Public input will be heard on the topics in the following order: The redistricting proposal calling for six, single-member districts for electing council members; funding the Beals Creek project regarding flooding on the city's West End; turning over land to abutting property owners along alleys in the Edward Heights Addition and another 15-foot-by-150-foot tract in section six; the annexation of land in the East Highland Addition.

Following the public hearings, the council will consider action on the topics.

Mayors

More specifics
sought on ideas

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — Democratic mayors are welcoming Bill Clinton's new jobs and economic investment program but want more specifics on what it means for inner cities.

"I'm going to look at it as objectively as we can," said Boston's Democratic Mayor Ray Flynn, president of the mayors' group. "What's good here for the economy of the country is also good politics."

Clinton was addressing the bipartisan U.S. Conference of Mayors today at its annual summer meeting, after first meeting in private with Democratic mayors.

Clinton unveiled an economic investment plan he said will spend $50 billion a year for four years, raising taxes on the rich to finance new jobs, education and health programs.

Flynn said Sunday that Clinton told him $20 billion of that annual amount would go into a jobs program, one of the Conference of Mayors' priorities. But Flynn said he wanted Clinton to spell out how much of that would go directly to cities for urban uses.

"It's exactly what we've been pushing," Flynn said. "That would create hundreds of thousands of new private sector jobs."

Atlanta Mayor Maynard Jackson, a strong Clinton supporter, called it "a dynamic, aggressive and progressive plan that meets the needs of cities." He said the $20-billion portion for infrastructure would create jobs in cities.

"This plan, in my opinion, shows that he has been listening," Jackson said. "If this program is not welcomed by the mayors, I cannot imagine what will be."

Flynn said the proposal leaves Clinton with "a clear field" for the urban vote. But Flynn has continued to withhold a presidential endorsement.

The Boston mayor shocked the Clinton campaign earlier this month by leading a delegation of mayors to meet with independent Ross Perot, and Flynn has sought to use the Perot candidacy to pressure Clinton and President Bush to address the mayors' urban agenda.

Even some mayors backing Clinton say Perot adds an element of uncertainty that may force the campaign into social issues and the inner-city problems of joblessness, crime, poverty and despair.

"I think everybody enjoys Perot, because he's forcing more discussion on the issues, urban issues," said Mayor Paul Soglin of Madison, Wis., a liberal who is backing Clinton. "He's adding something to the race."

After a second meeting with Perot on Saturday, Flynn said in an interview: "I've been around this business (politics) for 25 years. I'm not exactly naive. I know a con man when I see one, and this ain't no con man."

Bush tests anti-Perot lines

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush is test-marketing some political attack lines against Ross Perot, suggesting that the Texas billionaire is not temperamentally suited for the White House and that it's too much of a gamble to put the country in his hands.

Frustrated by Perot's dominance in the polls, Bush also is challenging his undeclared rival to stop talking in generalities and spell out how he would cure the nation's problems.

And, Bush is trying to diminish Perot's stature as a successful businessman. The president says he, too, has been an entrepreneur and built a successful oil company.

The president's attacks are still masked by his refusal to deal with Perot by name. Bush says he'll wait until August — when the Republican National Convention is staged — before taking on his opponents directly. However, recent comments by Bush suggest the outlines of his strategy.

Bush campaign strategists, meanwhile, say that Perot appears to have peaked in popularity. They expect Bush will benefit politically by his summit with Russian President Boris Yeltsin and the breakthrough pact they signed to cut nuclear arms.

The betting in the Bush camp is that voters will tire of Perot and that he'll tumble long before the election.

However, in private strategy meetings in California last week, Bush's supporters expressed alarm about Perot and warned the president not to ignore him any longer.

So far, though, Bush refuses to criticize Perot by name, although it's obvious whom he's talking about. And if there's any doubt, White House aides are happy to confirm which attack lines apply to Perot and which to Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, the expected Democratic nominee.

It's clear that Bush strategists believe that one thing on the president's side is the issue of leadership.

In a fiery speech in Dallas on Saturday, Bush said the next president will be charged with setting the world's agenda for the next 40 years.

"It means solving big problems with a level head, with tolerance and good judgment. Being president is a demanding job. And a president must be temperamentally suited for the job. And I have been tested by fire and I am the right man for that job," Bush thundered.

He said there is "too much at stake, as we say here, to buy a pig in a poke."

Bush's line reinforced an attack theme sounded earlier by his campaign press secretary, Torie Clarke, that Perot is "scary" — that voters can't be sure what he'll do under demanding circumstances.

High court strikes down hate crimes laws

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court ruled today that states and cities may not outlaw cross burning and similar "hate crimes."

The justices unanimously struck down a St. Paul, Minn., ordinance banning cross burning, swastika displays and other expressions of racial supremacy and bias. The court said the local law violated free-speech rights.

The ruling casts doubt on numerous such laws nationwide. The closely watched case split civil rights groups, who favor a crackdown on so-called hate crimes, and civil libertarians, who warn of a growing intolerance for unpopular or offensive speech.

Justice Antonin Scalia, writing for the court, said the St. Paul ordinance seeks to ban expression based on content.

"St. Paul has not singled out an especially offensive mode of expression. It has not, for example, selected for prohibition only those fighting words that communicate ideas in a threatening (as opposed to a merely obnoxious) manner," he said.

"Rather, it has proscribed fighting words of whatever manner that communicate messages of racial, gender or religious intolerance. Selectivity of this sort creates the possibility that the city is seeking to handicap the expression of particular ideas."

Scalia read from the bench for five minutes from his opinion, an unusually long time that underscored the significance of the ruling.

Joining Scalia's opinion in full were Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Anthony M. Kennedy, David Souter and Clarence Thomas.

But in a separate concurring opinion, Justice Byron R. White said the five-member majority departed dangerously from the court's longstanding approach to protecting freedom of expression.

"The court has disregarded... principles of First Amendment law without providing a coherent replacement theory," White said, in an opinion joined in its entirety by Justices Sandra Day O'Connor and Harry A. Blackmun and in large part by Justice John Paul Stevens.

White said today's ruling, while an apparent victory for freedom of speech, could have the opposite effect, depending on how the opinion is interpreted.

"I understand the court to have ruled that St. Paul may constitutionally prohibit expression that by its very utterance causes anger, alarm or resentment," White said. "The mere fact that expressive activity causes hurt feelings, offense or resentment does not render the expression unprotected" by the Constitution.

The danger is that the ruling might let states and communities enact broader bans than St. Paul's, White said.

Over the past decade, nearly all states have passed laws calling for special punishment for racists and bigots who commit crimes. Some communities, like St. Paul, have gone beyond that and made the display of prejudice itself a crime.

Advocates say the laws are needed to control an upsurge of crimes motivated by hatred for blacks, Jews, Asians, homosexuals, other minorities and women.

According to the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, only Utah, Wyoming, Nebraska and Alaska lack some form of hate-crime law.

Groups such as the American Civil Liberties Union say the laws pose a threat to free speech and seek to impose "politically correct" expression on all. Such laws could be used to stifle dissent and criticism of public officials, they say.

The St. Paul ordinance was upheld unanimously by the Minnesota Supreme Court last year.

The state court said the local law could be applied narrowly to ban only

Some doctors want fees posted in office

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Some members of the American Medical Association want doctors to post their fees in the waiting room so patients can do some comparison shopping.

Competitive pricing in all other businesses results in lower costs, delegates from New England say in a resolution up for consideration at the AMA's annual meeting, which began Sunday.

"If a patient wants to know what the doctor's fee is, he or she has every right to know," said Dr. Herbert Rakatansky, a gastroenterologist from Providence, R.I.

Many patients don't learn a doctor's fees until after they've walked in the examining room or emergency room door. And hospital billing is a quagmire of cost-shifting and third-party-payer contracts.

The proposal will be considered by the AMA's 434-member House of Delegates sometime during the policy-making meeting, which runs through Thursday.

Many patients don't learn a doctor's fees until after they've walked in the examining room or emergency room door. And hospital billing is a quagmire of cost-shifting and third-party-payer contracts.

The resolution wouldn't be binding on the AMA's 292,000 members, but it would carry the influence of the nation's largest organization of doctors.

The resolution's sponsors note that health-care costs continue to rise, consuming $650 billion annually, or 12.5 percent of the gross national product.

They say consumers need to take more responsibility for the cost of medical care, and doctors need to be more aware of the cost of services.

The resolution says the AMA should encourage the posting of prices by doctors, hospitals, laboratories, pharmacists, medical equipment suppliers and related professionals.

Dr. Marian C. Craighill, an alternate delegate from Massachusetts, said some doctors object to the proposal. "People on the delegation were concerned that this is denigrating the doctor-patient relationship," she said.

Michael Donio, director of projects for the People's Medical Society, a non-profit consumer group, said his organization urged the posting of prices nine years ago.

"You wouldn't believe the hue and cry that went up from medical professionals," he said from the society's Allentown, Pa., headquarters. "They said, 'What are you trying to do?' Now, suddenly, they're entertaining the idea." Rakatansky said that the resolution could have a limited effect, since many fees are negotiated in advance by health maintenance organizations or insurance companies.

Craighill said cost consciousness is part of the goal, regardless of who is paying. "It's time that we acknowledge the reality of cost in the health care setting," she said.

On Sunday, U.S. Surgeon General Dr. Antonia Novello, AMA leaders and children marked the start of the AMA meeting by parading downtown to protest the use of the cartoon figure Joe Camel to advertise Camel cigarettes.

The two-mile parade featured "Dump the Hump" placards. Among anti-smoking proposals to be considered during the meeting is a recommendation for curbs on youth-oriented tobacco advertising.

"Every day 3,000 children pick up their first cigarette because advertising says it's cool — smoke and you'll be popular," said the incoming AMA president, Dr. John L. Chese, a family practitioner.

The ANC postpones multiparty talks today

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The African National Congress canceled today's round of black-white political talks, dealing another serious blow to the crumbling process of negotiating a power-sharing agreement.

Also, President F.W. de Klerk cut short a trip to Spain to return home and deal with the growing crisis. He had departed South Africa on Sunday.

Foreign Minister Pik Botha, the country's acting leader in de Klerk's absence, said the government was seeking an urgent meeting with the ANC to patch up worsening relations.

Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu said that unless the government moved swiftly to stop political violence, South Africa should be expelled from next month's Olympic Games — its first Olympics after being banned for 32 years.

"We cannot (go) with the country in a state of national mourning for our dead and while we are caught up in a deepening political crisis," the Nobel Peace Prize winner said in Cape Town.

ANC leader Nelson Mandela broke off direct discussions with the white government on Sunday, accusing de Klerk's government of responsibility for a massacre in a black township last week that left more than 40 dead.

Mandela said the ANC would remain part of the multiparty discussions, but the group today pulled out of the talks at the last minute. Other groups — 19 parties are involved — agreed to a postponement, and no new date was announced.

Leaders of the ANC, the country's leading black group, are to meet Tuesday to decide whether to press ahead with negotiations or focus their efforts on a national protest campaign launched last week.

The multiparty talks deadlocked in May when the government and the ANC could not agree on how to write a new constitution.

Group protests in advance of election announcement

MANILA, Philippines — Police used bullets, tear gas and nightsticks today to disperse thousands of demonstrators who urged the military and police to overthrow the government.

No casualty figures were immediately available; at least two people were arrested.

It was unclear whether the demonstration by a group calling itself the "Reserved Manpower of Good Wisdom for All Nations" was part of a broader conspiracy. Police have been monitoring dissidents in advance of the proclamation today of Fidel Ramos as the official victor in the May 11 presidential election.

The previously unknown group, which identified itself in English on T-shirts and handbills, claimed without explanation that the Philippines is "the real Israel in the Orient." Its handbills urged police and soldiers "to recover the people power that has been taken away from them by politicians and citizens in power now."

"People power" was the slogan of the 1986 uprising that toppled President Ferdinand Marcos and installed Corazon Aquino as president.

Two uniformed policemen told ABS-CBN television they joined today's demonstration because politicians were betraying the constitution. But other demonstrators said they came because the leader of the rally, a part-time radio commentator, promised them jobs building a temple near the U.S. San Subic Bay naval base.

Police beat protesters with nightsticks and dragged away several when the group refused to disperse. Some officers fired pistols in the air as they chased protesters along sidewalks.

New law will require using rubber in roads

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — For nearly a century, American drivers have put the rubber to the road. Now states are being told to put the rubber in the roads.

Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., the leading congressional rubber-road advocate, says Americans each year add about 250 million scrap tires to dumps throughout the country, providing homes for mosquitoes and rats. The tires often catch fire and burn for weeks or months.

There are an estimated 3 billion worn out, scrap tires and Chafee wants to recycle them by including them in the asphalt used for roads. That idea was inserted into the massive, six-year surface transportation bill that became law last year.

Under its terms, states will be required later this decade to include ground-up or melted rubber from millions of those scrap tires in the asphalt they lay or lose up to 20 percent of their federal highway dollars.

Advocates said rubber asphalt takes a long step toward solving a persistent environmental problem by consuming at least 70 million scrap tires a year.

At the same time, they contend, it will produce roads that are longer lasting, more resilient, less apt to crack, less liable to produce potholes and, therefore, far less costly to maintain.

But representatives of the asphalt industry call for a cautious, "go-slow approach."

They maintain that rubber roads will be far more costly to build and may pose possible hazards to the workers who have to use the rubberized material.

Some critics call rubber asphalt "trashphalt" and raise the spectre that environmental advocates might try to bury the nation's entire solid waste problem in the highways.

"The asphalt industry is very much opposed to the use of these products," says Gordon P. MacDougal, Washington spokesman for the Asphalt Rubber Producers Group, which is moving its headquarters from Phoenix to Washington to combat efforts to repeal or water down the new law.

"It's a dollars and cents issue," MacDougal said in an interview. "We are talking about substantial dollars flowing from conventional asphalt groups. The battle is going to become more heated as we get closer and closer to the deadline, no question."

George Goggin, communications director for the National Asphalt Pavement Association, says his group is not trying to kill or gut the rubber-road provision.

But he questions whether rubber asphalt can be totally recycled as is asphalt without rubber as an added ingredient.

"Everyone sees this as a heaven-sent opportunity to get rid of a lot of tires; but it may not necessarily be the answer," he said.

Goggin said that because the processes for turning scrap tires into ground-up crumb rubber or melting them are covered by patents, the royalties would increase the cost of pavement by 131 percent.

"It's a real economic problem that a lot of communities wouldn't welcome," he said.

Under the terms of the law, states must phase in the use of recycled rubber in 5 percent annual installments beginning Oct. 1, 1994.

City expecting influx of women seeking abortions

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Longtime abortion rights workers remember what it was like in the years shortly after New York legalized abortion in 1970.

"Clubs would send cars and vans to airports to meet women and take them for safe, no-guilt trip abortions, and then act as a recovery period, they made a plane home," said Dolly Rothstein of the Westchester Coalition for Legal Abortions.

Preparations are under way for a similar influx of out-of-state women seeking abortions if the U.S. Supreme Court in the coming weeks upholds a restrictive Pennsylvania law or goes further and reverses the 1973 ruling Roe vs. Wade in a move that would free states to enforce laws against abortion.

Abortion clinics in New York plan to add to their staffs, and groups are preparing to help women and teenagers from Pennsylvania.

Alexander Sanger, president of Planned Parenthood Inc. of New York City, said an abortion-training program will begin this summer to medical residents to help staff his organization's three clinics.

"We envision an increased patient load," he said. "I expect it will be many of women who for some reason can't tell their husbands they're pregnant."

Kite soars to Open win

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Playing fearlessly through gale-force winds, Tom Kite won the 92nd U.S. Open on Sunday and once and for all put to rest all the nagging doubts about why he had never won a major championship in his 21-year career.

"It bugged the living daylights out of me," Kite said. "I really felt good about Tom Kite and the career and the family and everything I have going for me — I am so fortunate — and it was the only thing most people wanted to talk about. 'You've done all these other things, but when are you going to do this?' It was like the other things didn't matter."

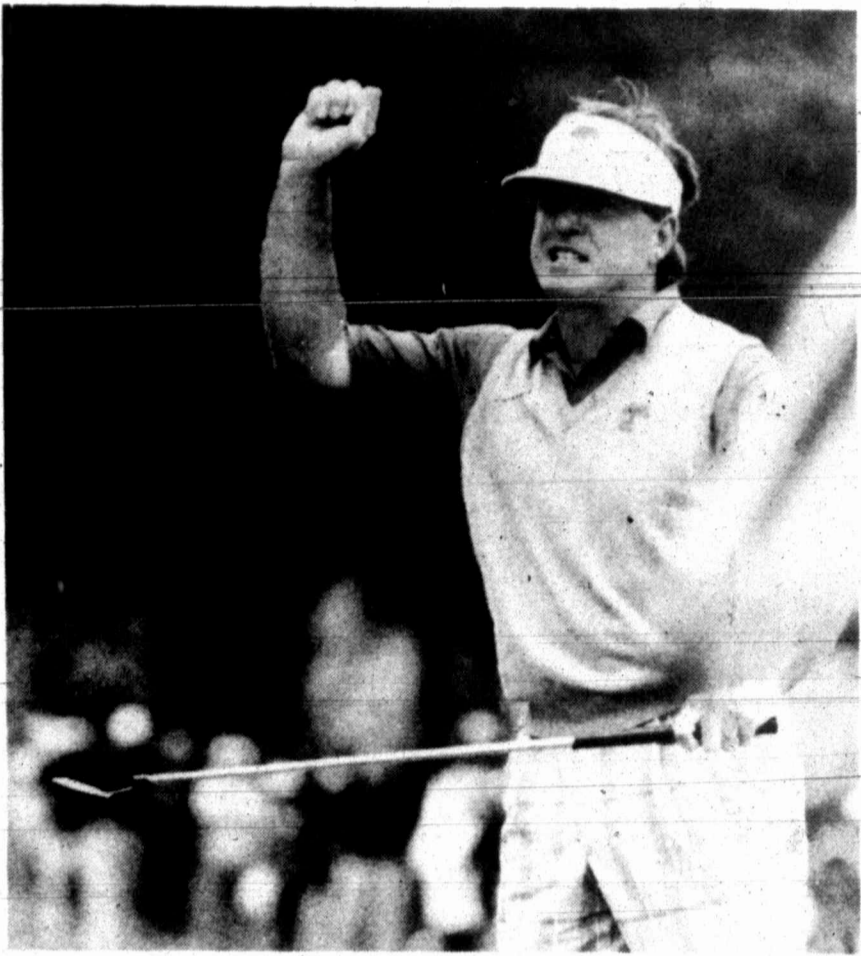

Like being golf's all-time leading money winner. Like winning 16 PGA Tour events, including the Tournament of Champions twice and The Players Championship. Like twice being the PGA Tour's leading money winner. Like winning the tour's Rookie of the Year Award and two Vardon Cups for the tour's lowest scoring average.

Until Sunday, Kite's career had a void — a major void. Kite came close, finishing second twice in the Masters (1983, 1986) and once in the British Open (1978) and leading in the final round three other times.

Kite led the 1984 Masters with seven holes to play, but hit his tee shot into Raes Creek on the par-3 12th hole, made double bogey and lost.

Kite led the 1985 British Open at Royal St. George with nine holes to play, but he pulled his tee shot down a bank on the 10th hole, made double bogey and lost.

Kite led the 1989 U.S. Open at championship.

Kite rapped in a 22-foot putt for birdie on the sixth. After pulling his tee shot 20 yards into the rough on the short par-3 seventh hole, Kite holed his second shot, stirring memories of Tom Watson's chip-in on the 17th hole in 1982.

"The immediate thought is, 'Yeah, here we go. Tom Watson did it.' But the conditions were quite a bit different," Kite said. "He only had one hole to go and I had the whole course left. The initial thought is to want to jump around and run all over the green.

"While it turned out to be a very big shot, there were so many more big shots left to play."

And Kite played them.

He escaped with a bogey on the ninth hole after pushing his second shot into the deep rough short of the green. On the par-3 12th, he played a 4-iron to the fat part of the green 35 feet to the right of the pin, and holed the putt for birdie. On the par-5 14th, he aggressively played a 3-wood short of the bunker in front of the green, lofted a pitch shot within two feet and made the putt for another birdie.

That gave him enough of a cushion to make bogeys on 16 and 17 before three perfect shots put him on the 18th green.

"I'm really proud of the job that I did of keeping the negative thoughts out of my head," Kite said. "But I won't kid you, they pop in there every now and then. ... It's so easy to get racing ahead or thinking about what could happen or what might happen or what did happen a few years ago."

champion without a doubt.

After making a double bogey on the fourth hole that looked like the kind of disaster that undid him in the past, Kite played brilliantly under the most severe conditions ever seen in an Open

Oak Hills with 13 holes to play. On the sixth hole he pushed his tee shot into a creek, made triple bogey and lost.

On this final round, while almost every other leader was being blown off his game, Kite played like a

Joyner-Kersey cruises to heptathlon victory

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Despite her worst performance in the heptathlon since 1985, Jackie Joyner-Kersey still walked away with the top spot in the U.S. Track and Field Trials.

"It's been a really tough two days," Joyner-Kersey said Sunday. "I'm just glad it's over with. I just wanted to finish."

Joyner-Kersey — the world-record holder, the 1988 Olympic champion and the 1984 silver medalist in the heptathlon, finished with 6,695 points. Cindy Greiner was second with 6,223 and Kimberly Carter was third with 6,200.

The heptathlon was one of seven finals at the trials.

Butch Reynolds was to have run in the men's 400 meters on Sunday, armed with a ruling from the United States Supreme Court, but the event was postponed until Tuesday while the International Amateur Athletic Federation decides whether to waive its "contamination" rule.

The men's 400-meter hurdles, minus Edwin Moses for the first time since 1976, was won by Kevin Young in 47.89 seconds.

Young and the two other qualifiers, David Patrick (48.01) and McClinton Neal (48.52), had the three fastest times in the world this year.

Those results also gave the U.S. a husband and wife team in the 400-meter hurdles. Patrick's wife, Sandra Farmer-Patrick, won the women's event with a 53.62. Tonja Buford took second at 54.75, and Janelle Vickers was third at 54.80.

The Patricks are the first married couple to represent America in the Games since Harold Connolly and Olga Fikotova in 1960. Neither Connolly or Fikotova won a medal then, but both took in 1956, when Fikotova represented Czechoslovakia.

The other world-leading performances were by Michael Conley, who leaped 58 feet, one-quarter inch in the triple jump, and Joetta Clark with 1:58.47 in the women's 800 meters.

Despite Conley's performance, he did not finish first in the triple jump.

Charlie Simpkins won it with a wind-aided 58-7/8, his best jump since 1985. In 1990 and 1991, the oft-injured Simpkins had not even jumped 55 feet.

In Sunday's other finals, Tom Pukstys won the javelin at 263 feet, 5 inches, a meet record, and Tim Bright won the pole vault at 19-1/4. Bright won on fewer misses over Dave Volz and Kory Tarpenning, who cleared the same height.

The third-place finisher in the javelin, Brian Crouser, had been suspended for two years for failing to report for out-of-competition drug testing in March 1991. He was reinstated last January.

Reynolds, the world record holder in the 400, was pleased with the IAAF's decision to poll its members on the contamination rule. Reynolds has been fighting for reinstatement since August 1990, when he was banned for testing positive for steroids after a meet in Monte Carlo. He has steadfastly maintained his innocence.

"I feel a great deal of relief," Reynolds said after the IAAF's decision. "I can smile now."

TAC executive director Ollan Cassell, also an IAAF vice president, was confident the IAAF would vote for waiving the rule. If it is not waived, Reynolds said he still would compete.

"There's no way I'll change my mind now," he said.

Neither will 30 of the other 31 runners in the field who voted Saturday not to run against Reynolds for fear of being banned.

Downing's hit leads Rangers win

ARLINGTON (AP) — Brian Downing's two-run single capped a three-run rally in the sixth inning against a wild Roger Clemens, and the Texas Rangers beat the Boston Red Sox 3-2 Sunday night for a three-game sweep.

Todd Burns (2-0) overcame a shaky start and gave up two runs on seven hits in 7 1/3 innings. He walked three and struck out four. Jeff Russell got the last five outs for his 19th save.

Clemens (9-5) failed to join the Rangers' Kevin Brown. Seattle's Dave Fleming and Atlanta's Tom Glavine for the most victories in the majors.

Astros complete sweep of Dodgers

HOUSTON (AP) — Tommy Lasorda thought it was time for a closer look. The Dodgers manager sure didn't like what he saw.

The Dodgers lost their 10th consecutive game Sunday, matching the club record since moving to Los Angeles in 1958, as Butch Henry and Doug Jones combined on a seven-hitter in Houston's 2-0 victory at the Astrodome.

Lasorda tried to wake up the slumbering offense by taking over the third-base coaching duties. But only one Dodger made it to third in the game.

"I'm going to stay there another day or so to see if I could change things around," Lasorda said. "But anyway you look at it, it's tough to accept. This is just unbelievable to me that we can't score runs."

Henry (2-6) won for the first time since May 25. He left with two outs in the eighth after walking Brett Butler. Jones finished for his 16th save, allowing one hit.

Pete Incaviglia hit a two-run homer in the sixth off Kevin Gross (3-7).

Wimbledon starts under cloudy skies

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — And on the first day, they played tennis.

Wimbledon started right on schedule today, despite menacing clouds hovering over the All England Club. Nicklas Kulti won the first point of the tournament at a few minutes past noon.

It was a much better start to the tournament than last year, when the first day was washed out and only 28 matches could be completed in the opening two days.

The big question at Wimbledon this year is whether there will be a Florida follow-up to the Deutscher double.

A year after German compatriots Michael Stich and Steffi Graf won matching Wimbledon titles, Floridians Jim Courier and Monica Seles enter this year's tournament on top of the tennis world.

Each is halfway toward a Grand Slam, having swept the Australian and French titles.

But the quirky grass of the All England Club has a way of making 'chumps out of champs, and neither Courier nor Seles has ever advanced past the quarterfinals at Wimbledon.

"I think Jim is more the darkhorse on grass," fifth-seeded Pete Sampras said. "I think he might make the quarters or even the semis. But obviously he's confident, and he might just blow everyone off court."

The top six men's seeds were scheduled to play today, with defending champion Stich — seeded third this year — opening on Centre Court against clay-court specialist Stefano Pescosolido.

Courier was to face hard-serving Markus Zoenke and second-seeded Stefan Edberg was to play American Steve Bryan, a lucky loser in the qualifying. Three-time champion Boris Becker, seeded fourth, was set to play Omar Camporese.

Sampras, Ivan Lendl and Jimmy Connors, making his 20th appearance at Wimbledon, were also scheduled to play today.

Seles, who skipped Wimbledon last year and has not lost in a Grand Slam tournament since 1990, was the only one of the top four women's players scheduled to play today. Her first-round opponent was Jenny Byrne.

Even if Courier and Seles win at Wimbledon, leaving only the U.S. Open to complete the first male-female Grand Slam, could it really be considered a triumph for Florida?

Though Seles lives in Sarasota and wanted to be listed in official Wimbledon programs as being from Florida, she will be listed as a Yugoslav because that is the passport she carries.

Seles had sought to avoid the controversy surrounding her native land, which is at war with the breakaway republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina. The United Nations has imposed sports sanctions against Yugoslav teams, though those don't affect individual players such as Seles.

A diplomat from Croatia — another former Yugoslav republic — has threatened to demonstrate against Seles at Wimbledon.

Campaign plays major role in war on drugs

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The largest public service ad campaign in American history has completed its fifth year, employing everything from fried eggs to firearms to get its message across: Drug use is dimwitted, dangerous, deadly.

Has the message gotten through? Yes, says the Partnership for a Drug-Free America — and they have the numbers to prove it. Yes, agrees the national drug czar:

Has the message gotten through? Yes, says the Partnership for a Drug-Free America — and they have the numbers to prove it. Yes, agrees the national drug czar: "Drug use among adolescents is at its lowest since the mid-1970s. That's rather dramatic. . . . The Partnership for a Drug-Free America has played a major role there."

Bob Martinez

"Drug use among adolescents is at its lowest since the mid-1970s. That's rather dramatic. . . . The Partnership for a Drug-Free America has played a major role there," says Bob Martinez, head of the office of National Drug Control Policy.

No, say critics — the campaign is ineffective among minorities, the poor and in urban areas, where the nation's real drug problems fester.

There was no such debate in the early days of the partnership, says President Tom Hedrick. When the consortium of Madison Avenue advertisers set up shop, few took them seriously.

"I can't begin to tell you the disrespect. I mean, to quote somebody in the Department of Justice, 'What the . . . do you martini-drinking, white-shirted, advertising people know about drugs?'" Hedrick recalled.

As it turned out, quite a bit.

The partnership began its crusade with a unique mission: A group of supersalesmen, once dedicated to peddling as much Tide or as many Fords as possible, was now trying to "unsell" drugs.

Advertising agencies donated the talent of their top creative people, production costs were covered by contributors and media outlets donated the time or space to run the finished ads.

The first ad aired on April 13, 1987. It was the antithesis of typical Madison Avenue hype — instead of buy, buy, buy, it was don't buy, don't try, don't get high.

The images concocted by a dream team of advertising top guns soon stuck in America's consciousness, particularly its egg-frying "This is your brain on drugs" spot. The ad achieved such notoriety that egg farmers complained it damaged their product's image.

Another typical ad: a woman with a revolver stuffed up one nostril, with a one-word caption — "COCAINE."

The high-profile, mass media campaign has won an assortment of awards and attracted plenty of supporters. The New York Times, The Philadelphia Inquirer and USA Today have weighed in with editorials praising the partnership in recent months.

"They've had a tremendous impact on the popular culture of drug use, changing attitudes," said Martinez. "I give them a lot of credit for getting out the message — drug use is not the popular culture."

Dr. Mitchell Rosenthal, director of the Phoenix House drug treatment facility, hailed the partnership for its work in keeping the country focused on the drug issue.

"It has helped shift the mindset of America about the acceptability of drugs," said Rosenthal. "I think it has helped firm up the resolve of most mainstream Americans that drug abuse is not sensible . . . and that drug abuse is not a chic, 'in' thing to do.

Surveys conducted for the campaign by an independent polling group back those contentions. The studies found that 7.8 percent of BUTTON POINT, Northwest Territories — Its white coat and black bandit face marked it as a Siberian husky. It was a young dog, probably no more than a year old. But, sitting in the bitter cold on a small pressure ridge near the edge of an ice floe, it trembled like a palsied derelict.

"He's just wasted," said schoolteacher Carl Jorgensen, swinging his arms to keep warm. "He's lost and tired and scared. Just wasted."

Jorgensen and his friend Robert Swann, a social worker with frostbite scabs on his face, fed the animal a half-tin of corned beef.

"He probably got loose from some guy's dog team," said Jorgensen, who teaches at the Eskimo school in Pond Inlet, 43 miles across the frozen, treeless wilderness. "He'll never make it back to town on his own."

Soon two Eskimo hunters arrived on a snowmobile pulling a sled large enough to carry the dog. Jorgensen and Swann roared off on their snowmobiles. After a brief discussion, the hunters left too — without the animal. "He'll find his way back," one of the hunters assured a visitor.

The rough life of sled dogs in the eastern arctic concerns many of the non-Eskimo Canadians in the northern communities — and presents them with a conundrum. Many, including law-enforcement and humane-society officials, say they are reluctant to interfere with treatment they consider brutal.

"What somebody does with their dogs is generally considered their business up here," says Scott Bringloe, another teacher at the Pond Inlet school and the only non-native dog-team owner in the community of 1,050. Bringloe uses his dogs mostly to take his family and friends out for sled rides.

Eskimos use dog teams primarily to take out tourists, often for sport hunting of polar bears.

Wildlife authorities say that only a tiny minority of Eskimos use dogs for subsistence hunting. Snowmobiles, though more expensive to buy and operate, are far more efficient.

"In the old days, I'm sure the dogs were better treated because they relied on them more for survival," says Mitch Taylor, a government wildlife biologist. "Now there's guaranteed food, fuel, health care. A lot of people have lost the more traditional, caring attitude toward their dogs."

Treatment of sled dogs varies. But troublesome animals are commonly beaten, shot or abandoned far from home — the equivalent of a death sentence in the vast, empty North.

Bringloe tells of recently watching in horror as an Eskimo owner tied a husky to the back of his snowmobile with a 6-foot rope and dragged the dog over more than 200 yards of rough ice at top speed, about 25 mph.

"Apparently this dog had done something wrong or wasn't running up to snuff," Bringloe says. "The dog was hitting the high points on the ice, and that was about it."

The owner then unhooked the dog and ran over it with the 500-pound machine. The battered animal crawled under a snow bank, where it couldn't be reached, and later died.

Not all dogs are treated so cruelly in the eastern arctic. But even at best, their lives are typically cold, hard and, by non-Eskimo standards, brutal.

Cancer survivors lose breasts but not spirit

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Death Row Woman," who had breast cancer but did not want to have that breast removed. She said, "Death is better than surgery."
In 1945, I had tumors in my left breast, so my doctor did a total mastectomy. One week later, I went home to two children, 600 chickens, eight cows to milk twice a day and a house to keep. I learned how to sweep, cook, dress kids and drive a car with only my right arm. In short order, I was back in full swing with both arms.
When I finally had time to think about my lack of femininity, I asked my husband about it, and he said, "Hell, it's just a breast." And you know, there wasn't a bit of difference in our lives, except I didn't have the pain anymore.

Today, at 71, I've had more years without a breast than I had before. I do all my yard work, enjoy a birthday club, eat out with friends, go on bus tours, go to flea markets, love my great-grandchildren, and I'm still married to the same fellow who put it right: "Hell, it's just a breast!" — B.B. IN VICTORIA, TEXAS

DEAR B.B.: Hooray for you — and your husband, too. I have been inundated with letters from women who were eager to tell their stories. Read on:
DEAR ABBY: Four years ago, I also found a cancerous lump in my breast, and I chose to have a mastectomy because I had too much to live for. I was 36. Since that surgery, I've gotten remarried, had a second child (his third birthday is tomorrow), gotten my B.A. and my teaching credentials. If that surgery made me any less of a woman, I haven't noticed it. Neither has my husband! (By the way, I chose not to have reconstruction surgery; you'd be surprised what you can buy at Nordstrom's!)

It's great to be alive! You may use my name — ELIZABETH GAGE, FREMONT, CALIF.
DEAR ABBY: This is for "Death Row Woman." How wrong you are! Death is not better than surgery. I was 46, living in Phoenix, and was a medical assistant for a busy OB-GYN office. I had a good marriage, a daughter, age 15, and a son, 10. I discovered a lump in my left breast, went immediately for tests, and after consultations with several doctors, decided to have that breast removed. During that surgery, the reports concerning my right breast came in, a biopsy was done, and off it came!
I never regretted it. I was back in my office in three weeks. Abby, that was back in 1954. I will be 84 years old in September, and I wear a size "C" bra. Ha! You may sign me — RUTH S. HENDERSON, FULLERTON, CALIF.
