DPS trooper honored

Former Big Spring resident Bill Cooper, with the Texas Department of Public Safety, was given a citation for action against a gunman in Luby's Cafeteria in Killeen in October.

Cooper, a 1979 graduate of Big Spring High School and now a sergeant with DPS, was teaching a class next door to the cafeteria Oct. 16 when gunman George Hennard Jr. began shooting people at the cafeteria, killing 23 and wounding numerous others, according to a press release. Hennard shot himself after being pursued by Cooper.

Cooper is a former Big Spring and Stanton police officer. He was stationed with DPS in Big Spring in 1984-86.

President Owen Ivie.

U.N. peacekeepers shot, wounded

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina— Three U.N. peacekeepers were shot and slightly wounded today on their first day of guarding Sarajevo's airport against warring factions in Bosnia's civil war.

U.N. officials said most of the small U.N. contingent at the airport were French, but they could not immediately establish the nationalities of the wounded peacekeepers.

They said a doctor was en route to the airport and none of the wounds seemed serious, but had no further details.

Earlier in the day, three French planes arrived with tons of food and medicine for residents of the besieged city. A team of U.N. peacekeepers from Croatia was en route to secure international control of the airport.

About 15 tons of food and medical supplies were brought into central Sarajevo by U.N. trucks guarded by an armored personnel carrier.

Until today's injuries at the airport, Sarajevo had been relatively quiet since Monday, with only small-arms fire heard this morning.

More than 200 international peacekeepers were en route from central Croatia in a convoy at speeds averaging 20 mph to secure the airport. Land mines are a problem in some areas.

'Hopefully there won't be a shot fired. But we both know that it's a very volatile, dangerous part of the world and it's going to be probably the most dangerous situation that any of these soldiers ever (faced).'

In Paris, the Defense Ministry announced France will dispatch 120 soldiers to reinforce U.N. troops at the Sarajevo airport at the request of U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Cheli Ghali.

Officials, meanwhile, stored the relief provisions in a gymnasium in the Skenderija neighborhood, and planned to start distributing them Wednesday to about 300,000 residents suffering from the three-month Serbian siege of Sarajevo.

The U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees is preparing to send 5,700 tons of food to Sarajevo as soon as the airport is deemed safe, the agency reported in Geneva today.

The U.N. agency estimates it needs to send in about 190 tons of food each day to meet the target of 5,700 tons over a one-month period. The transport planes have a capacity of only 10-15 tons, which means there must be 12-19 flights daily. Fabrizio Hochschild, chief of operations for the U.N. refugee agency in Sarajevo, estimated 30 tons of supplies had arrived at the airport.

The airport was taken over Monday when Serb forces left as the U.N. Security Council voted to authorize the dispatching of international troops to the airfield.

As Serb irregulars pulled back, about 34 U.N. peacekeepers raised the U.N. flag over the tarmac to take symbolic control. But U.N. authorities said the airfield would not be secure for an airlift until reinforcements arrive from Croatia.

Despite the presence of about 14,000 U.N. peacekeepers in neighboring Croatia, fighting there continues.

Bluebonnet to become new library

By GARY SHANKS Staff Writer

Purchase of the Bluebonnet Savings Bank building was approved Monday by Howard County Commissioners' Court to be used as a new library.

Bluebonnet will continue leasing the building from the county for up to a year, said Jerry Williams, branch manager of the institution.

Bluebonnet corporate headquarters in Dallas has not yet made plans for rehousing Big Spring's Bluebonnet branch, he said. It is unknown what decisions the corporate office will make regarding the purchase or construction of new housing for the financial institution. This decision will be made in the upcoming months, he said.

The building is slightly larger than the current library building and has capacity for future expansion, said Librarian Donna Jackson. "It has better handicapped access in the rear," she added.

The purchse of the building was approved by unanimous vote. Judge Ben Lockhart was given authorization to execute the necessary contracts to purchase the building with funds donated by The Dorothy Garrett Foundation, the Mildred Gray estate and the Friends of the Howard County Library, Lockhart said. All donated funds are placed into the County's library fund, he said.

The library has operated out of what was once the post office for about 20 years, after moving from what is now the old section of the Heritage Museum, according to library personnel.

Due to a bad roof, February rains destroyed about 500 books and caused considerable water damage to the library. Some cabinets remain unusable due to water damage.

The final purchase price of the structure has not been decided, Lockhart said. The negotiated price will be between $203,000 and $210,000 he said. Lockhart will be working with County Attorney Hardy Wilkerson to finalize the deal with Bluebonnet Savings Dallas of

No evidence of American POWs in Moscow

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush's special envoy said today he found no evidence in Moscow that any living American POW is being held against his will in the former Soviet Union.

Malcolm Toon briefed President
Bush this morning on his week-long trip to the former Soviet Union.
Afterwards, he told reporters outside the White House, "There probably

Toon said top Russian officials had agreed to open their security archives to American investigators, as Russian

The former ambassador to Moscow said he would draw a distinction between Americans held against their will and some who may have elected of their own choosing to stay after the wars.

Some of the U.S. investigators went to a labor camp in Siberia during Toon's trip, but found no evidence of Americans being held there.

Yeltsin pledged that "every document, every archive" in Russia would be searched for clues to the fate of any Americans missing from the three wars.

Toon said he prodded the Russians to issue a statement within two weeks confirming that no American was being held.

"I saw no reason at all, and no American could see any reason, why the Russian government can't come up with a statement within two weeks indicating whether or not there's a live American POW being detained in Russian facilities," he said. "So that will be done

Toon and Gen. Dmitri Volkogonov, a military historian, are chairing a joint commission to investigate the possibility that Americans were still held in Russian labor camps or psychiatric hospitals.

Toon said his trip produced "a much stronger promise on the part of the security people ... on opening up all their files" on this issue.

Asked about American soldiers who might have chosen to stay in the former Communist state, Toon said, "I think that's a real possibility, but frankly, we did not find any information to that extent."

"There may be former American POWs living in Russia or the former Soviet Union voluntarily. We don't know that," he said.

Bush "was very happy to have me go over there ... trying to pin this whole thing down," the envoy said.

Abortion battle continues on new frontlines

AUSTIN - Abortion rights opponents and supporters are ready for fights at the ballot box, the statehouse and Congress after a U.S. Supreme Court decision allowing states to impose guidelines for the procedure.

But Lisa Salcedo of the Texas Right to Life Committee said the proposed Freedom of Choice Act would invalidate "reasonable limits on abortion," such as she says are contained in the Pennsylvania law.

'This has to do with freedom, this has to do with individual rights, this has to do with the fundamentals that are supposed to be guaranteed to all citizens of this country," she said.

Among provisions of the Pennsylvania law upheld by the Supreme Court are its requirements that women seeking abortions be told about fetal development and alternatives to pregnancy termination, and wait 24 hours after receiving such information.

SPACE CENTER, Houston -Columbia's astronauts today watched starry specks swirling in heated silicone oil in an experiment aimed at producing nearly flawless crystals and alloys. They also took a break to appear on a television talk show.

The crew is in the sixth day of its 13-day research mission, NASA's longest shuttle flight yet. The seven astronauts are conducting numerous experiments as well as undergoing medical tests to learn how humans adapt to space travel.

On Earth, movement in liquids and gases used to make crystals and metals can cause defects, limiting their potential use in products such as computer chips and turbine engine blades.

One of the causes of such movement is temperature variations. The temperature effects are much easier to measure in low gravity 1990 when swarms began arriving than on the ground.

Researchers also are interested in growing bigger, more nearly

New Philippines president sworn in

First peaceful transfer of power in 26 years

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANILA, Philippines — Fidel Ramos, a shrewd political veteran who served under dictatorship and democracy, was sworn in today as president of a nation plagued by corruption, poverty and rebel violence.

It was the first peaceful transfer of power in 26 years in this nation of 65 million, a former American colony that has been the base for U.S. naval power in the Pacific since World War II.

"Let us begin by telling ourselves the truth," Ramos said in his 30-minute inaugural speech. "Our nation is in trouble and there are no easy answers, no easy fixes for our basic ills.'

Hours before the inauguration ceremony, bombs believed planted by right-wing extremists exploded at branches of a bank owned by a Ramos supporter. Several thousand leftists marched through the streets denouncing the former defense secretary as a "fascist."

"There will be no honeymoon," leftist leader Nathaniel

Santiago said. The explosions did little damage but underscored the difficulties Ramos will have in uniting this fractious nation, facing with Marxist and Muslim insurgencies and threats from military dissidents.

gathered under heavy security to watch Ramos and his vice president, Joseph Estrada, take their oaths in a park near Manila Bay.

A former aide to dictator Ferdinand Marcos who went on to defend democracy, Ramos won the six-year presidency in elections last month marred by allegations of fraud.

He paid tribute to his predecessor, Corazon Aquino, whom he defended through seven coup attempts. Mrs. Aguino defied the odds and completed her term, fulfilling a pledge to hand over power to an elected successor

Ramos promised to erase the "anti-American, anti-foreign image" which developed after the government ordered the removal of the last U.S. military base this year from the former U.S. colony, which became independent in 1946.

He also pledged to restore law and order, improve basic services, and show that "government is not unavoidably corrupt and that bureaucracy is not necessarily ineffective.

"We Filipinos have lacked not the way but the will," said the 64-year-old West Point and University of Illinois graduate. Ramos' victory was a personal triumph for Mrs. Aquino, who supported the country's first Protestant president the center-right policies which marked the final years of Mrs. Aquino's administration.

Another PLO commander is assassinated

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

SIDON, Lebanon — Unidentified assailants today shot and killed the local commander of PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat's Fatah forces. It was the second assassination this month of a ranking PLO official.

No group claimed responsibility for the assassination of Col. Anwar Madi, the militia commander for the largest of 13 Palestinian refugee camps in Lebanon. Lebanese troops cordoned off the scene, but no arrests were reported.

Police had no immediate theories about a motive. But there have been several assassinations or attempts resulting from power struggles among south Lebanon's Palestinians in the last three years. Arafat named Madi to the post three weeks ago

Police said Madi was cut down by two gunmen as he was heading from the city, a regional capital, to his office in the Ein el-Hilweh camp, which houses some 60,000

The assassins climbed out of a waiting Mercedes-Benz as Madi's dead June 8

BMW approached the vicinity of Sidon's main police station on Sarai street and opened fire at 10:10 a.m. (3:10 a.m. EDT).

"One assailanteraked Madi with 12 submachine-gun bullets and the other fired the final bullet below Madi's right ear from a pistol,' said a Sidon police spokesman, who spoke on condition of anonymity in line with government regulations.

He described the killers as coldblooded professionals. He said they jumped back into their car and sped away down an alleyway in front of several stunned onlookers.

Madi, 45, twice married with six children, was pronounced dead by doctors upon his arrival at Hammoud hospital in Sidon, 25 miles south of Beirut.

Three-way tie for presidential choice

The ABC News-Washington Post poll reported Monday showed Clinton with 33 percent, Perot with 30 percent and Bush with 29 percent. The survey's margin of error was plus or minus 3.5 percentage points, meaning the results amount to a statistical tie. However, the poll was good news for Clinton, the certain Democratic nominee, who had been stuck behind Perot and Bush for weeks in other polls.

Clinton gained seven points from an ABC-Washington Post poll on June 7, when he had 26 percent support, far behind Perot's 38 percent

In an ABC-Post survey on May 31, Perot led with 37 percent. Bush and Clinton were tied at 29 percent.

Perot's eight-point drop since June 7 was the first sign that his popularity might be fading. He has been under intense media scrutiny and has been feuding with the White House over whether the Republicans planted negative stories about him.

The survey was conducted by telephone from Wednesday through Sunday among a random national sample of 1,007 adults.

Most of Perot's lost ground was among those who identify themselves as Democrats. His support among that group dropped from 35 percent in the June 7 survey to 24 percent in the poll released Monday

New York law helps victim

The New York State Senate has passed legislation that prohibits attorneys from telling juries that a rape victim wore provocative clothing during the attack. The bill would bar using a sexual assault victim's attire as

Too many times, a person who has been raped is a victim twice — once at the hands of the attacker and next at the hands of the judicial system.

Thankfully, the New York Senate has come to grips with the fact that a person has been assaulted and not a person wearing a mini skirt or a person wearing blue jeans — but a person.

Texas legislators could best serve their constituency by passing such a law . . . a law that puts the rapist on trial and doesn't victimize the victim one more time.

Dan Quayles' woes more than spelling

By WALTER MEARS AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Dan Quayle's problem isn't the superfluous "e" on potato. It's that he hasn't been able to shake an image bolstered by misspelling an easy word at a sixth-grade spelling bee.

Bill Clinton could have flunked a spelling test and laughed it off; his image problem is character, not competence. So when an irked Jesse Jackson says Clinton has shown a "character flaw," he's aiming at a special vulnerability.

President Bush overcame the wimp factor four years ago, but remnants remain. So does the impression, cultivated by his critics, of an Ivy League elitist out of touch with everyday America. That's why his purported — and exaggerated — unfamiliarity with a supermarket price scanner became an item for his detractors. Ross Perot has used some of that as raw material in his challenge to the major party cam paigners for the White House. Now Perot, in turn, is having image trouble with opponents who cast him as an imperious tycoon with a habit of sicking investigators on people he doesn't

"They're creating a new personality that doesn't exist . then this week they have a massive roll-out for the American people," Perot said Wednesday, adding that Bush is behind it all. "And it's not working because it's not true."

It may stick and it may not. But Perot has shown a penchant for poking into the affairs of opponents, critics and sometimes associates

The pattern holds even on routine matters. Denying, for example, that he once advocated house-to-house drug searches, Perot went on to take a personal slap at a reporter who wrote that he had. He told a meeting of newspaper editors that "if you study her career as a journalist, you'll understand that she flies out on flights of fantasy from time to time, and changes jobs periodically.

In the past week, The Washington Post, Time Magazine and the New Republic have reported he had private investigators look into the lives of people with whom he had diferences, Bush among them.

Perot denies it all, saying it is a product of a campaign "inside the system to try to redefine me" and that he is being handled more har-shly than establishment candidates because he is an outsider.

"His paranoia knows no bounds," said presidential press secretary Marlin Fitzwater. The Bush camp, Fitzwater said, is simply reflecting on published information in comments about an lection opponent.
Among those reflections:

Quayle's suggestion that Perot has a compulsion to investigate people, and that it would be risky were he in charge of the IRS, the FBI and the CIA.

Tom Luce, Perot's campaign chairman and lawyer, said Tuesday that Perot's record and behavior was being twisted, and called it "part of the distortion of the political process."

Perhaps. But it is nothing new, and it is not reserved to the independent candidate.

All political images, favorable or unfavorable, are subject to distortion. But neither image makers nor negative campaigners can invent them outright — there has to be factual underpinning to make them stick.

In Quayle's case, an awkward vice presidential campaign debut began the process, magnifying gaffes that would have been minor matters in different circumstances. For Clinton, it's the "slick Willie" label applied to him as governor of Arkansas, compounded by allegations of illicit love affairs, his odd, uninhaled and belated acknowledgment to youthful experiments with marijuana, and his avoidance of the Vietnam era draft.

Bush amended his positions and became the ultimate loyalist during his eight years as vice president to Ronald Reagan; that gave rise to the wimp factor when he ran in 1988. It subsided, but Perot has said acidly that as president, he wouldn't go to war to prove his

A minor campaign episode that accentuates an image problem can become a crippling setback for a candidate.

That's what happened in 1972 when Sen. Edmund Muskie stood outside The Union Leader offices in Manchester, N.H., denouncing an article critical of his wife and was said to have wept, although he always said he'd choked in anger, not tears.

Either way, it cemented the image of a temperamental politician, prone to bursts of rage, and became a symbol of Muskie's slide out of presidential contention.

In 1968, George Romney, then governor of Michigan, was rated a leading Republican contender until he began a campaign marred by errors and gaffes. Quaylestyle, every slip was accentuated. So when a 1967 broadcast interview in which he said generals and diplomats in Saigon had given him a brainwashing on Vietnam war policy was revived, it fit the image. He became the brainwashed candidate, and folded early.

In 1976 campaign debate, President Gerald Ford insisted there was no Soviet domination of Eastern Europe. There was, and he knew it as well as anyone, but he misspoke and wouldn't budge in an episode doubly damaging because of the bumps and slips that critics said showed him a

Integrity — the big issue of the 90s

Some years ago I used to do a fair amount of traveling alone. On such occasions, it was impossible not to play the what-if game. What if my car breaks down? What if it costs more to fix it than I can afford? What if it only costs a few dollars, but some shark rips me off?

I recall the sense of comfort I derived from knowing that most cities had a Sears store with an attached auto shop. In an emergency, I could always trust Sears, I thought. So it was a shock to me this month to learn that Sears auto shops in California had been accused of bilking customers to the tune of, on average, $223. I'd have to hock the car to pay for repairs at those prices!

Of course, Sears (assuming the charges are true) is not the only organization or person caught up in a crisis of integrity in the 90's. Examples are legion, but here are

• The Marinette (Wis.) Eagle-Star reported in March that federal investigators have found food stamps are being used nationwide in trade for cars, guns, cocaine, cash, appliances, etc.

• The Charleston (W. Va.) Gazette last month told how Johnson & Johnson had developed the drug levamisole to rid farm animals of worms. A year's supply for a sheep cost $15. Then it was learned the drug is useful against colon cancer in humans humans covered by health insurance. The cost went to $1.495 for a year's supply for a person.

• Last September, 25 people died in a fire in a chicken factory in North Carolina. Many were unable to escape because the back doors of the building were locked. Why were they locked? To cut down on pilferage by the employees

 Then there's Lon Perry, the 'Gentleman Bandit,' a laid-off computer programmer from Houston, who turned to crime to solve his economic hardship. But for Perry, giving up his integrity came hard. He brandished a pistol that didn't work and could be persuaded not to rob a victim who said something that touched his heart. He turned himself in when someone else was arrested for his crimes.

Often, as in Perry's case, a deterioration in integrity is not something that occurs overnight. Like the drog that will immediately hope out of hot water, but can be boiled alive if the water is heated gradually, people tend to inch their way into a lifestyle of

Richard Dortch, a former associate of Jim Bakker, wrote a book about his experiences at PTL, and the subtle erosion of integrity in his life. "When I went to PTL, I was Mr. Clean . . .," he wrote. "I was proud of the fact that in thirty-five years of public life, there had never been a rumor or scandal attached to me." His problem, he said, was that in his arrogant state he lost his

Dortch. And it begins with little things for all of us. We live in a society where stresses and frustrations can lead us astray before we even notice that we're doing things we believed we'd never do. "Without question, it (integrity) is the issue of the 90's," wrote Dortch. He also pointed out that people have a tendency toward "selective integrity;" that is, holding one standard for ourselves and another for everyone else. As Dortch put it, "If others do it, it's wrong; if we do it, God understands

And then there's what he calls "consensual integrity," which means going along with the crowd, letting something wrong happen because we don't want to be a tattletale or a whistleblower or because we're afraid of losing our position.

tions of people living without integrity, it's refreshing when a story comes out about someone taking a stand for what's right. For example, last summer when Demi Moore adorned the cover of Vanity Fair, pregnant and nude, three grocery chains in North Carolina banned the issue.

In March, the Associated Press reported on a pharmacist in Pennsylvania who burned $2,000 worth of cigarettes. He could no longer sell something that would destroy the health his medications were

I salute you courageous proprietors who are willing to sacrifice some income in order to maintain your integrity and to make a statement about your commitment to your state and your nation. I personally do my best never to shop where lottery tickets are sold; you deserve my support.

And finally, in the battle between the Boy Scouts and militant gays, the Scouts have refused to compromise. "Our values are not for sale," one Scouting director said when the United Way threatened to withhold its usual generous donation.

What a novel attitude in our cynical, jaded culture! As we approach the 116th birthday of the United States, we could give our nation no better birthday present than to search our hearts and lives and discover any areas where we have abandoned integrity. Then we must make a firm decision that we will not sell out our values end, in the long run, our beautiful country.

Bush wants Quayle to brush up

It now appears that Dan Quayle may not play the role that the Republican campaign committee had worked out for him. President Bush is insisting that Quayle must go to summer school and brush up on his spelling.

Quayle protested to the President that he was being punished unfairly because he couldn't spell potato in a school classroom.

"We always spelled it with an 'e' in the National Guard," he told Mr. Bush.

"Nevertheless," replied the President, "you have created an embarrassing situation. The people don't expect too much of their Vice President, but they do want someone who can spell. If I don't send you to summer school, I will look weak and ineffectual as a leader. It will only be for six weeks, and they will give you graham crackers and milk at the end of the day.

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) -John McEnroe considers himself an outsider for the Wimbledon title. His rivals say he can win it all.

McEnroe reached the quarterfinals Monday for the first time in three years, beating Russian qualifier Andrei Olhovskiy - the man who ended Jim Courier's Grand Slam quest -7-5, 6-3, 7-6 (12-10)

It was McEnroe's second consecutive straight-set victory and proved that, despite his 33 years, he remains one of the best grasscourt players in the world.

Boris Becker stretches to reach a shot from South Africa's Wayne Ferreira during the men's singles fourth round match at Centre Court at Wimbledon Monday. The game was suspended because of darkness at two sets each.

McEnroe said he's playing better than in 1989, when he lost to Stefan Edberg in the Wimbledon semifinals. He also feels he's in a better position than when he reached the semis at the Australian Open earlier this year.

"I think it's a great run," McEnroe said. "I feel like I'll have a lot better chances. I'll be a lot more prepared this time.'

The other top players agreed.

"I wish I could," Benjamin Reyes, Sergio's father, said Saturday in Phoenix after the youngest of his four sons had locked up an Olympic berth with a workmanlike 51-28 decision against archrival Sean Fletcher of the Navy.

Clemson hit with more violations

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) - The NCAA has charged the Clemson men's basketball program with four more rule violations that focus on assistant coach Len Gordy, who's been suspended indefinitely.

"Project Vote Smart" was unveiled Monday as a voter's selfdefense system.

We are taking the technology that candidates use to manipulate voters and turning it around to the voter's advantage instead," said Adelaide Elm, a founder of the nonpartisan Center for National Independence in Politics.

The system will allow Texas voters to instantly check the credibility of a candidate's claim about their own record, or their opponent's record or background.

The information system contains biographical background, voting records, campaign finances, performance evaluations done by more than 60 different, and competing special interest groups, and positions by the candidates, the group said.

SANTA MARIA, Texas -Ninteen-year-old Frutoso Villarreal thought he had left public school behind him when he graduated from high school in May

One year later Villarreal was summoned back to school, but not because he lacked a credit to graduate, failed a high school exit test or forgot to return a textbook. Rather, Villarreal heard a calling to serve on his hometown school board. Last month. Villarreal filed for election, campaigned hard and won a seat to the Santa Maria School Board, becoming one of the youngest school board members in the state, if not the youngest. "It kind of feels weird," Villarreal said of his near-two-month-old experience. "Yesterday I got called by the business office to sign some payroll checks. Some of them were for my former teachers!" Villarreal said he decided to run for the board to give Santa Maria students opportunities he and his graduating class didn't have. Because the district lacks a fouryear high school, Villarreal and his classmates graduated from the Progreso School District. 'The main issue here has been getting a high school," Villarreal said. "It's been an issue since my older sister went to school here and she's 35 years old now." Villarreal said students get tired of being shifted around from school my share of ups and downs.

the problem should be resolved when the district completes its current building program. 'Because we haven't had a full high school, the town hasn't gotten district to school district. He said the recognition it deserves," he said. "We have too much talent here, so why don't we leave it here instead of sending it to another high school?" Increasing parental involvement and lowering the dropout rate are other issues Villarreal would like to address. Poverty and the migrant status of many families don't help matters, he said. 'We have a lot of parents who don't take part in school," he said. 'They don't even know who their children's teachers are. They have to get involved."

Though he lacks the expertise of older, experienced board members, Villarreal said his youth is an asset to him on the board.

Villarreal said he can understand the problems students have in school after having been a high school student recently.

"The thing is, you don't necessarily need an education to be a school board member," he said. 'You need common sense. You have to decide what's best for the students and the community.

Villarreal's own school experience wasn't exactly squeakyclean. He's not ashamed to admit he skipped school sometimes and liked to talk a lot in class. "I wasn't exactly an angel," he said. "I had education interests.

He attended Texas State Technical College last year and plans to pursue a communications degree at the University of Texas-Pan American this fall.

When he's not going to school or serving on the school board, Villarreal plays the accordion with a local conjunto on weekends.

Villarreal said serving on the school board has been a learning experience. He has to think budgets, architectural plans and building details now.

"It's harder than I though it would be. It's a new experience, a new world.'

Hospitals board thousands of unwanted newborn babies

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - Public hospitals are boarding thousands of unwanted babies each year at a cost of tens of millions of dollars to the nation's health care system, a children's advocacy group says.

A survey of 72 hospitals in 12 urban areas this spring found more than 600 babies are left in hospitals monthly. Although many have disabilities or health problems, the infants don't need the constant medical attention of a hospital.

The survey was conducted by the Child Welfare League of America in conjunction with the National Association of Public Hospitals because no national statistics were available on the growing problem of boarder babies.

The study found that 85 percent of the babies were prenatally exposed to alcohol, cocaine or other dangerous drugs and a few were infected with the AIDS virus. Some had been in the hospitals more than

Only 21 percent of the boarder babies were expected to be reunited with birth parents, while 79 percent would go to relatives or foster care or be adopted out of the

'Based on this data, we estimate that these 72 urban safety net hospitals will board 6,500-7,000 babies this year, at a total unreimbursed cost of nearly $30 million to $35 million," said Larry Gage, president of the National Association of Public Hospitals. David Liederman, executive director of the Child Welfare

League, said the boarder baby problem stems from too many unemployed parents turning to drugs and alcohol.

He said the government needs to respond. "We can't continue without job programs," he said.

Liederman also blamed the federal war on drugs for concentrating on punishment rather than treatment. He said the government should help families in distress solve their internal problems so they can care for their children.

The child welfare system simply doesn't have enough money at this time to take care of all the problems, he said

Gage said each boarder baby costs its hospital $600 to $800 a day on average, covered neither by Medicaid nor any other health

Congress is considering legislation that would authorize about $3.5 billion for child welfare services over five years.

The House bill, known as the Family Preservation Act, is sponsored by Rep. Themas Downey, D-N.Y. In the Senate, the Child Welfare and Preventive Services Act is sponsored by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas.

Reps. Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., and Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, also spoke in favor of the legislation but said it couldn't become reality without the support of the White House.

"This is a wakeup call to those who are president and want to be president to get on with helping America's children,'' said Rangel

Students study craters, cracks

EL PASO — Cracks, craters and holes in the surface of a satellite that floated in space for six years may hold clues to what kind of material could be used to build the Space Station Freedom.

And University of Texas at El Paso metallurgy researchers are doing some of the detective work.

The sleuths, UTEP professor Lawrence Murr and graduate students Stella Quinones, Jean Liu and Jesus Rivas, have been exploring the damage left to parts of a satellite that had been aloft six

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration sent the bussized satellite up solely to see how much battering it could take and which materials in its makeup could best survive the increasingly hostile environment of low-earth orbit. The orbit is a collar around the planet between 200 and 300 miles high.

NASA will use the research to help protect Space Station Freedom, which it plans to build in orbit by the end of the century.

"It's really opened the eyes of researchers to the combined effects of what's happening in space," said Bill Kinard, NASA's chief scientist on the satellite project. "People knew materials would be subjected to erosion and atomic oxygen, but they didn't know how much.

The satellite's damaged parts have been divided among 200 labs in the country.

UTEP's research focuses on two aluminum clamps and bolts removed from NASA's satellite, officially known as the Long Duration Exposure Facility.

Retrieved by a shuttle in January 1990, the satellite bore more than 3,000 tiny holes and pinsized craters. Even more damage was invisible. Most of the impacts from cosmic dust and manmade litter measured millionths of an inch, but hit with the force of semitrucks.

"It's just like driving across West Texas," said Murr, a prominent metallurgist. "Everything there smacks your windshield. Only these bugs don't just splat on the join each other," Murr explained

They are using high power microscopes, x-rays and ion beams to find craters, cracks and other damage to the bolt. Their metallurgical research could help decide what materials will be used to build the Space Station Freedom.

Ms. Quinones found three of the cosmic crashes on a quarter-inch section of aluminum earlier this month. She tracked them down with the assistance of powerful magnification, X-rays and ion

"I found those three in just a couple of hours," Ms. Quinones said last week. "I can't believe how lucky I was. These are hard to

The microscope revealed cracks radiating from the craters, which UTEP scientists believe weakened the satellite's protective coating and its underlying metal.

"Some of the cracks radiate and

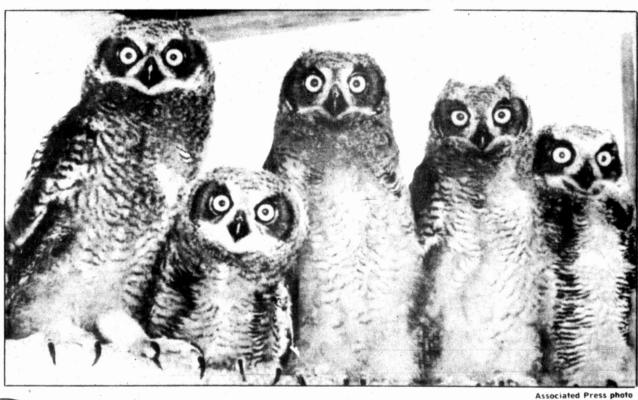

"Now you've got a real problem, because that's how things ultimately break

Rivas used an ion beam to slowly slice a crater in two. He has found that the minuscule impacts cause aluminum crystals to bend deep under the surface. That weakens the metal far below each crater.

Murr found one worm-shaped crevice he suspects came from lint that may have escaped from fabric on a space suit.

'Everything, everything, everything in orbit can cause damage," he said.

The research should continue for at least another decade, but scientists already have found some composites — such as silicone coatings can protect hardware.

How to safely handle food in weather disasters

Natural disasters such as tornadoes, floods and other storms wreak havoc on the land and create panic for those affected. Concerns about food and water safety in the time of crisis further devastate victims. However, there are ways to handle food and water safety

Texas leads the country in the number of tornadoes per year, followed by Oklahoma. In an area damaged by a tornado, the water supply may be disrupted or contaminated and food in damaged buildings and homes may be hazardous. In this case, drink only approved or chlorinated water. Consider water from wells, cisterns and other delivery systems in the damaged area unsafe until tested. Check foods for particles of glass or slivers of other debris and discard. Discard canned foods if commercial glass jars can be saved, but only if sanitized. To sanitize, remove paper and labels. These can harbor bacteria from foods. Wash jars or cans in strong detergent with a brush. Immerse for 15 minutes in a solution of 2 teaspoons chlorine bleach per quart of room temperature water. Air dry. Sanitize dishes and glassware the same way. Boil metal pans and utensils in water for 10 minutes.

Discard any wooden or plastic utensils. If time permits before flood waters approach, raise refrigerators or freezers by putting cement blocks under corners. If foods are stored low, move them

Power outages often are a result of disasters and this means the refrigerator and freezer may be off. Generally, food in a closed ed food to last four to five days,

In general, partially thawed items can be refrozen if ice crystals are still present. If kept above 40 degrees F, for more than two hours, discard any raw or cooked meats, poultry, fish, eggs and egg dishes, any casseroles or dishes containing these items, fluid milk products, yogurt, and soft cheese, any cream or cream filled pastries, pies or puddings.

Preparedness can help "weather the storm". Many people; particularly if located in an area often affected, should plan and keep an emergency supply of food and water on hand. In general, each person will need a gallon of water a day for several days, enough cann-

Young, single women getting most abortions

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - The woman walking into a hospital or clinic for an abortion is most likely unmarried and young. She's probably white, and there's better than a 50-50 chance that this is the first time she's chosen to end a pregnancy

Those are the conclusions of the Alan Guttmacher Institute based on its own and Centers for Disease Control data from 1987

The institute, which is affiliated with the leading pro-choice organization Planned Parenthood, also concluded that the abortion rate in America, which rose sharply in the first few years after the Supreme Court's 1973 decision legalizing abortion, has gone down in recent years.

said Olivia Gans, director of American Victors of Abortion. which is affiliated with National Right to Life

The institute aid that of the women getting aportions in 1987:

- 82 percent were unmarried.
- 26 percent were in their teens. About one-third were between 20 and 24 years old.

65 percent were white.

Availability of abortion services varies from area to area, and some women have to leave their home states to get an abortion, the institute said. A study published in 1990 but using figures from 1985 found that 98,570 women crossed state lines to get an abortion.

"The distance a woman has to travel for abortion services can be an important determinant of whether she is to obtain the ser-

The institute, which is affiliated with the leading pro-choice organization Planned Parenthood, also concluded that the abortion rate in America, which rose sharply in the first few years after the Supreme Court's 1973 decision legalizing abortion, has gone down in recent years.

'We cannot determine the exact reasons for the abortion rate decline," the institute's researchers wrote in a 1991 study, "it could be attributed to reduced access to abortion services or changed attitudes toward abortion as well as toward carrying unplanned pregnancies to term.

Several states have moved to restrict access to abortion, and the Supreme Court is expected to rule by the end of the month on the constitutionality of a Pennsylvania law that imposes waiting periods and notification requirements on women seeking abortions.

With more than 4,000 abortions occurring in any day, the procedure is one of the most common surgical procedures in the country. But the statistics, even those gathered by the government, can be fuzzy because doctors and clinics don't always report the procedure as an abortion.

But the statistics of the Guttmacher Institute are accepted as authoritative by anti-abortion as well as pro-choice groups.

"Their numbers are some of the vices when she needs them," the study said. "Lack of local services makes it harder for women to obtain information about facilities, and, if they do, they may face other difficulties: prohibitive travel expenses, the need for overnight lodging and the loss of pay due to absence from work.

Overall, the abortion rate has been declining since 1980, when it was 29.3 per 1,000 women, the institute said. By 1987 it had declined to 26.9. The number of abortions nearly doubled from 1973 to 1979, but it stayed fairly stable through the 1980s and is estimated to be around 1.6 million annually.

Of that total in 1987, some 900,630, or 57.8 percent, had not had an abortion before. Nearly 27 percent had one prior abortion, 10 percent had two previous ones, and 5.5 percent had three or more.

Ms. Gans said other studies on the subject have found that many women are getting abortions for social or birth control reasons.

"For a lot of those women the completing their education or
