavior — mostly among rival newspaper editors.

The story itself is another public blow for the royal family, which has already been shaken by the recent separation of Charles' brother Prince Andrew from the former Sarah Ferguson, and the divorce of his sister, Princess Anne.

"Diana: Her True Story," by former tabloid reporter Andrew Morton, went considerably further than the traditional circulation-boosting stories of royal discord.

Morton quoted by name two friends of Diana as sources for some of the saga of the princess. He said she was driven to suicide attempts by Charles' coldness and indifference during the 11-year-old marriage.

He also said the 30-year-old princess suffered from an eating disorder, bulimia, and was jealous of Camilla Parker-Bowles, 43, a longtime friend of Charles.

For Britain's often free-wheeling press, the ruckus comes less than two months before the end of an 18-month "probation" period for demonstrating that it can restrain itself.

The Press Complaints Commission, a private body established by the industry, on Monday accused journalists of "dabbling their fingers in the stuff of other people's souls" and warned that newspapers are in danger of provoking privacy legislation to restrain them.

Archbishop of Canterbury George Carey, spiritual head of the Church of England, said the Charles and Diana stories exceeded the limits of a "society claiming to respect human values."

When the abdication broke you had to buy Time or Newsweek to find out that Mrs. Simpson even existed," Neil said during a shouting match on BBC radio with Max

Hastings, editor of The Daily Telegraph.

Hastings derided the book and the author. "If you can't get a job as a pianist in a brothel you become a royal reporter," he said.

Among Britain's 11 fiercely competitive national newspapers, only The Daily Telegraph and The Financial Times ignored the story Monday.

The tabloids featured pictures of a grim Diana returning Sunday to London after a weekend with Charles and their children, Prince William, 9, and Prince Harry, 7, at their country estate.

"Diana Ready To Separate," declared the 1.5 million circulation Daily Express. "We Won't Divorce," said the 3.5 million-circulation Sun.

Let good things men do live on America has voted on Elvis Presley and has decided to love him tender.

The Postal Service announced Thursday (June 4) that the youthful image of Presley outpooled a jumpsuited and caped "old Elvis" and will adorn the 29-cent stamp to be released in January. More than 1 million votes were cast, the tally was 851,200 to 277,723.

Under Postal Service rules, stamps bearing the likeness of individuals may be issued only after the subject has been dead for 10 years. Elvis died in 1977 at the age of 42.

It was the first time the Postal Service asked the public to select postage stamp art. Officials commissioned two portraits, the winning one that showed Presley in his "Hound Dog" years, cradling a '50s-style microphone, and the other representing him in his later years as a Vegas showman, when he favored bejeweled jumpsuits and capes.

Critics objected to the project's $300,000 promotional costs, but the Postal Service said it expects to make money on the stamp as a collector's item. The stamp will come out Jan. 8, the anniversary of Presley's birth, at a post office across the street from Graceland, the singer's former home in Memphis, Tenn. Presley would have been 58 on that day.

The first issues will be single sheets of 40 stamps each. The Presley stamp also will be part of a booklet that will include seven others in a "Legends of American Music" series. The other stars are yet to be chosen.

A vocal minority tried to block the issuance of the Elvis stamp, saying his drug abuse made him a poor subject for such an honor. Yes, he was a troubled man, but he clearly belongs in any series of stamps honoring contemporary American musicians. In a career that spanned three decades, he achieved a level of professional success that few can match. He had 18 songs that made it to the top of the chart and nine No. 1 albums. His renditions of such hits as "All Shook Up," "It's Now or Never" and "Don't Be Cruel" made him a nationwide sensation and changed the face of popular music.

Besides having an abundance of talent and charisma, he was a generous man. He remembered those in need and gave freely of his time and generously of his money to support dozens of charitable organizations and events.

The Postal Service said the stamp will recognize Presley's contribution to American music, not endorse his way of life. That's fine with us. The good that men do should live after them.

Reader says article misleading

To the editor:

After reading Mr. C.D. Urban's "Letter to the Editor" in the Tuesday, May 12, edition of the Herald, I feel compelled to respond. In the article (Herald, Pg. 1-D, 4-26-92) that prompted Mr. Urban's letter, Herald reporter Patrick Driscoll set the quote "It's nobody's business" by itself as a paragraph amid several others referring to gas prices.

This placement gave the reader the false impression that Mr. Tompkins was saying in effect that gas prices are nobody's business. I participated in the discussion with Messrs. Driscoll, Parks and Tompkins; Mr. Tompkins never said or implied that the retail price of gas is nobody's business.

How can Mr. Driscoll expect any person who is capable of independent, critical thought to believe that Mr. Tompkins said something so obviously contradictory? The retail price of gas is obviously everybody's business! There are some 50 gas retailers in Big Spring. About 90 percent of them post their gas prices in an open and notorious manner on a large, often illuminated sign for every passerby to see. The price of gas is practically a matter of public record.

In my opinion, the article that Mr. Driscoll wrote does not accurately reflect the substance of the conversation that took place between us. I believe that the reader can make his own conclusions about the article's integrity by merely counting the errors contained therein. I hope that in the future, Mr. Driscoll will attempt to report news of interest to Big Spring with greater degrees of objectivity, accuracy, and completeness.

TROY TOMPKINS
Big Spring

EDITOR'S NOTE — Mr. Driscoll's story, and the quote "It's nobody's business" was clearly referring to Mr. Tompkins' opinion of the Herald graphic comparing rack prices with retail gasoline prices and nowhere in the article, as Mr. Tompkins incorrectly seeks to imply, does Mr. Driscoll make any effort to imply that retail prices are not public.

We agree with Mr. Tompkins that such a thought is ludicrous and join him in wondering how "any person who is capable of independent, critical thought" could manage to confuse the issue as he attempted to do.

We also wonder why, if Mr. Tompkins was as concerned about the alleged inaccuracies of the article as he purports, he waited nearly one month — from April 26 to May 21 — to voice his concerns?

Opponent to remain nameless

The rule now in effect at the White House is that under no circumstances can the name Ross Perot be mentioned.

"Mr. President, here are the poll results from California."

"Read them to me."

"You came in a strong third, against Clinton's weak second and an unknown came in first."

"Don't tell me his name."

"We had no intention of doing so. The voters' response was that if the election was held today they'd vote for the devil they are going to get rather than the devil they've got."

"The people are so fickle."

"That's our trouble. You've been in for four years. What's-his-name has never served in public office, and the voter is willing to bet the farm on an inexperienced billionaire, whose name I can never remember."

The President said, "I'm not worried about Democratic presidential candidate Bill Clinton, but how do you attack someone with no political track record? Have our dirty-tricks people, whom I have repudiated countless times, been able to come up with some good stuff on 'no name'?"

"We're working on it, sir. He has no connection with Willie Horton that we know of, and we can't find any bimboes in his life. All we have found out is that he made a lot of money."

"Well, I can't attack someone for that. Everyone who has contributed to my campaign has made a lot of money."

"You could say that while your contributors give money for you to win your election, he wants to buy his presidency with his own money. If that isn't un-American I don't know what is."

"Well, what about if I just go out there and attack him by name?"

"You can't do that, sir. You're the President, and by using his name you would give him respectability."

"At the same time, it's no fun being third in the polls all the time."

"It's not your fault, Mr. President. You're a household word in American politics. People have no choice but to be disillusioned with you. On the other hand, no one has ever heard of 'blank-blank,' so he is bound to have the respect of the voters. Once everyone knows who he is, he'll sink right to the bottom of the Potomac."

"Maybe I should invite him to dinner and explain that he's tearing the country apart."

"That would be a good idea. Do you want to invite Clinton as well?"

"What for? He's not tearing the country apart. They told me that all I had to do was launch Desert Storm, and I'd be a shoo-in for re-election."

"People get amnesia when you do something good. Mr. President, I think we should forget the polls and just be presidential. After all, this isn't merely a contest against outsiders with no political affiliation. It's against the rain forests of Brazil and a rotten, lazy Congress. You-know-who may be gaining on us, but we still haven't played the family card for all it's worth."

Personal responsibility: Foundation of our society

When you make a mess you can clean it up yourself or leave it for someone else to do. The number and kind of messes society is willing to clean up for its members is a fair measure of its mettle.

Most people believe in, or are taught to believe in, cleaning up their own messes, taking care of their own problems, and clearing up their own mistakes. It's called personal responsibility. It is the foundation upon which our society was built.

Our society. That is you, me, the kids next door and their cousins, aunts and uncles. That's the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker, and the guy that mucks out the stable. Us. And in order to live well together, and enjoy the greater safety of numbers, we early on established order by making the rules and regulations we thought would produce harmony among ourselves. We knew we had to have cooperation in the group if the individuals were to enjoy the greatest freedom possible.

Why then do we continue to pick up our shovels and mops, and, tired as we are, set to work again and again cleaning up the messes of those few in society who are too irresponsible to pull their own weight?

Because we got lazy. Because (for a while) we thought it would be easier to do it ourselves than to make them adhere to the higher standards our society once demanded. They made us feel guilty and we gave in to them. We let go of too many of the good things we were raised on, we dropped our averages and our expectations and chose the easy way. We were wrong. We behaved like the super rich father, who, having no time for his children, gives them money and hopes they'll go away. Yet, there's not a one of us that couldn't tell the rich man how to bring the kid up right: "What did you expect? You never made him do anything for himself. When he threw tantrums, you stuck a present in his hand instead of busting his behind. If he didn't want to go to school, he didn't go to school and you saw to it that the teachers gave him passing grades anyway. He never worked a day in his life, had no respect for his family or anyone else, and if he got some girl in trouble, you bought her off and shut up the scandal. Now he's a lazy little puke who thinks he's above the law, and you can't understand it! Old buddy, you brought this on yourself."

Therein lies the paradox. If we're so smart about the rich man's kid — how come we're so dumb about the poor man's? They are both spoiled rotten and the hard-working, tax-paying majority are breaking our own backs cleaning up the messes of the minority (rich and poor.) Where is the money stolen from us by the Keating Five in the savings and loan scandal? We'll never know, but we're paying for the greed of those rich kids. What real good will a billion dollars in aid to Los Angeles do if money is all we're prepared to give? We'll never know, but we're paying for the tantrums of those poor kids.

I'm more fed up with the crimes of the rich than the crimes of the poor because the rich at least had a better opportunity to learn better, but the bottom line is, they both make me sick. I don't want to clean up their messes anymore.

We have enough laws on the books right now to take care of any crime committed against society, but we're too mealy-mouthed and lily-livered to enforce them. We have so many government subsidies and hand-outs going that we've put ourselves three trillion dollars in the hole, and we don't have the guts to stop them. Why? Because we no longer have the courage to demand the one thing of ourselves and the other members of our society that would turn it all around again: Personal Responsibility.

We've made it too easy for people to say, "Kids have always had pre-marital sex so let's hand out condoms at school." My answer to that is that kids have always sneaked out to have a beer before they are of legal drinking age too, but we don't pass out beer at school. We try our best to instill some values, and if all else fails, we make them responsible for their own actions; they pay their own fines, or raise their own babies, or they die of AIDS.

People have a tendency to live up to what is expected of them. If we continue to ask nothing of those who hold out their hands and beg, societies' children will become as burned out and empty as the buildings they leave behind.

Indians go on the warpath; Rangers rock

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

The game already was out of hand when Sandy Alomar decided to take matters into his own hands. After Cecil Fielder hit a three-run homer in the first inning and Milt Cuyler got his second career grand slam later in the inning, the Detroit Tigers were well on their way to a 9-2 victory over Cleveland. When Glenallen Hill was hit by the first pitch from Tigers reliever John Doherty in the sixth and Alomar nearly had his head taken off by Doherty's next pitch, the Indians catcher charged the mound.

Both dugouts and bullpens emptied. Doherty and Alomar were the only players ejected. No punches were thrown, although Cleveland's Carlos Baerga and Detroit's Tony Phillips both had to be restrained by other players.

"That has never happened to me before, not even in Little League," Doherty said. "I wasn't throwing at either batter, and especially not after I hit the first one."

The problems started in the fifth with Detroit leading 8-1 and Mickey Tettleton at bat. After Dennis Cook got ahead 0-2, Tettleton had to dive from two head-high fastballs.

"I would assume that they thought we were throwing at Tettleton, but we weren't," Indians manager Mike Hargrove said. "After they hit Glen and almost hit Sandy, we thought they were throwing at us, but Sparky and Mickey (Tettleton) said they weren't, and I have to believe them."

When Doherty hit Hill, the batter took a couple of steps toward the mound, then stopped. Home plate umpire Drew Coble tried to calm the Indians dugout.

"Drew came over and said that he felt the pitch had gotten away from Doherty and he didn't want anything to happen," Hargrove said. "But the one to Sandy was curious."

It apparently was more than that to Alomar, who refused comment after the game.

In the game, Kurt Knudsen shut down the Indians on two hits in the last four innings for his first major-league save.

In other games, it was Toronto 16, New York 3; Baltimore 5, Boston 2; Milwaukee 6, Oakland 2; Chicago 5, California 1; Kansas City 9, Minnesota 6; and Texas 14, Seattle 3.

Rangers 14, Mariners 3
At Arlington, Juan Gonzalez homered for the fourth time in five official at-bats. Gonzalez followed his three-homer game Sunday against the Twins with a 440-foot solo shot in the third inning off Clay Parker. Gonzalez's 13th home run of the season was the longest at Arlington Stadium this year.

The Rangers have outscored the Mariners 40-5 in their last four meetings. Kevin Brown became the third nine-game winner in the major leagues this season. Brown is one shy of his victory total for 1991.

Blue Jays 16, Yankees 3
At New York, the Jays set season highs for runs and hits (21). An eight-run fourth inning broke it open. Toronto sent 14 batters to the plate in the inning, which took 37 minutes to play.

Jeff Kent tripled, homered and drove in four runs, as did Manuel Lee. Second baseman Roberto Alomar left in the third after slightly spraining his left knee in a play at the plate. Every other Blue Jays starter had at least one hit.

Orioles 5, Red Sox 2
At Baltimore, Bob Milacki (5-3) gave up four hits and two runs in the opening two innings, then blanked Boston on three hits until giving way to Storm Davis, who got the last out in the eighth. Gregg Olson pitched the ninth for his 15th save.

Brewers 6, Athletics 2
At Milwaukee, with three singles Robin Yount moved into 21st place on the all-time list. Yount moved past Jake Beckley and Rogers Hornsby on the career list. He now has 2,931 hits.

If I end up at first, (first base coach Tim) Foli lets me know. I could do without that," Yount said.

White Sox 5, Angels 1
At Chicago, Jack McDowell (8-3) ended a personal three-game slide as he yielded four hits in 7 2-3 innings, walking three and striking out eight. Bobby Thigpen earned his 13th save.

The Angels dropped their fourth straight and 18th in the last 22 games.

Royals 9, Twins 6
At Kansas City, the hosts overcame a 5-1 deficit as Keith Miller was 4 for 4, including a homer. The Twins helped the Royals to a five-run sixth by committing errors on three successive plays as Kansas City scored all its runs with two outs.

weren't, and I have to believe them."

When Doherty hit Hill, the batter took a couple of steps toward the mound, then stopped. Home plate umpire Drew Coble tried to calm the Indians dugout.

"Drew came over and said that he felt the pitch had gotten away from Doherty and he didn't want anything to happen," Hargrove said. "But the one to Sandy was curious."

It apparently was more than that to Alomar, who refused comment after the game.

In the game, Kurt Knudsen shut down the Indians on two hits in the last four innings for his first major-league save.

In other games, it was Toronto 16, New York 3; Baltimore 5, Boston 2; Milwaukee 6, Oakland 2; Chicago 5, California 1; Kansas City 9, Minnesota 6; and Texas 14, Seattle 3.

Rangers 14, Mariners 3
At Arlington, Juan Gonzalez homered for the fourth time in five official at-bats. Gonzalez followed his three-homer game Sunday against the Twins with a 440-foot solo shot in the third inning off Clay Parker. Gonzalez's 13th home run of the season was the longest at Arlington Stadium this year.

The Rangers have outscored the Mariners 40-5 in their last four meetings. Kevin Brown became the third nine-game winner in the major leagues this season. Brown is one shy of his victory total for 1991.

Blue Jays 16, Yankees 3
At New York, the Jays set season highs for runs and hits (21). An eight-run fourth inning broke it open. Toronto sent 14 batters to the plate in the inning, which took 37 minutes to play.

Jeff Kent tripled, homered and drove in four runs, as did Manuel Lee. Second baseman Roberto Alomar left in the third after slightly spraining his left knee in a play at the plate. Every other Blue Jays starter had at least one hit.

Orioles 5, Red Sox 2
At Baltimore, Bob Milacki (5-3) gave up four hits and two runs in the opening two innings, then blanked Boston on three hits until giving way to Storm Davis, who got the last out in the eighth. Gregg Olson pitched the ninth for his 15th save.

Brewers 6, Athletics 2
At Milwaukee, with three singles Robin Yount moved into 21st place on the all-time list. Yount moved past Jake Beckley and Rogers Hornsby on the career list. He now has 2,931 hits.

Steve Howe suspended from baseball for seventh time

MISSOULA, Mont. (AP) — New York Yankees reliever Steve Howe was suspended from baseball for the seventh time on Monday after pleading guilty to a misdemeanor charge of attempting to buy a gram of cocaine.

"I'm sorry it came to this," Yankees general manager Gene Michael said within hours of Howe's appearance before a federal magistrate. "He was an outstanding left-handed pitcher, probably one of the best left-handed relievers in the game. We'll miss him."

Howe, who joined the Yankees in May 1991 after being out of the majors for three seasons, appeared in 20 games this season. He had a 3-0 record, six saves and a 2.45 earned run average in 22 innings, with 12 strikeouts and three walks.

For his career, Howe has a 35-32 record with 69 saves and a 2.58 ERA.

Howe entered his guilty plea before U.S. Magistrate Bart Erickson, but it was not immediately accepted. Erickson said he wants to study a pre-sentence report on Howe before acting on the plea and scheduled another hearing for Aug. 18.

By mid-afternoon, Commissioner Fay Vincent had announced the suspension and predicted Howe would file a grievance, sending the suspension to an arbitrator.

Baseball officials have asked to meet with Howe next week.

Howe, 34, becomes the second Yankee pitcher suspended this season. Pascual Perez was suspended for one year on March 7 for testing positive in two tests for cocaine use.

Howe, reached at his Whitefish home Monday night, said: "I have no comment. I will not violate the agreements and that's it."

The plea bargain negotiated by attorneys for Howe and the government calls for dismissal of a second misdemeanor cocaine charge against the Yankees pitcher. The agreement does not recommend any jail time for Howe.

Determination of a penalty rests with Erickson, however, and he could impose up to one year in jail and a $100,000 fine on the single count.

Howe offered the plea under a legal mechanism called an Alford plea. Attorneys said that, under that procedure, a defendant can plead guilty to a criminal charge without admitting the government's version of the facts.

"He does not stand convicted today," defense attorney Steve Nardi said.

Howe's attorneys said the guilty plea is similar to a no-contest plea in some ways, and Howe's status remains uncertain pending a decision by Erickson.

Expos pitcher just misses no-hitter

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ken Hill pitched his first career no-hitter, and some of his Montreal teammates thought it should have been even better.

The only hit off Hill was starting pitcher Anthony Young's infield single to shortstop with two outs in the fifth inning. Hill went on to beat the New York Mets 6-0 Monday night at Montreal, but after the game everyone was talking about Young's hit.

Shortstop Tom Foley ranged to his right and might have thrown Young out had he made the play, but he bobbed the ball. Official scorer Bob Mann said he ruled the play a single because the ball was hit deep into the hole.

"If there was any question on the part of the official scorer, he should have put an error up and waited for a clean hit," Foley said. "We're at home and Ken's pitching a great game. I know the official scorer has to make a decision on the spot. I feel bad personally. It wasn't a sharply hit ball. I couldn't find the ball. I just wish it had been an error. It's a tough play going into the hole backhand."

Young agreed with the way Mr. Mann saw it.

"It was definitely a hit. He made a good play just to get to the ball. The way I run, it would have been close," said Young, a former defensive back at the University of Houston.

Several Expos disagreed with Mann's call and made motions to the press box after the game ended.

"If Foley had come up cleanly, he would have thrown him out," Hill said. "But I'm just happy to win. I felt real on. I don't know what it's about with the Mets, but I have good success against them."

Hill, who struck out eight and walked four, blanked the Mets 4-0 with a four-hitter at New York on April 10 — the Mets' home opener. He's 6-1 lifetime against them.

The Mets were shut out for the second straight game, losing 3-0 to Pittsburgh's Randy Tomlin on Sunday, and for the ninth time in 56 games this season. New York, which has lost eight of 11 to fall to .500, was shut out nine times all of last season.

Archi Cianfrocco and Rick Cerone each drove in two runs for the Expos.

Phillies 7, Pirates 0
At Veterans Stadium, Curt Schilling pitched a three-hitter for his first major league shutout and doubled in two runs in

National League

Philadelphia's six-run second inning.

Schilling (5-3) struck out one and issued an intentional walk as the Phillies handed the Pirates their sixth straight road loss and ninth in the last 10 away from home.

Mariano Duncan hit a three-run homer in the big second inning and Darren Daulton homered in the seventh.

Reds 4, Giants 1
At Candlestick Park, Greg Swindell, after giving up a leadoff homer to Darren Lewis, pitched eight strong innings for Cincinnati. Chris Sabo homered and drove in two runs for the Reds, who have won 11 of their last 14 and lead the NL West by 2 1/2 games.

Padres 3, Astros 2
At Jack Murphy Stadium, Bruce Hurst, backed by homers from Tony Gwynn and Darrin Jackson, pitched a four-hitter to beat Houston. Hurst (6-4) won his third straight game and fifth in his last six, four of which have been complete games.

Gwynn broke a 2-2 tie with one out in the seventh with his fifth homer.

Pete Harnisch (3-6) allowed eight hits in 6 1-3 innings.

Braves 4, Dodgers 2
At Dodger Stadium, David Justice homered and drove in three runs as Atlanta edged above the .500 mark for the first time in two months. The Braves' fourth straight victory — and their ninth in 10 games overall — gave them a 29-28 record.

Charlie Leibrandt (5-2), allowed an unearned run and five hits in five innings as he remained unbeaten in his last six starts.

Ramon Martinez (3-3) allowed six hits and four runs in five innings.

Cubs 5, Cardinals 2 (13)
Cubs 6, Cardinals 4
At Busch Stadium, Gary Scott and Jose Vizcaino, each batting under .200, keyed a four-run 13th-inning rally for Chicago in the first game of a doubleheader.

Chicago completed a sweep with a 6-4 victory behind Ryne Sandberg, who homered and drove in three runs. Frank Castillo worked six innings for the victory.

Wildfires destroy homes in Northwest

Firefighters in Oregon today battled two wind-driven wildfires that destroyed five houses and forced scores of people from their homes overnight.

In Washington, a blaze believed to have been started by sparks from a railroad track maintenance vehicle burned for a fourth day today.

The fires in Oregon burned near Sisters at Sage Flat, about 80 miles southeast of Portland, and near Haner Butte, 10 miles west of La Pine.

Residents of about 50 homes near Sisters and 60 homes near La Pine were evacuated Monday, Sheriff Darrell Davidson said.

"It looked like World War II," said Bill Smith of the Oregon Department of Forestry. "Flames were shooting a couple hundred feet into the air."

Five homes were destroyed and about 700 acres burned near Sisters, authorities said. Forty miles to the south, about 400 acres burned near La Pine, said Lou Torres, a spokesman for the Oregon Department of Forestry.

Firefighters worked through the night to establish firebreaks.

A helicopter uses a water container in an attempt to control a forest fire about eight miles east of Skykomish, Wash., Monday. The fire began on Saturday from a spark generated by a railroad maintenance crew.

have I asked in the past that he be placed on benefits," Standard said. "For all practical purposes, he's been terminated."

Wallace, a deputy for eight years, maintained shortly after his defeat in March that he was in effect fired from his $25,416 a year job. He is married and has three children.

Standard, a 28-year incumbent, said after the election that the door was open for negotiation. He said he has always required employees, including Wallace when he was hired, to promise allegiance to Standard and the office.

Standard faces Republican candidate Neel Barnaby in the Nov. 3 general election. Barnaby, administrator for the Big Spring Correction Center, says that if elected he would implement progressive changes and that he is a more effective community leader than Standard. Standard said he is running on his record as an incumbent.

classrooms, a separate SWCID budget from HC, requirements that American Sign Language be mandated for employees on the SWCID payroll and no reprisals for demonstrators.

At the April 27, SWCID student demonstration organizer Todd Cottle made a presentation outlining their requests and concerns to the HC Board of Trustees at their regular meeting. The board passed Riley's recommendations unanimously.

Demonstrators dissatisfied with the outcome have continued their efforts by contacting state agencies and officials to look into their concerns, said Cottle.

actively the case," said Flynn, who is president of the mayors conference.

Perot didn't endorse the conference's seven-point, $35 billion revival plan, which includes $15 billion in direct aid to the nation's cities. But he did say he'd scrutinize it in a two-day session with the mayors, and he did say he'd meet monthly with them if elected.

The four Democrats from Boston, Newark, Cleveland and San Diego, along with Mayor Xavier Suarez of Miami, an independent who supported President Bush in 1988, could hardly contain their enthusiasm. They denied the session was any sort of Perot political stunt.

"Quite frankly we met a very exciting, a very dynamic person, someone who we all know is highly successful in the business world, but today he was also sensitive, very informative, and let me say he is a threat to the two-party system," said Newark Mayor Sharpe James, a "super delegate" for likely Democratic presidential nominee Bill Clinton.

"We're too old and too political to be used by anyone," James said. "I think as leaders of the U.S. Conference of Mayors it would have been irresponsible on our part not to meet with him."

The mayors said Perot's interest in their expertise and insight was refreshing.

"I was impressed by how different Mr. Perot seems to be from a classic politician," Suarez said. "He said at one point, 'Use me in any effort... before November to try to get the Congress to take some action.'"

Retired Howard College professor honored

Anita Booth, retired Howard College English and Spanish professor, was honored at the 14th annual International Conference on Teaching Excellence and Conference of Administrators in Austin with a Teaching Excellence Medallion.

Booth, who retired in December after 25 years on the faculty at Howard College, earned a bachelor's degree from the University of the Philippines and a master's degree from North Texas State University in English and sociology.

Before coming to Howard College, Booth taught high school English for nine years in the Philippines and high school English and Spanish in the Dallas area.

Booth believes that "education is a continuous process of growth and adjustment, of trial and error, of new horizons and new experiences."

As an English teacher, Booth said that her objective was not only to teach her students that "dangling participles and split infinitives are inimical to a written composition, but also to arouse their curiosity, to stimulate their interests and to challenge their capabilities."

Booth was featured during the recognition ceremony in a video production of all Excellence Award winners, produced by Larry Miller of Chattanooga State Technical Community College.

"Community colleges have traditionally adopted statements of mission and purpose that emphasize teaching excellence," said Dr. Bob Riley, Howard College President.

Teachers must work long hours looking for ways to reach the gifted student, the unmotivated student and the average student because community colleges have open door policies which means that there is a wide range of ability in each class," said Riley.

"Mrs. Booth was the perfect recipient for the award because she was able to reach so many students," said Riley. "She created a learning environment that made learning enjoyable and motivated students to learn and think for themselves."

The International Conference on Teaching Excellence is sponsored by the National Institute for Staff and Organizational Development (NISOD), the University of Texas and the League for Innovation in the Community College.

which Castro estimates will be 8,000. He says he expects to see about 7,000 from Robstown, a community of 12,500. The Cotton Picker skipper says between 2,800 and 3,200 fans attend district games in Robstown.

Despite Big Spring's coming into the game with less than impressive numbers — a 15-13-1 record —

Castro takes a typically cautious approach to the contest.

"We don't care if they're 0-10 or what," Castro says. "They've been playing good ball in the playoffs. They've got kids that are very competitive. You don't get to the state tournament by being lucky."

Robstown's experience in Austin should be an edge against Big Spring, which had not even advanced in the state baseball playoffs before this year.

And Castro thinks the Cotton Pickers chance to repeat as state 4A champs should give them added incentive to do well.

"How many teams can you name that won back-to-back (championships)?" Castro says. "We want to be part of that and that's part of our motivation."

Floating islands take life from land to sea

HONOLULU — They barely stir a ripple now, but floating islands and cities could swell into a big wave of the future.

Many participants came away from a recent meeting here on ocean technologies and opportunities in the Pacific convinced that everything from waste-disposal plants to condominiums has a future at sea.

All the ideas that were drifting around at the meeting have one thing in common: By utilizing the sea, they hope to ease stresses on the land.

One of the most elaborate schemes — a "floating downtown," just three miles offshore from Honolulu — is envisioned by John Craven, an ocean engineering professor at the University of Hawaii.

It would include rotating condominiums, office buildings and industrial facilities. "The floating city would provide much-needed housing and ease development pressure in Hawaii, and it's all doable," Craven insists.

Another splashy plan proposes a 250-acre floating airport for San Diego. Located about three miles off Point Loma, the "floatport" would have two 12,000-foot runways and space for 80 airplane gates.

"The facility would probably be linked to the mainland by a tunnel or a bridge, although advanced hydrofoils or other stable watercraft might be considered," says Howard L. Blood, chairman of the National Ocean Research Exploration Center, a non-profit organization that supports the project.

An expanded floatport might also become a deep-water port that includes "hotels with full resort activities and subsurface cocktail lounges with underwater views of the natural sea life attracted to this man-made floating reef," says San Diego architect Donald A. Innis.

In the architect's concept, the $1.5 billion facility would be supported 20 feet above the water by a honeycomb of 30,000 large concrete cylinders that would make it impervious to wave motion.

Even floatport advocates concede that it's a long shot. "There are land-based options for a new San Diego airport, and the floating concept has been pushed into the background, but we're still hopeful," Blood says.

Most floating-island advocates concede that before engineers plunge into elaborate offshore havens, they first must test the waters with less ambitious projects. One of the quickest ways to launch floating-structure concepts would be to start with building blocks that already exist.

"A lot of oil platforms aren't being used now, and if there were a serious program, you could use them to demonstrate many aspects of this technology," says Joseph R. Vadus, chairman of the U.S. marine fisheries panel of the United States-Japan cooperative program in natural resources. "Big rigs such as semisubmersibles could be linked together to form floating islands."

Some of these demonstration islands could be turned into garbage dumps. Trash, which already threatens to overwhelm many conventional landfills, could be put in closed containers and barged to oil-drilling platforms 20 to 100 miles offshore, suggests Michael A. Champ, president of Environmental Systems Development in Falls Church, Va.

A floating island shaped like a doughnut may appear off the coast of Hawaii within the next 10 years. It would serve as a showcase for the latest ocean technologies. A supply vessel, left, enters a passageway into the harbor at the center of the island.

VA Vital Signs

I want to take this opportunity to thank the Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce, the Big Spring Rotary, the Big Spring Herald, and the Community Luncheon Chairman, James Weaver for honoring our staff at the community luncheon today. We appreciate the support the community continues to have for the medical center. Our goal is to continue to provide high quality medical care to our veterans.

Every Thursday morning at 9 a.m. a Diabetic Clinic is held to assist eligible veterans with questions and concerns about diabetes. According to the American Diabetes Association, when you have diabetes, your body can't use the food you eat in the proper way. Normally enough insulin is produced to allow the amount of glucose in the blood to be absorbed by the cells, where it is used for energy. Insulin also helps the body to store extra glucose and fat for later use.

The symptoms of diabetes are caused by high blood glucose. People with diabetes may also have high blood-fat levels (cholesterol and triglycerides) Higher than normal blood-

Augmentative communication offers patients a voice

By GARY SHANKS
Staff Writer

Local therapists received instruction in the new field of electronic communication for people who cannot speak.

Therapists at the Dora Roberts Rehabilitation Center had an opportunity to learn about the new "augmentative communication" technology.

Tracy Custer, a field representative for Prentke-Romich Co., spent about four hours Wednesday showing therapists how the various devices can allow those who find speech impossible, a method of communication, Custer said. "Because the field is so new, there are a lot of therapists out there with no experience in augmentative and alternative communication devices."

Custer demonstrated variations of two basic types of alternative communication devices.

The simpler of the two devices can be programmed with recorded responses. The device can incorporate buttons that correspond to four, eight or 36 responses. These simple devices are often used to allow a patient to ask for basic needs soon after losing the ability to speak, said Crystal Henry, a speech pathologist with the center.

Using the device, a stroke victim or surgical patient who has lost the ability to speak, can push a button marked with a word or symbol and the device will then repeat a pre-recorded message.

As the device is easy to use, patients with thinking difficulties can make use of the technology, Custer said.

The more complex device uses considerable computer power to generate speech. A variety of software can be used that allows patients to program the machine with numerous symbols that stand for basic phrases and parts of speech. Uncommon words and phrases can be typed in normally on a keyboard.

A computer generated voice then flows from the machine. With practice, the non-speaking user can approximate the rate of normal communication in his speech.

Although the center has not purchased the devices, which are particularly useful for those with cerebral palsy, Henry hopes that the center will soon be able to provide the devices.

"I'm trying to educate the community that this technology exists," she said.

Tracy Custer, a field representative for Prentke-Romich Co., demonstrates the use of an augmentative communication device, which speaks for those who have lost the ability to do so on their own. Custer demonstrated the devices to health care professionals at the Dora Roberts Rehabilitation Center and the Veterans Administration Medical Center.

Fossil skulls challenge African origin theory

NEW YORK (AP) — Two fossil skulls found in China suggest that modern humans evolved from ancestors from many places — not just Africa, scientists said today.

"It seems as if all people throughout the world that was populated at that time made a contribution to the evolution of modern humans," said co-author Dennis Etlar.

Under this hypothesis, modern humans arose from interbreeding among ancestors from Africa, Asia, the Near East and possibly Europe, he said. It is not clear where this mixing produced the first modern humans, he said.

Two scientists who believe modern humans came from African ancestors said the new find did not change their minds.

But one of them, Chris Stringer, head of the human origins group at the Natural History Museum in London, said the newfound skulls are important. They are the most complete specimens yet from China that show the human ancestor called Homo erectus evolving into a more advanced species, he said.

The fossil find is reported in today's issue of the journal Nature by Li Tianyuan of the Hubei Institute of Archaeology in Wuhan, China, and Etlar, a doctoral candidate in paleo-anthropology at the University of California at Berkeley.

The skulls appear to be at least 350,000 years old by preliminary dating, and from male adults, Etlar said in a telephone interview. They were found in 1989 and 1990 in Yunxian, in the Hubei province of central China.

The researchers said the skulls came from Homo erectus, a creature that appeared at least 1.7 million years ago and evolved several hundred thousand years ago into what some scientists call "archaic Homo sapiens."

Modern Homo sapiens, or people, appeared at least about 100,000 years ago.

The Chinese skulls contain some features associated with Homo erectus and others linked to Homo sapiens, the researchers reported. For example, in traits reflecting Homo erectus, the back of the head appears pulled out into almost a "V" shape when seen in profile, and the base of the skull is broad.

But the face appears more like modern Homo sapiens, being flatter and having higher cheekbones in comparison to creatures living in Africa or Europe at the same time, Etlar said.

Some ancient skulls from Africa and Europe show relatively primitive faces coupled with more advanced development of

Two skulls of Homo erectus males believed to be at least 350,000 years old are shown in these photos provided by the University of California. Researchers who discovered the skulls in China say the find challenges the idea that modern humans evolved just from African ancestors, or a single group, but rather suggests humans arose from interbreeding among ancestors from Africa, Asia, the Near East and Europe.

part of the skull called the brain case, Etlar said.

The Chinese finding shows Asia also had such transitional creatures during the middle Pleistocene, which ranged from about 750,000 years ago to about 140,000 years or so ago, he said.

Modern humans probably arose from the genetic mixing that occurred as their ancestors from various areas mingled, he said.

An anthropologist who favors the African origin theory, Eric Delson of Lehman College of the City University of New York, disagreed with Etlar's analysis. He said African and European fossil skulls from about 500,000 years ago had already lost the erectus-like back of the head found in the Chinese skulls.

That suggests these Western populations were closer to the origins of both Neanderthals and modern humans, with the latter probably arising in Africa, he said.

Stringer said analysis of African fossil skulls leads him to believe Africa was the central source for modern humans, although some genes from elsewhere may have played a role. It seems clear that Europe was not a central source, he said.

The evidence so far for an exclusive African origin "is not conclusive," he said. "It's a matter of probability, not certainty."

Islands

Takahashi views his innovative floating island as an ocean version of the space station. "At $150 million," he says, "it would be a bargain compared to the multibillion-dollar space station and would open a frontier that's a lot more accessible."

One of the most unusual floating islands under consideration would serve as a port of call for a virtual city aboard a ship. Scheduled for launch in 1995, the 250,000-ton cruise ship Phoenix World City, the largest ever built, would carry 6,200 passengers and 1,800 crew housed in three deck structures that look like floating condominiums.

"Our engineers are already looking ahead at floating islands," says World City Corp. chairman John S. Rogers, coordinator of the project. "The first would probably be a self-contained resort at sea for our cruise passengers."

Day cruisers head home to dock inside their mother ship, the Phoenix World City, shown in an artist's concept. The behemoth would carry 8,000 people, a virtual shipboard city, a prospective floating island would serve as a resort destination for the ship.

Goose glut angers folks and puzzles scientists

MONTEZUMA, N.Y. (AP) — There are hands on nature's clock.

Buds burst in the spring; thunderhead clouds mass in summer; frost forms in autumn; snow falls in winter. And Canada geese have heralded not one but two seasons with their cacophonous flights, north in spring and south in fall, for as long as there have been people around to record their movements.

Until now, Scientists say many of their presumptions about Canada geese have been disturbed by a new study of the migratory patterns of one of North America's most familiar and majestic birds.

Geese that should be nesting in the subarctic expanses of northern Quebec are laying eggs in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and other northern states. Flocks that should be wintering in the Carolinas are staying in the colder Northeast. Some geese are living their entire lives within a few miles of where they hatched, apparently oblivious to migratory instincts.

"We know for sure already that the movements of geese are much more complex than 'Every fall they fly south, every spring they fly back north,'" said Wesley Stiles, a senior wildlife biologist with the New York state Department of Environmental Conservation.

A picture of the Canada geese population in eastern North America is just starting to emerge in this, the second of a six-year study coordinated by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Biologists in 16 states and several Canadian provinces are banding geese and searching for birds banded in other areas in an effort to identify the major currents in the flow of geese across the eastern half of the continent.

One early discovery intrigues Jay Hestbeck, a biologist with the Fish and Wildlife Service and the state of Massachusetts who is coordinating the study. A flock that scientists had presumed to be non-migrating residents of upstate New York was found instead to be breeding in New York and wintering in North Carolina.

Scientists are calling such geese "resident migrants" — birds that heed the genetic call of migration while retaining some non-migratory tendencies.

This much is known: Communities up and down the Eastern Seaboard are complaining about a glut of Canada geese. Droppings from the birds are fouling reservoirs, ponds, parks and golf course fairways; aggressive parent geese are menacing people who stray too close to nesting areas.

Skin patches popular, useful for smokers

NEW YORK (AP) — Smokers who want to quit are snapping up — and sticking on — nicotine-bearing skin patches that help them kick the habit.

The surprisingly high demand is for a product that leads to long-term success only about one-third of the time. But smoking experts say even that quit rate is encouraging for an addiction that's so hard to break.

The patches, stuck onto the skin by adhesive, release controlled amounts of nicotine into the smoker's bloodstream. That reduces tobacco craving and other withdrawal symptoms, allowing the smoker to quit cigarettes cold-turkey and to concentrate on how to stay abstinent when patch therapy ends.

Two of the three patch brands now on the market are intended to wean ex-smokers off nicotine by providing reduced dosages later in therapy.

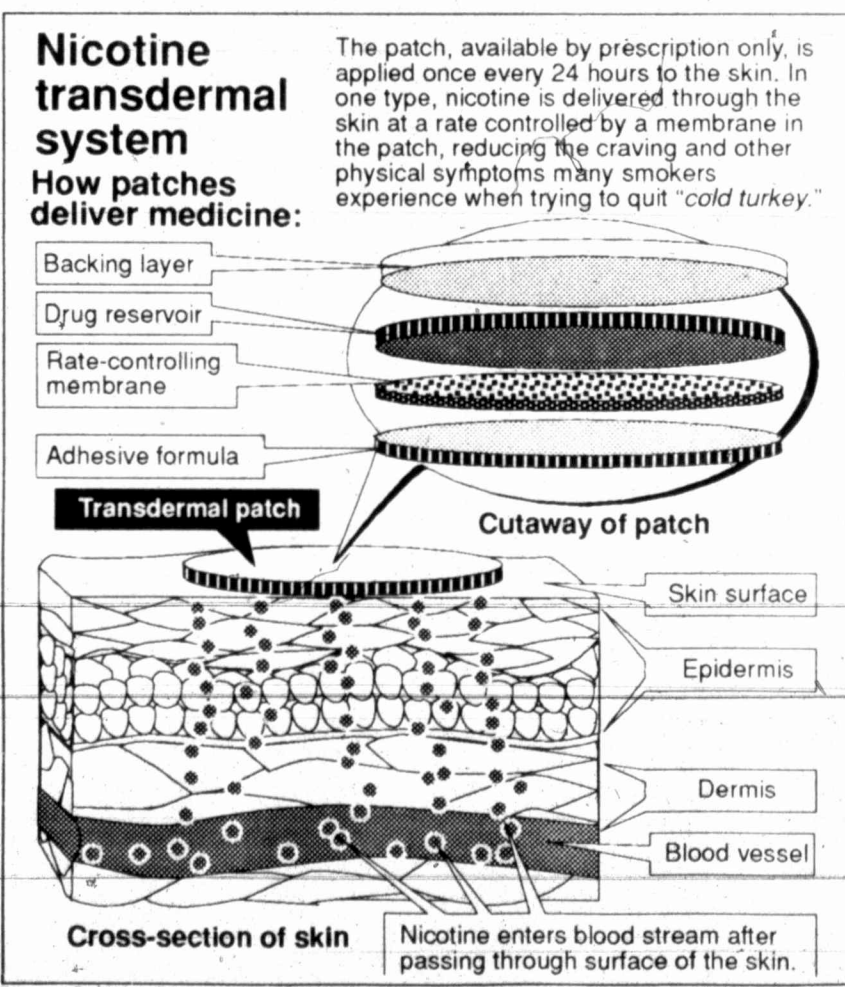

The patches, which require a doctor's prescription, are replaced daily. Current brands include one type to be used for six to eight weeks, costing around $200 for the course of therapy, with the others recommended for 10 weeks to 12 weeks at a cost of around $250 to $350, patch companies say.

While not all health insurance plans cover nicotine patch therapy, experts say smokers should consider the patch cost in light of what they would otherwise spend on cigarettes.

Patches went on the market last December and have earned more than $350 million for patch companies so far. Analysts call the initial sales impressive, and James Keeney of Mabon Securities in Boston projected that in 1995, annual domestic patch sales could reach $1 billion.

Pharmacists and pharmaceutical distributors report such high demand that "they are not able to keep the patches on the shelves," said analyst Jeffrey Kraws at Alex Brown and Sons in New York. "The demand has certainly far exceeded analyst's projections early on," he said.

Experts said that while the patches help smokers give up tobacco, the effort to quit still requires work. And even so, they said, only one-third will remain abstinent for at least a year.

Shiffman and other experts called the patch an improvement over nicotine gum, mainly because it is easier to use correctly. "The patch has the virtue of being very easy, you just slap one on in the morning," Shiffman said.

The patch should be only one part of the smoker's habit-kicking regimen, so the patches come with such aids as booklets, audiotapes, referrals to stop-smoking programs and access to telephone counseling. The idea is to change behavior by getting at the psychological roots of smoking addiction.

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to thank you for your article printed in the Las Vegas Review-Journal about the woman with twin boys, age 20, who still wet the bed; then a chiropractor prescribed DDVAP, which put an end to their bed-wetting.

Dear Abby

I immediately called my chiropractor to ask about it, and he said in Nevada they are not allowed to write prescriptions, so I called my physician and got an OK for same.

My son, who is a 42-year-old paraplegic, was taking Daron, which worked well for him, but recently they stopped making that medication. He tried the DDVAP nasal spray, and it has worked every night this past month. It's not cheap, but it's well worth it.

I am very grateful to you, Abby, and have probably learned more in my 66 years from reading your columns than from any book or school. Thanks again, and the very best to you. —SHIRLEY HARRIS DEAR SHIRLEY: Don't thank me. That's what I'm here for. All

DEAR ABBY: How much shame, and how many adult diapers were senior citizens supposed to endure, before the federal government stepped in to alleviate the growing problem of incontinence? Well, the day has finally arrived, much to the relief of the more than 10 million Americans who suffer from that disorder.

A government-sponsored panel of medical experts has announced new guidelines for detecting and treating urinary incontinence — a condition they say can be significantly improved or cured in 80 percent of the cases. The group said that sufferers often ignore symptoms, and end up depending on absorbent materials without seeking any medical help.

The guidelines the government has set provide important information to patients on various treatments for the ailment. But what may be most important in curbing incontinence is the role of the physician. He/she needs to ask the patient about the condition routinely and aggressively, and then run tests to determine the cause. Educating both the patient and the doctor is a one-two punch that should virtually knock out this highly stigmatized disorder.

The guidelines are in a booklet, "Urinary Incontinence in Adults," which is available free of charge. Write to P.O. Box 8547, Silver Spring, Md. 20907-8547. (Allow six to eight weeks for a response.) —MAURICE SANDLER, M.D., NORTHERN CALIFORNIA INCONTINENCE CENTER, SAN PABLO
