Western leaders open economic summit

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

MUNICH, Germany — Western leaders today opened their 18th annual economic summit, struggling to find ways to ensure humanitarian relief shipments to besieged Bosnia and to accelerate billions of dollars in Western assistance to Russia.

German Chancellor Helmut Kohl and a military honor guard welcomed President Bush and the leaders of Britain, France, Japan, Canada and Italy to a three-day meeting at the palace of Wittelsbach. It was their first gathering since the Soviet Union collapsed last December, and aid for Russia was high on the agenda.

As the talks opened, a senior U.S. official said relief shipments were getting through to Bosnia's Sarajevo airport but "we want to find ways in which we can get a longer term effort" to assist the 300,000 people under siege for three months.

"We want to find ways to get land convoys" into the shattered, self-declared independent state, said the official, speaking on grounds of anonymity. This official said there would be discussions of "contingencies."

German sources said the summit leaders were expected to endorse U.N. military action against Serbia if humanitarian aid "cannot be achieved any other way."

The German government for weeks has maintained that air shipments would not be sufficient and that a land corridor must be opened from the Croatian port of Split on the Adriatic Sea to Bosnia.

Russia's battle against economic collapse also dominated the talks. Western leaders hailed Sunday's announcement that the International Monetary Fund reached an agreement with President Boris Yeltsin to begin opening the spigot on billions of dollars of Western aid for Russia.

"I'm very glad that succeeded," German Finance Minister Theo Waigel said. He said Germany is ready to discuss "some breathing room to get Russia through the next difficult years."

Mikhail Gorbachev made a plea for assistance at the summit last year and went home empty handed. He became the target a month later of a failed coup attempt that was followed in December by the final collapse of the Soviet Union. Leaders hoped to give a boost to Yeltsin.

The senior U.S. official sought to minimize the significance of a fight between the United States and Germany over Kohl's proposal to create a $700 million fund to make repairs to Soviet-built nuclear reactors similar to the one at Chernobyl.

The official said the United States already has provided $40 million on its

Fireworks display pleases crowd

By GARY SHANKS
Staff Writer

"Ooos" and "Ahaas" were plentiful late Saturday as Big Spring residents watched the largest fireworks display in West Texas.

The Big Spring Symphony and Chorale provided music to accompany the spectacle, with Marie Hall Enterprises and the Symphony Association sponsoring the musical event.

Hundreds of colorful explosions were seen atop South Mountain as the husband and wife pyrotechnics team Tim and Judith Turner detonated the fireworks from the property of Chris Christopher.

Using capped pipes, or "mortars," Turner and his crew detonated cylindrical charges from three inch to six inch pipes, which are buried in the ground, he said.

For the finale, Turner's company had several groups of charges to be detonated in series. As the fuse burns at a rate of 300 feet per second, the fusillade of fireworks discharged almost simultaneously, seeming to fill the sky with brightly colored fire, one onlooker said.

About the size and shape of a basketball, Turner saved one 12-inch fireworks for the finale. Due to the size of the aerial explosion, the charge would have to be higher than most of the other charges, which detonated at 600 to 900 feet above the firing area, Turner said.

"We hope to get 1,200 to 1,500 feet out of this one," Turner said of the massive fireworks.

Even with this elevation, the fireworks created a star-shaped, orange configuration with some of the fiery tendrils reaching the ground before being extinguished.

As mandated by Texas law, firefighters were standing by, Turner said. The Sand Springs and Jonesboro volunteer fire departments were on duty at the top of the mountain, while the Tubbs and Coahoma units waited at the bottom, said Volunteer Fire Chief C. Roy Wright.

The professional display yielded several small fires on the western end of the mountain. The largest of these was caused by a defective fireworks that struck the ground before exploding. Fortunately, winds had driven the explosive charge away from spectators. The volunteers quickly extinguished these fires, Wright said.

Volunteer fire fighters were busy much of the weekend fighting fireworks-related grass fires in much of the county, with 15 such grass fires reported, Wright said.

Fireworks-related fires down for 2nd year in row

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

Moist conditions, caution by fireworks handlers or both have contributed to fireworks-related fires in July being kept down the past two years.

Two fires caused by fireworks were reported this year compared to one last year and 15 in 1990 in the period from July 1 through July 5, said city Fire Marshal Burr Lea Settles.

"I would like to say because people are being a little more cautious," Settles said of the low incidents. "We try to get out and preach to the public about fireworks. Maybe that's part of it."

Abundant rain in June may be a reason, he said.

Record rains were recorded in May and the beginning of June in Big Spring this year and downpours occurred in June while no rain fell in June 1990, ac-ording to records kept by the U.S. Agricultural Research Station. Rainfall in June of this year measured 5.26 inches and last year was 4.89 inches.

Moisture left in plants and the ground may have been a deterrent, Settles said. "I wouldn't doubt it a bit."

Reporting and investigation of fires may also be a factor, he said. "Unless firemen are told fireworks were the cause or unless they see something on the scene, they won't report it as being caused by fireworks."

Other reasons? "Luck!" I don't know," Settles said.

The two fires reported this year include the inside of a wall of a home Friday on the 2500 block of Gunter and a grass fire Saturday on the 600 block of Northeast Ninth Street.

NEA votes to consider merger with AFT

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Delegates to the National Education Association convention have voted to consider merging with its arch-rival, the American Federation of Teachers — a development that in the world of education politics would be the equivalent to tearing down the Berlin Wall.

The NEA vote Sunday authorizes a one-year study by a special committee led by President Keith Geiger.

Geiger's group will review the organization's 16-year-old policies on mergers and report at the next annual meeting on what "can or cannot happen regarding unification" at the national, state and local levels, the delegates decided.

"I don't know whether or not a year from now we will recommend a merger," Geiger told reporters. But he emphasized that the business item "is very significant" to the 2.1 million NEA members, some of whom are in frequent turf battles with AFT members.

AFT officials were not immediately available for comment.

Geiger opened the 130th annual meeting Sunday with the prediction that Democratic presidential candidate Bill Clinton will be endorsed with the "highest percentage of vote" ever given by the group.

Clinton is scheduled to address the "town meeting" of delegates Tuesday at the D.C. Convention Center.

"Our delegation will be looking forward to the visit of Governor Clinton and the discussion around the endorsement," said Dan Morris, president of the Colorado Education Association and a high school math teacher.

The delegates vote by secret ballot on whether to endorse Clinton as recommended by the governing body of the organization's political action arm, the presidents of the state affiliates and the board of directors.

Geiger said the membership eliminated President Bush from consideration late last year. Unannounced independent candidate, Ross Perot, has refused to meet with NEA officials, Geiger said.

Education Secretary Lamar Alexander derided the NEA, and particularly its leadership, on the possible

Clinton endorsement.

"The NEA will give its support to the candidate who promises the most new money for the least amount of change," Alexander said. "President Bush's America 2000 strategy is about the change it will take to create the best schools in the world, which is more change than the NEA chieftains can stomach."

The NEA first began endorsing presidential candidates in 1976, giving its blessing to Jimmy Carter. The organization also endorsed the Democratic nominees in 1980, 1984 and 1988.

"If I were wagering, I would wager we would get the highest percentage of vote for Bill Clinton that we've ever gotten for a candidate."

Tarrant gunman probed in non-related abuse cases

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT WORTH — A gunman accused of killing two people last week during a rampage in a Tarrant County courtroom has been investigated in as many as 16 cases of sex abuse, according to an Illinois prosecutor.

Assistant State Attorney Jim Owens said his offices has looked into 16 cases accusing George D. Lott of sexual abuse in Texas and Illinois, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Sunday.

Lott has been accused by his ex-wife of abusing their 4-year-old son, Neal David Lott, during weekend visits in Texas and Peoria, Ill.

Lott remained in the Tarrant County Jail Sunday. In all, he is accused of shooting five people — three attorneys and two judges — last Wednesday.

Killed were assistant district attorney Chris Marshall, 41, of Fort Worth and attorney John J. Edwards, 33, of Dallas.

Judge Clyde Ashworth, 69, was in satisfactory condition at Harris Methodist Hospital; Judge John Hill, 48, was released from the hospital Friday; and prosecuting attorney Steven Conder, 28, was treated and released the day of the shooting.

Lott turned himself in at a Dallas television station about six hours after the shootings, saying he was angry over his divorce case and his ex-wife's child-molesting charge against him.

Court records show Lott visited his son eight times at Peoria motels after his former wife, Margo Livesay, moved there in May 1991. Ms. Livesay was awarded custody of the child in 1990.

Owens said Ms. Livesay photographed examples of the child's injuries and reported the instances to Texas child authorities before moving to Peoria.

But Lott's visits to his son continued until Dec. 26, 1991, when a Peoria juvenile judge barred the nonpracticing lawyer from seeing his son alone.

Lott was indicted in March of aggravated criminal sexual assault and criminal sexual assault, and the Peoria court on May 19 halted all visits by Lott.

"It's interesting that what an Illinois court could do in months, no court in Texas could do in years," Owens said.

Owens and Peoria attorney David McCarthy say Ms. Livesay repeatedly asked for investigations from Texas Child Protective Services before she moved to Peoria last year.

Cisneros doesn't want VP

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN ANTONIO — Former San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros says he's not interested in the vice presidency and has urged likely Democratic nominee Bill Clinton to choose a running mate from the northeast.

"The objective logic of this year suggests that it will not be a Texan because of the proximity to Arkansas," Cisneros added. "My recommendation to Gov. Clinton was that he select a strong Northeastern leader."

Texas Gov. Ann Richards, interviewed at a fund-raiser for Democratic state Senate candidate Gregory Luna, said she discussed the vice-presidential selection Wednesday with Clinton and no Texans were mentioned.

Cisneros also said it's unlikely he'll ever seek nationwide office. Instead, he said, he plans to help younger Hispanic leaders prepare to seek the presidency.

Cisneros, 44, considered by Walter Mondale for the ticket in 1984, has been the subject of speculation in this year's election.

"I am not a candidate and I don't expect to be at any time for such an office," Cisneros told The San Antonio Light in Sunday editions.

"I'm working as hard as I ever did on public issues, but I'm not in a position to do it from public office."

Cisneros, who served as mayor of the nation's 10th-largest city from 1981-89, now runs several business ventures, is deputy chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas and keeps busy with a nationwide lecture circuit.

"This is a time when I want to get my son healthy, I want to get my daughters through college, and I want to do a little bit better than live from paycheck to paycheck," he said. Cisneros' son, John Paul Cisneros, now 5, was born with congenital heart disease and other medical problems.

"This has also been a time of reflection, learning, thinking and attempting to comprehend in a deeper way the problems that confront our country," Cisneros said. "Hopefully, this will make me a better public servant in the future, but I don't expect to be a national candidate."

Cisneros said he is more interested in helping other Hispanics than in running himself.

"In very short order there will be five or six major national Hispanic figures who will be vice-presidential or presidential material," Cisneros said.

"But we're a few years away from having the person who can uncratically be called someone who can accede to the presidency of the United States," Cisneros said.

Mortgages more difficult for blacks and Hispanics

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — Whites and Asians have better chances to get a mortgage in Dallas than blacks and Hispanics, even if they have higher-paying jobs, a newspaper has reported.

The Dallas Morning News studied mortgage reports made available late last year to lending institutions.

"The numbers just prove something that we could only feel was true — that Dallas is in the prenatal stage of ensuring access to credit," said Barbara Cassel, Dallas executive director of the Enterprise Foundation, a non-profit group that helps first-time, low-income home buyers.

Ms. Cassel said the racial inequities could be worse yet because the report doesn't take into account those who are afraid to apply because of their low odds of being approved.

Helen Wyatt, a black mortgage broker from Oak Cliff, said she experienced the difficulties herself.

Although she was an established professional, lenders rejected her mortgage application because of prior credit problems, she said. Lenders would have worked through the problems for white customers, she said.

"Any blotch on the application of an African-American will get you disqualified, it seems," she said.

But bankers say the raw statistics do not reveal the factors behind lending decisions, such as how minorities with whites and Asians compare in credit history and job backgrounds.

"Every case is different, and you must literally study the files themselves to see why a loan is denied," said Catherine Bessant, NationsBank Corp. community investment officer.

"We've studied our files and just don't see racism being a factor," she said.

A bad credit history, for example, disqualifies potential black borrowers twice as often as white applicants at NationsBank, Ms. Bessant said.

The newspaper said other institutions reported similar circumstances affecting their lending decisions.

"Lending is usually a matter of studying cold numbers — race doesn't play a role," said Mark Mesec, general counsel of Amwest Savings in Dallas.

The government research has triggered congressional hearings and government investigations into institutions that have favored white applicants.

Consequently, lenders have begun encouraging more applications from low-income and minority neighborhoods, and some have changed their standards to allow more low-income borrowers to qualify.

The Morning News' analysis of the 16 most active Dallas metropolitan area lenders also revealed that:

— Blacks with annual incomes over $40,000 were rejected at a rate twice that of comparable whites, and Hispanics were denied 70 percent more often.

— Whites with incomes less than $40,000 a year had more success getting mortgages than did blacks making more than $40,000.

— Of all 1990 applications, only 6 percent were submitted by blacks, who make up 16 percent of the area's population; 5 percent were submitted by Hispanics, who make up 14 percent of the population.

— Asians and white rejection percentages were comparable, with 13.8 percent of Asians being denied and 12.3 percent of whites being rejected.

The News' investigation included a computer-assisted analysis of almost 29,000 mortgage applications during 1990 by 162 lenders in Dallas County.

Family hopeful of keeping baby

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — Family members who found an abandoned baby boy in a plastic bag and cared for him, briefly say they would like to raise the infant.

The unnamed boy remained hospitalized in fair condition at Texas Children's Hospital on Sunday, hospital spokeswoman Kelli Newman said. His mother has not been found.

A family law judge is expected to grant custody of the baby to the Harris County Children's Protective Services during a hearing scheduled for later today, said CPS employee Randy Joiner.

CPS would then have custody of the baby pending the outcome of an investigation. If the probe yields no parent, the court would allow the child to be put up for adoption.

Tamiko Wise, 19, found the baby Friday afternoon on her apartment doorstep. She lives with her cousin, Raymond Marshall, his wife, Sondra, and their 16-month-old daughter.

Ms. Wise and her family said Saturday they would like to visit the boy and get official custody.

"We would all gladly take him. I would love to. I would take him in a minute," said Marshall's mother, Patsy, who lives at the same apartment complex. "We can't get him out of our mind — a little precious thing like that."

Joiner said despite the family's bond with the premature infant they would have to go through the regular channels if the child is put up for adoption.

Ms. Wise said she was watching her cousin's baby Friday when she heard a knock at the door, and then the baby's cries. She took the 3-pound infant inside, cleaned him and wrapped him in a towel. Sondra Marshall called 911 when she came home about an hour later.

The discovery prompted Ms. Wise and her family to temporarily move out of the apartment, but they hope to relocate to another unit in the same northwest Houston complex next week.

INDIANAPOLIS — Gavin MacLeod, who sailed for 10 years as Capt. Merrill Stubing on "The Love Boat," is taking the helm of another famous ship in the stage revival of "Show Boat."

MacLeod will play Cap'n Andy in the 1927 musical by Oscar Hammerstein II and Jerome Kern. The tour opens Tuesday in Indianapolis. The show then goes to St. Louis, Atlanta, Pittsburgh and Kansas City.

"There's something about revivals," MacLeod said. "Everyone wants to sing along and it conjures up a lot of memories of when you first heard the song or saw the show. It's like being with an old friend."

MacLeod said the show will appeal to a new generation, including his seven children and three grandchildren, that is unfamiliar with America's classic musicals.

NEW YORK — Lee Majors says his favorite role since TV's "Six Million Dollar Man" is Dad to his 4-year-old daughter.

Two or three times a month, Majors serves apple juice and snacks to his daughter, Nikki, and her classmates at a preschool in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. "People magazine reported in its latest issue,

"I don't want to try and still be Warren Beatty or whoever," said Majors, who is back on television in the CBS series "Raven." "A lot of guys think they can be leading men forever. And believe me, we all can't be."

Majors has a 30-year-old son, Lee II, by his first wife, Kathy Robinson. He later married and divorced actress Farrah Fawcett. Nikki's mother is Karen Velez, Majors' current wife.

INDIANAPOLIS — Dionne Warwick says her campaign for AIDS education begins at home.

"I have two sons at that high-risk age," Warwick said. "Their libido's going a little mad, and they don't know what to do with it."

Warwick's sons by former husband Bill Elliot are David, 23, a songwriter and producer, and Damon, 19, a college student.

"I'm doing all I can to give them full knowledge," Warwick said. "Using that wisely is their best defense."

Warwick will sing at an AIDS benefit concert Friday at Clowes Hall that also features Stevie Wonder, Al Jarreau, Robert Guillaume and Stephanie Mills.

Warwick's hits include "That's What Friends Are For," "Do You Know the Way to San Jose?" and

"Walk on By."

LEXINGTON, Ky. — By now, Oliver North is getting used to seeing demonstrators at his speeches.

"I will tell you, it's pretty commonplace everywhere I go," the former White House aide said during a speech at a Baptist church Sunday as about a dozen people protested his role in the Iran-Contra scandal. "I know I'm a very controversial person."

North, a former Marine lieutenant colonel, was convicted in 1990 of obstructing Congress in the covert plan to aid Nicaraguan rebels with money from arms sales to Iran. The conviction was overturned on appeal, and a special prosecutor declined to retry North.

Horning had tied Arizona law enforcement in knots for seven weeks and had eluded a dragnet around Grand Canyon National Park. He was cornered Sunday under a backyard pavilion in the resort community of Sedona, about 80 miles south of the park and 100 miles north of Phoenix.

Asked by reporters if he was surprised that he eluded authorities for so long, Horning said, "Not at all. It should have been longer."

On Saturday, Horning took two British women hostage in Grand Canyon National Park and slipped past two roadblocks set up by some of the 400 law enforcement officers who were searching for him, authorities said.

Horning allegedly tied the women to a tree about 45 miles south of the park and fled in their rental car. Police spotted him and gave chase, and he shot at them, crashed the car into a tree and fled into woods near Flagstaff, authorities said.

Hours later, a couple in Sedona noticed him drinking from their outside faucet.

"When he stood up, I knew it was him," Jo Ann Campbell said. "I had heard the radio reports about the red sweatpants, and something inside just told me it was him."

Campbell notified authorities, who used a bloodhound to track him to the pavilion.

"He said that it was really a fun chase and that he enjoyed it," said Coconino County Sheriff Joe Richards.

Horning was serving four consecutive life sentences for a 1991 bank robbery in Winslow. Even if he raises the $2 million bail, he will be returned to prison to serve those sentences, sheriff's Sgt. Charlie Wong said.

Horning is also suspected in a 1990 dismemberment-slitting in California, and Alaska authorities investigated him in the 1991 sinking of a fishing boat after he was fired as cook. No charges were filed in that case.

On May 12, Horning walked out of the state prison at Florence, dressed in a lab coat. He evaded helicopters and dog teams and made his way to the mountains and forests of north-central Arizona he had explored as a youth in Winslow.

Horning earned the grudging admiration of his pursuers, who compared him to Rambo. He escaped from huge posses using tricks learned during 11 months of Army reconnaissance work. He walked in circles and figure-eights to confuse the bloodhounds and traveled in the daytime to ensure he didn't leave tracks.

Authorities said Horning broke into at least two cabins, taking food, a gun and keys to a truck and leaving notes signed "Danny Ray."

"Thanks for the use of your home!" he wrote. "You can tell the cops to send my backpack to my folks' house. And stop following me."

Mitterrand's wife escapes Iraqi car-bomb explosion

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Danielle Mitterrand, wife of French President Francois Mitterrand, narrowly escaped today when a car-bomb exploded near her motorcade in northern Iraq, killing four people, an Iraqi opposition group said.

The bomb, which went off at 8:45 a.m., wounded 19 people, the group said.

In Paris, Foreign Ministry spokesman Daniel Bernard said, "We condemn the this kind of attack in the strongest terms." He provided no details.

United Nations sources in Geneva gave an account similar to the one from the Iraqi opposition group. They initially reported 10 injured, but later raised the figure to 19, including 10 who suffered serious wounds.

The U.N. sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Mrs. Mitterrand's six-car convoy continued on its way after the explosion. Mrs. Mitterrand is on a three-day visit to Kurdish areas in northern Iraq — a tour not arranged through Baghdad.

U.N. agencies have operated relief programs in northern Iraq since last year's failed Kurdish uprising against Iraqi President Saddam Hussein.

The Iraqi National Congress, an umbrella group of organizations opposed to Saddam, said the explosion killed three Iraqi

Danielle Mitterrand

Kurdish guerrillas who were traveling in the last car of Mrs. Mitterrand's motorcade.

The guerrillas were in the motorcade to guard Mrs. Mitterrand, the congress said in a statement faxed to The Associated Press in Nicosia.

The fourth person killed was a 10-year-old boy, the statement added.

The French government has been a strong supporter of the Kurdish drive for autonomy. Mrs. Mitterrand visited refugee camps in Iran in April 1991 and has been a longtime proponent of Kurdish rights. She also founded the French human rights group France-Libertes.

The official Iraqi News Agency today quoted the Iraqi newspaper Al-Qadisiya as saying Mrs. Mitterrand's visit was "foolish behavior and a rude violation of Iraq's dignity and sovereignty."

The report, which appeared before the bombing, accused Mrs. Mitterrand of having "deep contacts" with "the dissident gangs in the north."

The Iraqi opposition group quoted unidentified witnesses as saying a Toyota Land Cruiser exploded in a 60-foot-high fireball as the last car in the motorcade passed near the town of Sulaymaniyah, 170 miles north of Baghdad.

Several of the injured people were in a bus that was passing the motorcade from the opposite direction, the statement added. One U.N. source said pieces of metal reportedly scattered 150 feet, setting another car on fire.

Mrs. Mitterrand, who has often visited refugees in remote parts of the world, was accompanied on her visit by France's minister for health and humanitarian affairs, Bernard Kouchner. He also was not hurt.

U.N. sources in Geneva said initial reports indicated the explosive-laden car had a U.N. logo on it, possibly as a disguise. But they said later reports said the logo might have been that of a private relief group.

Uprising rocks Leavenworth

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

LEAVENWORTH, Kan. — Isolated fights in a prison auditorium exploded into a large-scale uprising in which one inmate was stabbed to death and three were injured.

About 300 inmates took over the auditorium, a food service area and a recreation yard at the maximum-security prison Sunday night. Guards put down the uprising several hours later after moving in with tear gas and batons.

No hostages were taken, but one guard was rescued by a fire truck that lowered its basket over the prison wall, said prison spokesman Chuck Strickland. A wire fence was between the inmates and the guard, authorities said.

Strickland said the prison was damaged, but he declined to elaborate.

Inmates began quarreling in the auditorium early Sunday evening.

Prison disturbance

Strickland said officials were uncertain what caused the first fights.

Prisons in Washington. "It didn't appear to be anything that was planned."

About 100 guards with batons and tear gas moved in about three hours after the uprising began. The disturbance was quelled 1 1/2 hours later.

One inmate died of stab wounds, and three others were stabbed, Strickland said. He said two of the three were treated and released, and the third was hospitalized in stable condition.

Lt. Col. John Head, an Army spokesman at nearby Fort Leavenworth, said an inmate was treated at a hospital there for tear gas inhalation, and the guard who was rescued by the firefighters was treated for anxiety.

The prison houses 1,669 inmates in one of the country's highest security units. It also has 311 inmates in a minimum security camp.

Sarajevo airlift 'miracle'

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — U.N. peacekeepers proclaimed the mounting international airlift a "small miracle" today but a new threat arose as Croatian nationalists declared their own state in one part of the republic.

U.N. commander Gen. Satish Nambiar said Sunday he had renewed promises from the newly independent Bosnian government and anti-secessionist Serb forces to obey the June 29 cease-fire that opened the Sarajevo airport.

Although shelling that pounded the contested neighborhoods around the airport for hours overnight made the accord ever more fragile, 16 relief flights reached Sarajevo on Sunday and 15 were expected today.

But a further roadblock to international peacemaking efforts came as a faction of Croat nationalists declared their own state within Bosnia, already divided by the April proclamation of a Serbian republic in nearly two-thirds of the republic taken at the start of the civil war.

The state of "Herzeg-Bosnia," without definite borders, was outlined Saturday by Mate Boban, a Croat leader with a force of about 30,000 soldiers controlling southwestern Bosnia. His army has been making significant advances against Serb-held positions to the east.

The Croat declaration was condemned Sunday as "illegal and illegitimate" by the Muslim-led Bosnian government in Sarajevo, which includes Croat representatives, the Yugoslav news agency Tanjug reported.

It was not clear whether the Croat declaration would stick, further jeopardizing chances of creating an independent Bosnia from the former Yugoslav republic of 4.7 million people where 44 percent are Muslim, nearly one-third are Serb and one in six are Croat.

Croatian President Franjo Tudjman, feared by some Bosnians to have designs on Croat-dominated areas of the republic, said today in Zagreb that his government recognizes Bosnia's independence.

"But, he said, "in view of the (Serbian) aggression... it is difficult to determine where power in Bosnia currently lies."

Tudjman also declared, "The war in Croatia is definitely over." U.N. peacekeepers had assumed control of four disputed regions and Yugoslav army troops and Serb irregulars were withdrawing, he said.

In Belgrade late Sunday, 40,000 demonstrators capped a week of protests demanding the ouster of Slobodan Milosevic, the president of the Serbian-dominated remains of Yugoslavia who is blamed for fueling the warfare.

As protesters in front of Parliament chanted "Get lost!" pensioners joined in, waving empty wallets in the air to protest economic hardships from U.N.-imposed sanctions that have pushed inflation past 100 percent a month.

The newly nominated Yugoslav prime minister, Milan Panic, today pledged to stop the fighting in Bosnia within 100 days in a letter to the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The international airlift to Sarajevo, with the potential to be among the most dramatic rescue efforts mounted in the post-World War II years, "is going better than we expected on just about all fronts," U.N. spokesman Fred Eckhard said today.

"The security situation is extremely precarious and the fact that the relief flights have come in without incident so far is a small miracle," he said.

Initial U.N. expectations were for about eight flights daily. There were 12 on Saturday and among Sunday's 16 arrivals was a Russian transport carrying military supplies for 1,000 French commandos and Canadians guarding the airport.

However, only nine flights were arranged through U.N. coordinators. Eckhard said "donors being a little too eager" means unscheduled flights are passing over "very nervous" gun positions without warning from U.N. monitors.

Tom Foley bounces back

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Just a few weeks ago, Speaker Thomas S. Foley looked like a casualty of perk embarrassment. But he has quietly fought his way back from the political abyss.

It was a long way to come.

Democratic colleagues blamed their top dog for the scandal at the House bank, where they routinely wrote penalty-free overdrafts because of sloppy bookkeeping and lax enforcement.

Instead of controlling the crisis, Foley repeatedly was verbally beaten up by the minority Republicans, including a group of freshmen. Although they always thought of him as more of a gentleman than a general, he looked so feeble that many Democratic colleagues spoke openly of the need to replace him.

"Stenholm for Speaker" buttons, referring to conservative Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas, appeared. Others, including Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., went out of their way to say they were not running against Foley.

But then, as presidential politics took the spotlight off Congress and eased the crisis, Foley began to move. He grabbed attention on the legislative front and worked quietly behind the scenes to shore up his position with his colleagues.

Foley predicted publicly that a balanced budget constitutional amendment might win, and then set about to defeat it. And, ironically, as the bank scandal matured, Foley's parliamentary power was enhanced.

Many senior members of Congress, tarred by the scandal or just tired of it, decided they'd had enough. Their retirements began to open desirable positions on important committees — positions Foley fort, and they blame him a little less for the problems at the bank.

"The job can trap you here in the office in a sort of a series of meetings, resolving problems, facing difficulties, doing schedules and so on. I think it's important for me to hear members concerns, hear them first hand."

"Who could have done a better job?" asked Rep. Mike Parker, D-Miss. The speaker was easy to blame "when bullets were zinging all around," he said, but "after you move away from that, you're able to look at it more realistically."

"I'm pushing Stenholm for vice president," he said.

"I think that in the last few weeks moving toward a legislative agenda has taken a lot of pressure off the speaker," said Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif. "I think he's been more aggressive... It's helping."

Panetta, whose Capitol Hill housemate, Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., is a Foley rival, said Foley was helped by the reservoir of good will colleagues have toward him.

It's good to be liked, and Foley has taken steps to play to that strength. He said in an interview last week that he was spending more time in the cloakrooms, dining hall and on the floor.

"The job can trap you here in the office in a sort of a series of meetings, resolving problems, facing difficulties, doing schedules and so on," he said. "I think it's important for me to hear members concerns, hear them first hand."

"I think members have seen that I have tried to represent the interests of the House and want to continue to do that," he said. "I think that the problems associated with the House bank are going to be increasingly seen as institutional problems."

Adlai Stevenson once said that "someone must fill the gap between platitudes and bayonets." Foley seems to want that job, even if it doesn't create a fervent following.

Free trade could benefit

The results are in regarding Texans' opinions on the U.S.-Mexico free-trade agreement and the numbers are less than impressive on behalf of the agreement.

While many of us in West Texas feel the agreement would be good for our region, Texans overall feel the arrangement would be far more beneficial to Mexico than Texas.

In a recent public opinion survey conducted by The Texas Poll, 45 percent of 1,006 randomly selected adults said they felt the agreement would significantly help Texas' economy while 73 percent said they felt the agreement would significantly help Mexico's economy.

An almost even number felt the agreement would put a lot of Texans out of work — 48 percent — while 54 percent said they felt it would be a wise economic and cultural move. And 40 percent said they felt the agreement would lead to the exploitation of poor Mexican workers.

Could the proposed agreement benefit Big Spring and Howard County or are we too far away from the border?

The possibility does exist for the development of business relations between new or existing firms here and in Mexico that could help with the economic growth both across the Rio Grande and here at home.

Like any other business proposition, the free-trade agreement is one that will either survive or fail because of the attitudes of the business community and the feedback they receive from the public.

While we feel we are far enough away from the border that the likelihood that Big Spring will benefit directly from the agreement is remote. The possibility does exist, however, that local businesses can work with businesses in communities closer to the border and benefit indirectly from the agreement.

There are logistical problems, but aren't problems just involved opportunities?

Roe vs. Wade, the case that established a right to abortion, has not been overruled by (the) Supreme Court decision on Pennsylvania's abortion law, but it has been somewhat constricted. The court (on June 29) upheld most of the restrictions on abortion that the government of Pennsylvania had seen fit to adopt. Some see that decision as the beginning of the end for the Roe abortion right.

It strikes us as of foremost importance, however, that the court itself does not see the decision that way. Justices (Sandra Day O'Connor and David) Souter specifically said that Roe vs. Wade remains the law of the land and that this court, at least, will not overturn it.

The court did rule that Pennsylvania — and thus any state — can regulate abortion by requiring doctors to keep detailed records of the abortions they perform; requiring a dependent minor to get the consent of either one parent or a judge; informing those who seek an abortion of the nature of the reproductive cycle and alternatives to ending their pregnancies; and requiring women to wait at least 24 hours after receiving that information.

But these regulations hardly constitute serious restrictions on the right to an abortion. On the contrary, one of these guidelines strikes us as quite reasonable — mandating that a minor get consent from parent or judge — while the others are, at worst, tolerable.

Times Union, Albany, N.Y.

The Supreme Court's split decision . . . reaffirming a woman's fundamental constitutional right to an abortion while expanding the states' powers to define that right ever more narrowly, underscored the folly of trying to build a court around a single issue.

Despite the undisguised efforts of the Reagan and Bush administrations over the past 12 years to fashion a conservative court that would overturn the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision that put the imprimatur of the Constitution on abortion, the decision was written by three Reagan-Bush appointees.

As retirement approaches for Justice Harry Blackmun, who is now 83, it appears that the next president of the United States will have the opportunity to nominate a justice.

With so many issues to be interpreted, and with the integrity of the Constitution at stake, President Bush or his successor should look beyond the nominee's position on abortion and select the very best judge he can find.

Want to attack the tobacco industry? The American Medical Association has a plan. High-speed chases? Cut 'em out, the AMA says. Fireworks? Get rid of 'em, the good docs demand.

But what about dealing with problems of medical ethics and high health care costs? No thanks, the AMA says. That seems to be the gist of the action from the 434-member House of Delegates (the policy-making body of the 290,000-member AMA).

The AMA will continue to push for exemption from antitrust laws, ostensibly to allow collective bargaining for fees — but raising a more frightening specter of price-fixing.

And the delegates decided not to encourage medical providers to post their prices. It even softened its stance against doctors sending patients to clinics in which they have a financial interest.

Is it any wonder socialized medicine is gaining support?

Court's hate crime law is truly bad

WASHINGTON — Bad cases, it is truly said; make bad law. The maxim should be extended: Bad law makes more bad law. In its recent 5-4 decision on hateful speech, the Supreme Court made enough bad law to last for months to come.

These were the facts. At roughly 2 o'clock on the morning of June 21, 1990, several white boys in St. Paul, Minn., had a great idea. They made a crude cross by taping together a couple of wooden chair legs. They soaked it with gasoline. Then they sneaked onto the lawn of a house recently occupied by a black family and set the cross afire. What brave boys!

Thus the juveniles sought to express an idea — the idea, perhaps, that blacks are inferior, or that blacks are unwelcome in white neighborhoods. Maybe the implied threat would cause the blacks to leave. Who can say what the dear little bigots had in mind?

In any event, police swiftly found the juveniles and charged them under a recently adopted city ordinance. (Four justices dissented.)

"Whoever places on public or private property a symbol, object, appellation, characterization or graffiti, including, but not limited to, a burning cross or Nazi swastika, which one knows or has reasonable grounds to know arouses anger, alarm or resentment in others on the basis of race, color, creed, religion or gender, commits disorderly conduct and shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

If the St. Paul prosecutor had kept his wits about him, he never would have tried the boys under the bias-motivated ordinance. He would have charged them with arson, or trespass, or under a state law punishing terroristic threats.

Instead, the city charged them under the ordinance. That began the chain of bad law. The youths were convicted. The case wound its way through state courts, and on June 22 all nine members of the U.S. Supreme Court agreed that the ordinance is unconstitutional. (Four justices dissented.)

The law, they concluded, is "overbroad." It violates the First Amendment by punishing only certain forms of expressive conduct that cause hurt feelings. If the court had stopped at that point, its decision would have been right in line with a long string of decisions dealing with hateful or unpopular speech. But no. Justice Antonin Scalia, writing for the majority, created a thicket of impenetrable reasoning. He plunged in, dragging Rehnquist, Kennedy, Souter and Thomas behind him.

When they emerged, 18 pages later, they had thoroughly muddled the law on "fighting words." Justice Byron White, writing for the four dissenters, growled that Scalia and his colleagues were "driven by the frequently irresistible impulse of judges to tinker with the First Amendment." The majority's decision, said White, "is mischievous at best and will surely confuse the lower courts." I say amen to that.

Scalia is by far the most skilled writer on the high court. Ordinarily his opinions provide models of clarity, but everyone has had days, and in this instance Scalia had a horrible day. One gropes through his maze, tripping at every step over vines of tangled prose.

As best I can make out what he said, the city ordinance went too far. It also did not go far enough. The ordinance made it unlawful to arouse resentment by shouting "kike" or "nigger," but not by shouting "scab" or "communist."

The law punishes only certain fighting words. Said Scalia: "Selectivity of this sort creates the possibility that the city is seeking to handicap the expression of particular ideas."

How's that again? There is nothing unconstitutional in "handicapping the expression of particular ideas." Government may handicap the expression of ideas about cigarettes, obscenity and libel. If St. Paul had tailored its ordinance to apply only to speech calculated to provoke imminent riot, nothing in the First Amendment would stand in the way. In Holmes' famous comment, the Constitution accords no protection to the nut who cries "Fire!" in a crowded theater.

What does Scalia's turgid opinion mean to the "hateful speech" codes of various colleges? My guess is that it knocks them out. Like St. Paul's flawed ordinance, these college codes forbid speech that causes hurt feelings based upon race, color, creed, religion or gender. College students should be made of sterner stuff.

My thought would be to write off Scalia's opinion as no more than a belch at a black-tie dinner. Let us look the other way. This distinguished justice can do better. He rarely will do much worse.

It's contest time again, you jokers

It's contest time again, you jokers.

It's time once again for the Lewis Grizzard Clean Joke Contest. This will be the second such event. The first, held some time in the '80s, I forget the exact year, was a resounding success.

I received over 5,000 jokes from all over the country, not to mention parts of New Jersey.

The joke I like the most went like this:

A lovely girl moved into a small town and told a local young man if he would take her to the drive-in theater the following Saturday night, she would show him a little glimpse of heaven, but he had to have protection.

The young man, anxious to practice safe sex as we all should, went to the local pharmacy Saturday morning and asked the druggist for a condom.

The druggist smiled knowingly and sold him one.

When the young man appeared at the front door of his date's home that evening, she invited him in to meet her parents, who were playing Monopoly.

The young man said, "I love to play Monopoly. Instead of going to the drive-in, let's stay and play Monopoly with your parents."

The young woman was puzzled indeed. After several hours the young man rose, said goodbye to everyone and walked to his car.

The young woman, quite angry, followed.

When they reached the car, she snapped, "Well, I didn't know you were such a fan of Monopoly."

"Yeah," the young man replied, "and I didn't know your daddy was a druggist."

I realize there is a sexual theme here, but it still qualifies as a clean joke since you don't have to say any really bad words to tell it.

I've decided to hold a second Lewis Grizzard Clean Joke Contest for a couple of reasons.

1. I firmly believe a really good, clean joke is the best kind of joke, but few people ever tell me any really good, clean jokes.

People come up to me and say, "Here's a joke you can use in your routine," and the first three words would gag Eddie Murphy.

So I need some new really good, clean jokes.

2. We don't laugh nearly as much as we used to in this country because of the new sensitivity where too many people get their panties in a wad too often because they've forgotten how to laugh, especially at themselves.

Perhaps if I can get a lot of people to start thinking about clean jokes again, it will bring at least a little more humor to a world that sorely needs it.

Here are the contest rules:

1. If you are unable to type your joke, try your best to write legibly. I've gotten some great set-ups to jokes before and then couldn't make out the punchlines.

2. Nobody is going to make any money out of this except maybe me if I use your joke on an upcoming album and it sells. However, I will put your name as a contributor on the album cover.

3. I will use as many of the good jokes that will fit in a follow-up column and give you credit. If I happen to use one of yours.

4. The person who sends the joke that I select as the best one will receive a valuable premium, which I haven't decided upon yet, but it will be something you'll be able to wear, drink, eat, or hang on your wall.

Address your good, clean jokes to the Lewis Grizzard Clean Joke Contest, care of King Features Syndicate, 235 East 45th St., New York, N.Y. 10017.

And remember to laugh once a day. It's better for you than any laxative known to man.

In these days of power tennis, Agassi illustrated that thundering groundstrokes can be just as important as booming serves.

"I think the game has moved toward a higher power serve, power game," he said. "I think I have definitely made a mark for those who do play like I do. I think I have given them a bit of confidence."

Wimbledon, where serve-and-volleyers like John McEnroe, Boris Becker and Stefan Edberg have dominated for the past decade, was considered the least-likely place for Agassi to make his breakthrough.

"It is quite an irony," he said. "I really had my chances to fulfill a lot of my dreams and I have not come through them in the past. To Andre Agassi holds his head and sinks to his knees after winning the men's singles final against Goran Ivanisevic on the Centre Court at Wimbledon Sunday.

After Ivanisevic hit a backhand volley into the net on match point, Agassi collapsed and lay face down on the grass for several seconds. When he got up, he was crying.

"So many things were going through my mind — Wimbledon champion, Grand Slam winner, a lot of months and years of people doubting me," he said.

The doubters abounded after Agassi folded in his three previous Grand Slam finals — losing to Andre Gomez at the 1990 French Open, Pete Sampras at the 1990 U.S. Open and Jim Courier at the 1991 French Open.

"You would think being in the fourth Grand Slam final I would go into it almost with that same snowball mentality: 'I hope I don't lose the fourth one,'" Agassi said. "But I felt extremely relaxed. I never felt tension. I just felt ability. I felt myself overflowing with this desire to want to go out there and hit shots."

Did he ever.

Sunday's final lived up to its billing as a duel between the best serve in the game against the best return.

The 6-foot-4 Ivanisevic fired 37 aces, a record for a Wimbledon final. His total for the fortnight was 206, a record for any two-week tournament.

But Agassi held his ground, waiting for his chances, and broke Ivanisevic three times in the match, while losing his own serve just twice.

Ivanisevic came to the net 91 times — only to be passed by Agassi an astounding 26 times.

"He was passing me, like, unbelievable," Ivanisevic said. "He was hitting so hard. Nothing to do."

"I knew he was going to get his aces and his love games," Agassi said.

do it here is more than I could ever ask for."

For three years, from 1988-90, Agassi hadn't even bothered to show up at Wimbledon, preferring to stay home in Las Vegas. Back then, he didn't like grass or Wimbledon's predominantly white dress code.

It's a decision Agassi now regrets.

"I am really kind of sad," he said. "This tournament has offered me and my life so much. It's a shame that I didn't respect it a little earlier."

Dream Team finishes mission with blowout

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — It took Larry Bird just over two minutes to sum up the first Olympic qualifying tournament to be held in the United States.

The sore back of the Boston Celtics forward had allowed him to play in just one game until Sunday. That was one more game than the U.S. team was given by any of its six opponents.

He took the court with 2:04 to play with smiles on every face in Veterans Memorial Coliseum, just as there had been all nine days of the Tournament of the Americas.

He scored two points in that time, not quite the pace the Dream Team had managed in blowout after blowout, but it helped keep the margin of victory as high as expected.

"I played the last couple of minutes obviously because I wasn't going to get hurt," said Bird, a co-captain of the team along with Magic Johnson. "I was almost sleeping until the time Magic ripped my pants off."

The United States was leading Venezuela by 45 points in the gold medal game — just below its 51.5 average margin of victory — when the sellout crowd of 12,888 started chanting for Bird to make a cameo appearance.

Johnson did indeed pull Bird's warmup pants and top off and stood menacingly over his rival of the last 13 years as he tied his sneakers.

The crowd roared as Bird took the court and loved it even more as he got off three shots until finally scoring with 16 seconds left for the game's final margin of 127-80.

It was only fitting that Bird, who started the tournament for the United States with the first basket, scored the last.

"Magic was really giving him a hard time," said Chris Mullin, who had 12 points on Sunday. "Larry had been giving everybody a hard time every time they missed a shot. You knew one thing; he was going to get some shots off. I don't know if he's really that funny or if he was because he had all that time to sit there and think of things to say."

The decision on whether Bird will continue to sit when the team opens play in Barcelona on July 26 against Angola will be made after he returns to Boston for treatment.

"I figure that by the end of next week I should be OK," Bird said, then he began to talk of the Olympics. "Personally, I can't wait. I hope I can play. I think once we get there, we'll become more serious and more focused, and we'll be all business."

That has to be a scary thought for the other 11 teams which have qualified — Venezuela, Puerto Rico and Brazil being the other three from this competition.

— Injuries were the only negative thing for the Americans. In addition to Bird, John Stockton broke a bone in his leg and his status for Barcelona is in doubt; Patrick Ewing missed the first game as he recovered from a broken thumb sustained in practice in San Diego, and Clyde Drexler missed one game as he nursed a sore knee.

"I tip my hat to the U.S. team. They are a great bunch of players," said 39-year-old Venezuelan point guard Sam Shepard, who played at Delaware State. "At halftime I was a little disconcerted with the other players for not being focused on what we wanted to do."

Sheehan saves best for last

SYLVANIA, Ohio (AP) — Patty Sheehan saved her best for last at the Jamie Farr Toledo Classic.

Sheehan wasn't even on the leader board for the start of Sunday's final round after posting a 1-over-par 143 for the first two rounds of the tournament.

But she shot a 5-under 66 on Sunday to finish with a 4-under 109. That gave her a one-stroke victory over Brandie Burton, Heather Drew, Tammie Green and second-round leader Deb Richard, all of whom finished tied for second.

Sheehan had to wait almost two hours for 27 other golfers to finish their rounds before she could be assured of victory.

At one point in the final round, Drew was 5-under for the tournament, but she fell back with three bogeys and one birdie on the final 12 holes. She finished with a 70.

LPGA

"As quickly as I got them, I gave them back," Drew said about her birdies. "When I went to minus-5, I thought I could win if I could just keep it going."

Richard started out with a triple-bogey 7 on the first hole and never recovered. She finished with a 73.

"The right things didn't happen at the right time," Richard said. "I didn't strike the ball all that well today. There was some indecision when I was on the tees."

The final golfer with a chance to tie Sheehan and force a playoff was Green, who missed a 17-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole.

"I felt like I hit a good putt. If it would have had a little more speed, it may have gone in," Green said.

Green wasn't the only one who had problems with the par-5, 532-yard 18th hole. Sheehan and five others were the only players among the 76 remaining in the field to have a birdie on the hole in the final round.

"The pin on 18 was a sucker pin. There were only four yards to the left of the green and there was a bunker in front," Sheehan said.

"I was thinking I had to hit to the right of the flag to get into position. It ended up being just perfect, even though I pulled it."

With the wind in her face on the 18th, Sheehan hit a 6-iron about 8 feet to the right of the pin and made the putt for a birdie that gave her the lead.

After that, all she could do was wait.

"There was a lot of nervous energy as I kept watching the leader board," Sheehan said.

Crenshaw ends two-year drought

LEMONT, Ill. (AP) — Four other men either led or shared the lead over the final round before Ben Crenshaw broke a two-year non-winning string with a victory in the Western Open.

Once again, Greg Norman was there — and once again he was a frustrated runner-up.

Masters champion Fred Couples was there, as were Chip Beck and Duffy Waldorf and Blaine McCallister.

"When you get into something like that, with so many players having a chance to win, for you to win one or two other players have to shoot themselves in the foot," Crenshaw said after his cliff-hanging victory on Sunday.

"That's what happened."

The chief foot-shooters were Beck and Norman, the Australian who once ruled as golf's premier player but now is trying to fight his way out of the worst slump of his

Beck was the first. In a tie for the lead, he hit his approach on the 17th hole into a hazard, made double bogey and was out of it.

Then it was Norman, who was staked to sole possession of the lead when Crenshaw made bogey from a bunker on the 16th.

Norman, playing behind Crenshaw, then followed with a three-putt bogey on the same hole while Ben ran in a 15-footer for birdie on the 17th.

"That putt meant all the world to me," Crenshaw said of the shot that proved to be the winner in his first victory since 1990.

"After not playing so well for a couple of years, you begin to wonder, to have your doubts," he said after a closing 69 and a 276 total, 12 under par on the Dubsread course at the Cog Hill golf complex.

The 16th victory of his 20-season pro career was worth $198,000 from the total purse of $1.1 million and pushed his earnings to $390,473 for the year.

But it did not qualify him for the British Open. He left immediately for the airport and an overnight flight to Glasgow to compete in the Scottish Open, beginning Wednesday, in an attempt to gain a place in the British Open field.

Norman, who blew a 5-shot lead with a 41 on the back nine in this tournament a year ago, let two leads slip through his fingers this time.

Columbia tops longevity mark

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

SPACE CENTER, Houston — Columbia today broke its own record for the longest space shuttle flight ever during a marathon voyage one of its seven astronauts compared to "an extended camp-out trip."

Mission Control congratulated the crew by playing the 1960 hit "Stay," by Maurice Williams and the Zodiacs, which asks, "Oh, won't you stay just a little bit longer?"

"We enjoyed that," shuttle commander Richard N. Richards said, adding that he and pilot Ken Bowersox were celebrating by doing the twist — "about the only thing you can do without going out of control up here."

Columbia's flight became the longest shuttle mission during its 174th orbit at 9:14 a.m. EDT, surpassing the 10 days, 21 hours, and one minute that the space shuttle stayed aloft in 1990. The Spacelab mission is planned to last 13 days.

"The physical aspect of this is not very demanding at all. Actually, it's the mental that I think challenges most of the people. This is rather like an extended camp-out trip, if you know what I mean. So it's not really that bad," astronaut Carl Meade said today.

In the crew's sixth broadcast interview of the mission, CBS' "This Morning" news anchor Connie Chung asked Meade which he would choose first after landing: a hot shower, a cold drink or a home-cooked meal?

"The shower, for sure," Meade answered with a grin. In the shuttle, astronauts can take only sponge baths and use a spray soap to wash their hair.

The shuttle record spans only a fraction of the 83-day U.S. record space stay, set aboard Skylab in 1973-1974. It also falls far short of the 366 days two cosmonauts spent aboard the Russian space station Mir, the world record.

But astronaut Ellen Baker, a physician, said today that the experiments shuttle astronauts undergo still provide important medical data on life in space.

"We are gradually lengthening the flights, taking small steps and gaining a better understanding of how man adapts to longer periods of weightlessness. So it's true that we had long flights in Skylab, but we didn't learn everything we needed to know in the Skylab era," she said.

In one experiment Sunday, payload commander Bonnie Dunbar was stuffed in a wrinkled, white, waist-high vacuum sack designed to ease the accumulation of blood in the upper body in zero gravity.

Dunbar sipped water and swallowed salt tablets while a vent to the vacuum of space gradually reduced pressure inside the 5-foot cylinder, sucking blood from her head and chest into her legs.

NASA hopes to ease the transition from space to Earth and keep homeward-bound astronauts from fainting when gravity causes blood to rush to their lower bodies.

While bobbing inside the cocoon for the four-hour treatment, Dunbar, a biomedical engineer who was on Columbia's record-setting flight in 1990, assured a reporter in a space-to-Earth interview that it wasn't as bad as it looked.

"Actually, I am pretty comfortable," she said, grinning. "We believe the research here is necessary."

Astronauts also become dehydrated in weightlessness, hence the need to drink lots of liquids and consume salt tablets, especially just before flight's end. Columbia's crew is trying a new fluid-retaining medication.

The five men and two women, who have been conducting round-the-clock scientific experiments in Spacelab, are scheduled to return aboard the Russian space station Mir, the world record.

Summit

own and did not believe there was a need to create a special account for this purpose. He said various countries already have made pledges totaling $650 million over the next two years, and that should be sufficient.

Global economic problems commanded high-level attention as well.

U.S. officials continued to tone down recent administration criticism of Japan and Germany for doing too little to spark world economic growth but suggested that the final summit communiqué would simply paper over differences over interest rates and government budget deficits in individual countries.

But Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady, speaking from Munich on CBS, made clear that given its druthers the United States would want Germany and Japan to "follow on U.S. leadership" by lowering interest rates to spur investment and jobs.

The summit got off to a dramatic start as several hundred demonstrators surged against police barricades outside the palace where the leaders were assembling. Authorities said dozens broke through before being pushed back.

Earlier, a firebomb was thrown through a bank window by summit opponents, causing an estimated $125,000 damage. A note left behind said, "Attack the World Economics Summit."

Each of the leaders, facing political and economic problems at home, hoped the summit would demonstrate their concern for their own domestic interests.

Bush, posing for pictures at breakfast today with West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, was asked whether the summit would provide jobs for Americans.

Kohl answered first, saying "certainly." Bush, appearing tired after his transcultural flight Sunday, initially paused and then replied, "Absolutely, it's a yes."

Preparations for the three-day summit dominated this Bavarian capital, known for its castles and beer drinking. Thousands of police kept a tight security screen around the leaders to prevent a repeat of the terrorism here that horrified the world at the 1972 summer Olympics.

There was little — if any — expectation that the leaders would overcome bitter disagreements about revamping the world trading system. The negotiations have been stalled for 18 months by Bush's insistence that European countries slash their farm subsidies far deeper than they are willing to accept.

Kohl, the summit host, said in a television interview on Sunday that he didn't expect a major breakthrough on the trade issue.

The summiters likewise were unlikely to reach any significant agreement on steps to end a two-year global economic slowdown.

Prospects for major compromises were diminished by the political need for the leaders to appear strong at home. Aside from Britain's John Major, who recently was re-elected, all of the heads of state are sagging in the polls. They all have problems with their economies.

Eager to demonstrate concern on the domestic front, Bush squeezed in an appearance at a photo opportunity today for an agreement to build a BMW auto manufacturing plant in South Carolina. The president joined Gov. Carroll Campbell at a signing ceremony before the summit opened.

Campbell, southern political director for the Bush re-election campaign, said the BMW investment would create about 10,000 jobs. "I am here to tell you we live in a world economy," he said.

Bush also conferred with Italy's new prime minister, Giuliano Amato.

Arriving here Sunday night after a brief but emotional visit to Poland, Bush held a working dinner with French President Francois Mitterrand.

Franco-American relations have become increasingly tense in recent months. Mitterrand's government is regarded by Washington as the chief roadblock to a successful conclusion of talks aimed at liberalizing world trade because of its objections to cutting farm

Policemen lead away a demonstrator who, with a group of others, entered the security area around the Munich Castle to protest the economic summit that started today. The leaders of the seven most industrialized countries meet in Munich for their annual two-day summit.

Bush and Kohl announced in April a $24 billion Western aid package. However, much of that money was contingent on Russia receiving approval from the IMF for its economic reform efforts. Sunday's announcement from Russia cleared the way for the IMF to extend a $1 billion advance to Russia.

Quilting takes different twist

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

CONCORD, N.H. — The gentle art of quilting has taken a belligerent turn, pitting quilters in this country against Chinese manufacturers that copy American heirlooms.

Actually, the quilters' target is not so much China as the Smithsonian Institution, repository of American folk art and artifacts of culture and industry, which sold China the rights to four classic 19th-century patterns.

Now, department stores such as Filene's and mail-order companies such as Land's End and Spiegel stock the reproductions made in China through a contract signed by the Smithsonian with a New York importer, American Pacific Enterprises.

They sell for about $150, one-quarter the price of an American-made quilt. That does not sit well with U.S. quilters, especially since the copies bear tags with the Smithsonian's name.

Ironically, the Smithsonian doesn't sell the copies — designs based on originals in the National Museum of American History — either at its shops or by mail. It sells only original, handmade American quilts.

"You have cheap, slave-labor-produced quilts passed off as American quilts, taking away work from Americans," says Eva Sartwell of Concord.

To Sartwell, 68, a retired super-market cashier, quilting is a hobby that gives her artistic satisfaction and heirlooms to her grandchildren. Her livelihood is not at stake, but the former labor and political activist says she "couldn't let this go unchallenged."

Marilyn Hancock, who runs Country Quilters in Hopkinton, N.H., is equally blunt. The Smithsonian "is supported by the taxpayers," she says, "and it is cutting our throats and devaluing quilts."

Hancock said she cannot estimate how the Chinese copies have affected her sales because her business has been growing. "Nor do I know how many people who walk in here and then walk out have bought one of the cheap ones."

Sartwell and members of New Hampshire's 16 quilt guilds, groups that meet periodically to discuss and practice their art, have organized a petition drive and a letter-writing campaign to rescind the Smithsonian's contract.

Hancock, one of 3,200 quilt retailers in the country, says national quilting groups estimate the Smithsonian deal will cost U.S. quilters $46 million in sales annually.

Keeping kids happy, safe while traveling

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — With school getting out, parents should begin preparing travel activities to occupy children during those long hours between home and their vacation spots.

Joni Yoakam, a retired professor in Amarillo College's Child Care Assistant program, said that planning ahead is the most important thing for happy family trips.

Melony Curtis, coordinator and assistant professor for the program, said parents should let children suggest rules for the car before leaving.

"They should be things like don't climb on the seats, stay in your seat belts, and don't roll the windows up and down," Curtis said. "That way if they start trying to get out of their seat belts, you can say, 'Remember, we agreed not to do that.'"

Yoakam said that 1- to 5-year-olds enjoy looking at postcards or pictures cut from magazines. She suggested old greeting cards as another possibility.

"They have lots of interesting things to look at, and you're also getting language development,"

Yoakam said. "A lot of them have pictures of trees and things that children can observe from the car."

Children interested in animals may enjoy finding cows and other animals alongside the road, Yoakam said. She also suggested taking books that parents can discuss with their children.

Comic books are good for older children, Yoakam said, although she suggests staying away from violent stories.

Curtis suggested letting children record stories in the car.

"You can let everyone have a turn, and then say you can't play it until a certain time or when you get to the motel," Curtis said. "That gives them something to look forward to."

Curtis also suggested taking a box of wrapped toys and letting a child open one each hour. Crayons and paper are good in the car, she said.

Debi Musick, a senior manager for Discovery Toys, said parents should attach small toys safely to infants' car seats so the toys will not fall out of reach.

Yoakam said travel games should be simple and cheap in case a child loses a piece.

Randy Powers, assistant store manager at Target, said travel games are becoming more popular.

"We probably sell more at Christmas time, but this year the selection is bigger," Powers said. "They are fairly inexpensive."

Powers said that some of the games have small pieces that are designed not to fall off the game boards. These games may be appropriate for older children, he said.

"These games are something the kids can do themselves," Powers said. "If it's something the parent makes up, he has to get involved and they spend more time together. But if my family had a game, whichever parent wasn't driving would probably be playing it with our son anyway."

Powers said that one game probably would not keep a child occupied on a long trip, but that most people can afford more than one.

Parents also can make their own travel games. Yoakam suggested homemade matching games with small squares of paper. To teach children colors, parents can cut out pieces of colored cellophane that can be transposed to form new colors, such as yellow and blue to make green.

Both Yoakam and Curtis said games like I Spy are fun for the car. Games using license plates and billboards are good for children who are learning their letters and numbers, they said.

Powers said that cassette players with headphones keep older children occupied.

"My 12-year-old and 8-year-old would listen to it, but the 5-year-old wouldn't," Powers said. "He would want to hear it, but after about 10 seconds, he'd say that's enough of that."

Musick said installing a television and video cassette player in a van is a good idea for those who can afford it.

Everyone interviewed agreed that frequent stops also help children cope with long trips.

Yoakam said hourly stops would benefit adults as well. "I think it would cut down on the number of accidents and stress," Yoakam said. "You can make it just a short walk around at a park or a rest stop. It doesn't have to be a Six Flags stop."

Curtis said not to stop at gas stations until it's necessary because people tend to buy junk food and souvenirs at every stop.

"If you go through little towns, you can wander around the streets for a few minutes," Curtis said. "We used to do that, and the kids loved it."

Musick said that parents can play games like tag and ring toss with their children during short stops.

Children should wear comfortable, washable clothes, Curtis said, so that parents will not be angry if something is spilled on them. Another essential is a favorite pillow for naps in the car, she said.

Curtis said raisins, granola and dry cereal are good travel foods.

Yoakam said children should not eat peanuts or popcorn in a car. Miniature rice cakes and Life Savers are good snacks, she said.

Summer fun

Area residents, above, enjoy the recent sunny weather at Big Spring Country Club pool and Blankenship Field. People have swarmed to local pools seeking relief from the heat, and warm temperatures have made outdoor fitness activities popular. Today's forecast calls for more of the same — clear skies, temperatures near 100 degrees and a slight breeze from the south.

Battling illiteracy with TV, one of its longtime enemies

(AP) Kids don't read because they are monopolized by the tube, the popular theory goes. Now a children's group is fighting illiteracy by enlisting reading's arch rival for kids' attention — the television.

A 42-part mystery series created by the Children's Television Workshop, which will air Sunday, Oct. 4 on Public Broadcasting Service, hopes to engage children 7 to 10 years of age in a quest to read.

"It's a given that kids watch lots of television," says Tina Peel, project director for the "Ghostwriter" series. "This is not just a television show. It's an exciting multimedia, age-appropriate mystery series which is surrounded by print. We're using television to discover the value of literacy."

The show features a cast of six amateur sleuths who solve cases aided by an intriguing ghost with a mysterious past. Ghostwriter is invisible. He only communicates in writing. But his printed messages can show up anywhere, from a computer screen to a classroom chalkboard to a manhole cover.

see reading and writing as something you have to do in school to pass a test."

"Ghostwriter" has a special focus on 9- and 10-year-olds who are economically disadvantaged or belong to minority groups. "This age group is very concerned with their peer relationships," Peel said. "Our kid cast demonstrates that the world of literacy is about and for the kid. Above all, we want to get across to young people that reading and writing are cool."

In between each 30-minute segment an action spot called "Do the Word Thing" will be featured. Kids will be invited to write into the show and some of the letters will then appear on subsequent segments.

"One of our goals is to show kids that reading and writing are skills that can have meaning in their lives and actually empower them," says Liz Nealson, executive producer. "Too many children only

To complement the series, the Children's Television Workshop is creating books, magazines and a syndicated newspaper feature with word games, puzzles and children's writing. "Our philosophy is that poor minority kids often lack a lot of print in their homes. We want these books and magazines to be accessible," Peel said.

Bantam Doubleday Dell will publish a series of 12 books during the first season of "Ghostwriter." The books will sell for 99 cents to $2.99.

Many of the magazines will be distributed free of charge through national organizations such as the Girl Scouts of the United States of America and the YMCA of the USA. This is the first time the Children's Television Workshop has embarked on a simultaneous multimedia launch.

"Ghostwriter," supported by a grant from the NIKE Just Do It Fund, is being produced in association with BBC School Television and will debut simultaneously in the United States and the United Kingdom.

"We've known for quite some time that children need help with literacy," Peel said. "Experts tell us that many children are not comprehending what they're reading or they aren't fluent in writing. 'Ghostwriter' is really a metaphor for reading and writing."

While engaging in research for the series, CTW routinely asked children to describe the character on "Ghostwriter."

Personal, work lives blending in the '90s

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Once upon a time, a white picket fence neatly separated the home from the office.

Now the fence is falling down. Technology, the changing nature of work and the growing number of women in the labor force are redefining the office and home, experts say. People trying to balance their work and personal lives are also blending the two.

"It used to be you never brought your family problems to work, and you never brought your work home to your family," said Robert E. Kelly, a business professor and author at Carnegie Mellon University.

"Now it goes both ways: People bring their pets and their kids to work, and they bring their lap-top computers and their beepers home."

The dawn of computers, fax machines and portable phones has made it possible to work anywhere, anytime. That can be a blessing or a bane.

"I was skiing one day, and the attorney I was with was litigating on a ski lift," said Michael Fortino of San Francisco. "He dropped the phone and jumped off the ski lift to get it."

Fortino, a lifestyle consultant and lecturer, carries a briefcase that has a lap-top computer, portable telephone, fax, printer, copier and modem.

"This is my office I can go anywhere," he said in a telephone interview from a Florida beach. "The corporate environment as we know it will become less predominant."

Leba Pierce, 42, of Albuquerque, N.M., set up a crib in her family's import store and brought her newborn son to work.

When the baby began crawling, Ms. Pierce put an electric typewriter in the sunroom at home and set up shop there. She gets most of her work done when the baby naps in the afternoon.

"He loves to wait on the customers," she said of Mark now 1. "He also likes money and checks."

Like Fortino, Ms. Pierce says her life is hectic, but she has made choices that make it full and happy.

"I do have it all," she said. "I can go down to my store anytime I want to. I can have work at home any time I want."

Paula Bern, a syndicated newspaper advice columnist who deals with work issues, says about 60 percent of the thousands of letters she receives from readers concern clashing personal and professional responsibilities.

"There's a lot of confusion, bewilderment," she said. "What do you do?"

She believes the conflicts are arising largely because so many women have jobs now.

"Traditionally, the women have been the care-givers, the nurturers, the people who take care of the children, the dogs, the cats, everything in the house," she said. "Suddenly there isn't anyone any longer at home."

Slightly more than half the women with infants were in the labor force last year, compared to about a third in 1990, according to the U.S. Census Bureau.

Mobile Americans have left behind the relatives who could help out in a pinch. Even those who still live near family often find that the aunts, sisters and grandmothers they would turn to have jobs, too.

Bern has received letters about child care, office romance, people who sell Tupperware or cosmetics on the side at work, even a woman who kept a poodle named "Baby" under her desk.

The problems aren't confined to the corporate executive. One woman wrote to say her child regularly tags along while she cleans offices on weekends to supplement her income.

Bern recently received hundreds of angry letters criticizing her negative response to an attorney who brought her infant to work when her babysitter was sick. She nursed the child during an office meeting.

"Is motherhood so undervalued that we would discourage all attempts by a woman to take care of her child if these actions conflict with antiquated, oppressive office etiquette?" wrote one reader, Teresa Monley of Denver.

The average professional is spending more time at work, about 47.5 hours a week, Fortino said. The long hours make it tough to find time for personal matters, such as errands or phone calls, so people are devoting more time at the office to those things, he said.

Personal packages are delivered at work, and some businesses are offering employees services such as hair cuts, manicures and shoe shines at the office.

When they finally get home, many people have little time or energy for the traditional mealtime gathering where good food and conversation is shared, Bern said.

"What they don't finish in the office I find people are finishing at home," she said. "They eat a hurry-up dinner. There's nothing to talk about."

Many people are feeling overwhelmed by the stress of trying to manage it all.

"If you say to people, 'Hi, how are you?' people used to say kind of rote, 'I'm fine,'" said Kelly, the Carnegie Mellon business professor. "I don't hear that any more. People are saying, 'It's been terrible this morning, or 'My kids were up all night.'"

These long days are not entirely new. At the turn of the century, many people worked 12 hours a day, six days a week, Kelly said. The single-breadwinner, eight-hour workday was made possible by the economic prosperity that followed World War II.

The days when a plant worker earned enough to raise a large family may have been an anomaly, he said.

Today, in less prosperous times, the need to make ends meet motivates many people to push harder. But the great American dream — the need to do a little better and provide the extras — is a big factor, Kelly said.

Children learning French gastronomy in school classes

PARIS (AP) — When the French decide to teach children about food, you can be sure the course will present more than the basic food groups.

"Awakening of the senses is important to appreciation of life itself," said Culture Minister Jack Lang, speaking at a recent ceremony marking the end of a 10-week program of culinary education offered in French public schools.

The voluntary program, created by Jacques Puisais, eminent wine connoisseur and head of the French Taste Institute, is designed to teach the ABCs of gastronomy.

For 90 minutes each week, children ages 10 to 12 learned such things as where the tongue registers a sweet taste (on the tip) or a salty one (one the side). They learned the difference between the way cheese tastes with and without an accompanying slice of apple.

By next year some 12,000 children from 800 schools will have tasted, touched and sniffed their way through the course.

"A food vocabulary should be part of education," Puisais said. "Eating should be fun, experimenting with food combinations. But children should learn to criticize intelligently as well."

Puisais said the age group selected was ideal for the course; they are neither as easily distracted as younger children nor preoccupied with problems of adolescence.

Lang, who also serves as France's Education Minister, observed: "Body, soul and senses, they're all part of the learning process. Food appreciation is part of the enjoyment of life and can be learned along with reading, writing and arithmetic."

"It's important to educate our children," said two-star chef Michel Trama of l'Aubergade the southwestern French town of Agen.

"Parents don't have time any more, and kids grow up thinking fish looks like a square covered in bread crumbs — frozen foods."

To the French, educating children is like training troops to continue what Lang says is part of a larger battle to preserve French gastronomic excellence and individuality.

He noted that France won a recent fight with European Community regulators over allowing unpasteurized milk to be used in making in some of the nation's most-beloved cheeses, Camembert and brie.

And, he said, he is fighting alongside the National Center of Culinary Arts to improve meals in schools, hospitals and airplanes.

Lang presented prizes to children from schools throughout France who drew pictures of food to enter in the "Vive le Gout!" (long live taste!) competition.

The paintings featured ham, country bread, fresh fruit — posed artistically on a tree — in line with this year's theme of seasonal food.

There was an absence of artistically rendered double-decker hamburgers or other fast food, not even such typical French snacks as chocolate on French bread.

"We don't like hamburgers all that much," said 11-year-old Jeanne Bourneuf.

Book adds art to children's play rhymes

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A girl's long braid waves against a mountain backdrop as she lifts her arms to the moon over her village in India. A human chain snakes under an archway framed by children's arms in Mexico.

The scenes are from "Street Rhymes Around the World," a collection of 32 children's play songs illustrated by artists from 17 nations or cultures.

Other scenes portray a clapping game from China, a mealtime song from Zambia, double Dutch jump rope rhymes from the United States and a Brazilian circle game.

The book was edited by Jane Yolen, author of the Caldecott Medal-winning "Owl Moon" and more than 100 other books.

"When I was a little girl living in New York City," Yolen writes in the introduction, "I played bouncing ball rhymes like 'One, Two, Three A Nation' and jumped double Dutch with two girls twirling two ropes for me to jump to the rhythm of 'Teddy Bear, Teddy Bear.'"

At the suggestion of Bernice E. Cullinan, an editor at Boyds Mills Press in Honesdale, Pa., about 110 miles north of Philadelphia, Yolen collected the verses from books and friends.

"I was delighted to find that girls and boys everywhere play similar games," Yolen writes. "They bounce balls, jump rope, swing, count on their fingers and toes, choose up sides, and hide-and-seek using rhymes."

The rhymes are printed in their original language and in English. For Chinese, Greek, Hebrew and other languages that use different alphabets, a transliteration provides the corresponding sounds in the Roman alphabet.

Once the publisher had the words, it often took some work to illustrate them.

Jean O'Donnell, a Boyds Mills editor, made more than 25 telephone calls to find Ivan J. Small Sr., a Northern Cheyenne artist and retired rancher who lives in Lodge Grass, Mont. He painted a scene of children swinging from strips of buffalo hide to go with a Cheyenne rhyme, "Come, ye woodrats, here to me!"

O'Donnell knew she was expecting artwork from Rouben Manoukian, an Armenian artist, to go with counting rhymes "Who am I?" and "One, two, grow tall." She just didn't know when

One day in October, with the Soviet Union disintegrating and Armenia embroiled in conflict with Azerbaijan, a package arrived with Manoukian's work.

"It was just wonderful," O'Donnell said. "The colors really popped. He really understood the rhymes. And I understand he had a good time doing them."

Yolen's friends and associates provided the initial translations, which were later fine-tuned by other native speakers, O'Donnell said.

The rhymes are printed in their original language and in English. For Chinese, Greek, Hebrew and other languages that use different alphabets, a transliteration provides the corresponding sounds in the Roman alphabet.

Jane had insisted on using the transliteration, so children could say the words and hear what they sound like," O'Donnell said.

DEAR ABBY: So, you have some doubts about the jurors' verdict in the officers' trial in the Rodney King case?

"All my life I've supported a free press and appreciated the role it serves in keeping the public informed. But today I am angry. I feel that television has taken me for a ride.

"For 13 months I've seen a 90-second clip of videotape that shows a man face down on the ground and four police officers taking turns hitting him with batons. "It wasn't until 3 a.m. on Friday, on CNN, that I was finally given the opportunity to see the tape in its entirety. Here I saw a man who had been hit four times with 50,000 volts of electricity continue to fight and resist police. I saw him lunging at a policeman. I saw him defying all normal reaction to pain, and behaving as if he could feel no pain. "I saw a brief moment when he lay still, and at that moment one policeman reached for his handcuffs. Then the man was up on his hands and knees again.

"I wonder, who decided to limit the public's access to the entire tape?" — JULIE R. WISE, HOUSTON

DEAR M.W. DAURA: Obviously, the jurors saw all the videotape. The public, including me, saw only the edited one-minute "bite," believing that was the entire story, which it was not.

Thank you for sending the above letters. They answered my question, "What was in the minds of those 12 jurors who delivered a unanimous verdict of 'not guilty' after having seen the videotape of Rodney King being beaten mercilessly at the hands of four uniformed Los Angeles police officers?"

Minnesota rallies to beat Baltimore, 2-1

The ASSOCIATED PRESS
 With every swing, with every pitch, with every game, this season is looking a lot like last year for the Minnesota Twins.
 The Twins, the team that no one took too seriously last summer until it was too late, capped a weekend of comebacks by rallying for two runs in the ninth inning to beat Baltimore 2-1 Sunday.
 On Saturday, Minnesota scored twice in the 15th inning to overtake the Orioles 3-2. Both times, the Twins pulled it out against relief ace Gregg Olson.
 Baltimore's Rick Sutcliffe (10-7) scattered eight-hits through eight innings, but ran into trouble in the ninth when Randy Bush got an infield hit with one out, pinch-hitter Donnie Hill doubled and pinch-hitter Gene Larkin was intentionally walked to load the bases.

 Olson relieved and got Chuck Knoblauch to hit a high bouncer that produced the tying run when Knoblauch barely beat the double-play relay. After Kirby Puckett walked to re-load the bases, Hrbek hit a grounder that made it through the overshifted infield and into center field.
 Tapani (9-5) pitched his third straight complete game. He struck

American League
Blue Jays 6, Angels 2
 Joe Carter, Candy Maldonado and Devon White homered at SkyDome as Toronto won its fourth in a row and sent California to its seventh straight loss.
 David Wells and Mike Timlin combined on a three-hitter as the Blue Jays improved to 49-31, their best record after 80 games in team history.

White Sox 4, Red Sox 2
 Hot-hitting George Bell connected for his ninth career grand slam and Chicago beat Boston at Comiskey Park for its 12th victory in 15 games.
 Bell's second slam and 12th home run of the season came in the fifth inning as the White Sox overcame a 2-0 deficit. Bell has seven homers and 26 RBIs in his last 13 games.
Tigers 8, Mariners 5
 Cecil Fielder hit a two-run single that keyed a five-run first inning and Detroit went on to beat Seattle at Tiger Stadium.

Rich DeLucia (3-5) fell to 0-4 lifetime against the Tigers. He did not retire any of the six batters he faced, giving up four hits and two walks.
 Detroit starter Buddy Groom could not hold the early lead and left after three innings. Walt Terrell (3-8) wound up with the win and John Doherty pitched 1 2/3 innings for his second save.
 Fielder, who has 69 hits and 69 RBIs this season, tied the score at 2 with his single. Mickey Tettleton and Milt Cuyler added run-scoring singles and Scott Livingstone had an RBI grounder in the first inning.
Athletics 5, Indians 2

Harold Baines homered, doubled and singled, driving in four runs, and Bob Welch (6-4) survived 10 hits and two home runs as visiting Oakland ended a string of six losses to last-place Cleveland.
Yankees 5, Rangers 4
 Danny Tartabull homered in his third straight game and visiting New York scored the winning run on Rafael Palmeiro's wild throw.
 Scott Sanderson (8-5) won his fourth consecutive start despite allowing 10 hits in 5 1/3 innings. John Habyan worked 1 2/3 innings for his fourth save.

Reds complete sweep of Eastern champions

The ASSOCIATED PRESS
 As far as the Cincinnati Reds are concerned, the National League playoffs can start right now.
 After all, Sunday's 2-1 victory over the NL East-leading Pirates in Pittsburgh gave the Reds a four-game sweep.
 "It was an excellent series for us," Cincinnati manager Lou Piniella said with understatement. "We had exceptional pitching."
 Paul O'Neill and Chris Sabo hit sacrifice flies off Doug Drabek

(6-7) in the eighth inning after Drabek pitched out of threats with the help of three double plays in three innings.
 "You don't hit the ball, you don't catch it, you don't win," Pirates manager Jim Leyland said. "If all these guys shut us down, then we've got serious troubles."
 Cincinnati also swept four in Pittsburgh in a similar showdown of division leaders on Aug. 28-31, 1990, the weekend after the Pirates swept four in Cincinnati. The Reds have won nine of 12, while Pitt-

Phillies 9, Dodgers 3
 Mike Williams (1-1) pitched a three-hitter in his second start for his first major league victory. Darren Daulton and Dale Sveum hit two-run homers for the visiting Phillies, who won their second straight following a five-game losing streak.

 Ramon Martinez (4-6) allowed a season-high nine runs — just four earned — in five innings as he lost for the fifth time in six decisions.
Expos 4, Padres 3
 Delno DeShields drove in the go-ahead run with a squeeze bunt off Tim Scott (1-1) in the 10th inning as visiting Montreal won for the eighth time in 11 games.

 Mel Rojas (2-1), who saved Saturday night's 3-2, 10-inning victory, pitched two innings for the win.
 Gary Sheffield hit his 17th home run and Fred McGriff hit his National League-leading 18th and fourth in four games.
Astros 2, Mets 0
 Eric Anthony hit a two-run homer in the 10th inning at Shea Stadium as New York was shut out for the 10th time this season, one more than all of 1991.

 Jeff Bagwell singled off Jeff Innis (4-5) and Anthony followed with his eighth homer and second in three games.
Cubs 8, Braves 0
 Kal Daniels hit his fifth career grand slam, and Ryne Sandberg, Mark Grace and Andre Dawson also homered for Chicago, which stopped a seven-game winless streak in Atlanta.
 Greg Maddux (10-7) gave up four hits in seven innings as he won for the fifth time in six starts.
