Police continue search for hit-and-run driver

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

Police this morning were still searching for a white or yellow vehicle that struck and injured a pedestrian in Big Spring Saturday night and then left the scene.

The victim, Luis George Rojo, 38, of Big Spring, suffered a broken hip in the accident, according to reports. He was listed in stable condition at Scenic Mountain Medical Center this morning and was expected to be taken out of the intensive care unit sometime today, a hospital spokesman said.

Rojo was walking west on the 200 block of Northeast Third Street at 9:29 p.m. Saturday when a vehicle traveling east struck him at the corner of Third and Runnels streets, said Lt. Pam Jordan of the Big Spring Police Department. The vehicle reportedly struck Rojo with the front end.

"It's a white or yellow car and that's all we have," Jordan said. "I believe it's a car, I don't have any other details."

Only sketchy details were available because Jordan had just the accident report at hand and not the hit-and-run investigative report, she said. More information is expected to be released to the public later today.

The incident apparently did not appear intentional, Jordan said. Otherwise, investigating officers would have filed an assault report rather than a hit-and-run.

Because Rojo was in intensive care, he was unavailable for comment. Relatives could not be reached this morning.

Jordan said a patrol sergeant had said there were a couple witnesses at the scene. "They're working on that," she said of an ongoing investigation.

Details unavailable to Jordan this morning include a complete description of the vehicle, the driver and any passengers. Jordan also did not know whether Rojo was walking with others or not.

Asked if the driver will be apprehended, Jordan said, "There's always a possibility."

Bob Riley in running for East Texas job

By MARTHA E. FLORES
Staff Writer

Howard College president Bob E. Riley may soon submit his resignation to accept the presidency of East Texas Baptist University (ETBU) in Marshall.

Bob Riley until the (East Texas Baptist Board of Trustees) board meets Thursday.

Sources have told the Herald Riley has said he has been offered the position and is only waiting for the Howard College Board of Trustees to meet on July 27 to submit his resignation.

But Riley, when contacted in his office early this morning, denied he had been offered the position. He did say he had interviewed at the university, which has 775 students and is supported by the Southern Baptist General Convention.

Since Riley was named president in 1984, enrollment at HC has grown from 1,100 to more than 3,000. Satellite campuses throughout Texas have also been established bringing in monies to the local campus.

Riley vowed as incoming president to "open the lines of communication," but his presidency has been marred by allegations of lack of communication and intimidation.

In 1990, the Faculty Senate pushed for a no-confidence vote against Riley. The vote was discussed, but not taken.

According to Big Spring Herald files, a campus survey conducted at that time with more than half of the faculty members responding indicated that the college environment was affected by negative factors such as repression, intimidation and fear.

Riley named the communication problem top priority to be resolved before the end of the year.

Other problems arose this spring when Riley, faced with budget cuts, submitted a list of 15 staff and faculty members to be laid off.

Riley's recommendations, which were approved by the board, were criticized by some as a move by Riley to rid the campus of Faculty Senate members who voiced opposition over a class load policy instated in 1990. Riley attributed the layoffs to the expected cutbacks.

Once students learned of the recommendations, they protested the dismissal of the faculty members. Students at the SouthWest Collegiate Institute for the deaf also demonstrated.

Representatives of Gov. Ann Richards, the Department of Education and other state officials visited the campus to gather information regarding the student protests. No official findings have been released on the visit.

Should Riley be offered and accept the ETBU position, it is anticipated the Howard College officials would begin an immediate search to find a replacement before the start of the fall session.

Richards predicts Clinton-Perot race

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Texas Gov. Ann Richards today predicted the presidential race to be a two-man race — with President Bush on the sidelines.

"If I were to bet today, and that's just today, I'd say the race is between (Ross) Perot and (Bill) Clinton," Richards said on NBC's "Today" program.

"I think Perot takes Bush out," she said.

On the CBS "This Morning" program, Richards was asked about the absence of women on the short list of vice presidential possibilities from which Ark. Gov. Bill Clinton chose Sen. Al Gore.

"There are very few women in this country who really are prepared and capable of being on that ticket and serving as president of the United States," Richards said. "The ones who are, I don't think any would do it. They would have to give up what they've got."

Richards said on Sunday that potential female vice presidential candidates such as Maryland Sen. Barbara Mikulski and Colorado Rep. Pat Schroeder are up for re-election and couldn't run for vice president without abandoning their current races.

As for herself, she said in the CBS interview, "I am not prepared to be president of the United States."

Asked whether she was working on it, she said, "I really am not. It's everybody kind of fantasizing."

The Democratic National Convention, which opens today with Clinton all but assured of the presidential nomination, has a strong female presence this year.

Richards is chairwoman of the convention. Former Texas Congresswoman Barbara Jordan is one of three keynote speakers and many women will appear on the podium at Madison Square Garden during the four-day event. Tuesday night's session will be "kind of like women's bowling night," Richards said.

"I think that my success and the success of a lot of women in politics is as a result of our success in governing, more than winning," Richards said Sunday. "We have shown that we are competent and can do a good job if we are given the opportunity."

The increased attention translates into greater national recognition, more chances to network and raise campaign funds, and an opportunity to bring more young women into politics, Richards said.

"There are going to be a lot of young women who are watching those television sets and they are going to see those leaders and they are going to say 'If she can do that, I can do that too,'" the governor said.

The news conference came in the middle of a busy day for Richards, who also pre-taped interviews for the Monday network morning news shows.

Sunday night, Richards hosted the "Texas All-Star Gala," one of the most exclusive parties held during this festive convention week.

Wright Fibers by last hurdle

By GARY SHANKS
Staff Writer

Unofficial confirmation from the Texas Department of Commerce indicates the last financial hurdle has been passed for the proposed Wright Fibers Inc. textile mill.

Late Friday, Moore Development for Big Spring Inc. Executive Director Ted St. Clair, was notified that the $500,000 business operating expense loan had been approved in the Department of Commerce's meeting. The official paperwork is not expected for one to two weeks, however, according to St. Clair.

The loan was the last funding source needed for the construction of the $5 million textile mill. Although a firm decision has not been announced by Herb Wright, preliminary work has been under way for some time in the old Cameo Mobile Homes complex, located at FM 700 and Midway Road. The weaving equipment is valued at $750,000 and represents the largest part of Wright's contribution to the venture.

In addition to the Moore Board and Wright, the City of Big Spring is also involved in the project through the TDC loan. The plant is expected to employ 100 persons initially and up to 250 after five years.

Although the Moore Board was instrumental in collecting information for the formal request, the Department of Commerce loan must be delivered through a municipality or like governmental agency. The council voted to make the formal request for the funds which may, when paid back to the city, be used to fund other business ventures, according to city officials.

"Moore is kind of a midwife in this thing," St. Clair said.

The textile plant was jeopardized when the Texas Agricultural Finance Authority initially rejected a proposal from Wright and the Moore board for $1.98 million. TAFE later approved a lesser loan of $1.4 million, and the Moore board agreed to provide the remainder of the funds, probably in the form of a loan guarantee, St. Clair said at the time.

The plant will manufacture raw cotton bale bags, which will replace the existing, environmentally harmful, polypropylene bags. In Europe, some countries are banning U.S. cotton baled in polypropylene or are returning the bags to the U.S. for disposal at the owner's expense, St. Clair said at a recent joint meeting of the Moore board and the city council.

Board member Jeff Morris spoke in favor of the venture saying, "I believe this is going to fly."

Morris listed several reasons to expect success from the plant. "Herb has the technology wrapped up. He has the patent... he has a technological advantage over his competition."

Morris said the timeliness of the venture is important. There are no other sources for a needed product and the raw material is available locally.

Transportation meet set for Sweetwater

By GARY SHANKS
Staff Writer

A public hearing concerning the Texas Department of Transportation's 10-year highway project plan will be July 20.

The meeting is scheduled to begin at 2 p.m. in Sweetwater at the Sweetwater City Auditorium, 400 Locust St.

The meeting is to provide information and gain public input on the department's 1993 Project Development Plan (PDP) and the Transportation Improvement Plan (TIP).

The Sweetwater meeting concerns all highway projects in the 13-county Abilene district, which includes Howard, Mitchell and Borden counties, said Ray J. Green, public affairs officer for the Department of Transportation in Abilene.

The meeting is open to the public and any citizen wishing to speak at the meeting is asked to limit remarks to five minutes.

Projects scheduled to receive funds in August includes a Mitchell County project extending FM 1229 from Interstate 20 north to FM 670, said Bill Jackson, district design manager in Abilene.

Also in August, Big Spring will receive a $76,000 landscaping project on Business I-20. New signs will be placed along the entire length of I-20 as it passes through the Abilene district, Jackson said.

The extension of FM 700 to U.S. Highway 87 is scheduled for funding in the fall. Howard County Commissioners are currently purchasing right-of-way from affected land owners.

In the spring and summer of 1993, bridges crossing I-20 on the east and west sides of Big Spring will be funded for rehabilitation at a cost of almost $3 1/2 million, the northbound lanes of U.S. 87 north of the city will be completely reworked and shoulders added at a cost of $1.56 million, and the first part of the U.S. 87 South expansion will be funded, Jackson said.

The first part of the project, which will expand the highway to four-lane divided section, will include a 2.2 mile section reaching to the Glasscock County line. This is expected to cost $1.44 million.

The remainder of the expansion, which will reach Texas Highway 33 just south of the city, is expected to be funded for about $3 1/2 million in 1994.

Bustamante claims probe damaging his reputation

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN ANTONIO — For more than three years, a federal grand jury has examined documents and listened to witnesses about alleged influence-peddling in South Texas.

Last week, the jury produced its first indictment, charging prominent businessman M. Douglas Jaffe Jr., his company and two staff attorneys with federal election law violations.

Meanwhile, a central figure in the probe, U.S. Rep. Albert Bustamante of San Antonio, remains free of any charges. But the Democratic congressman claims the investigation has inflicted political wounds, tainting his name before the public even if he is never indicted.

"It's been 3 1/2 years of nothing but torture, and that's what they wanted. Or they wanted to embarrass us," Bustamante said Friday, shortly after his friend Jaffe turned himself in to federal authorities.

"They want us to spend money on a legal defense," Bustamante added.

Federal prosecutors did not return telephone calls from The Associated Press about the investigation.

Some Democrats reportedly have estimated the federal probe has cost $3 million to $5 million.

Bustamante, first elected to Congress in 1984, faces Republican challenger Henry Bonilla in November. And Bustamante contends the Republican Party is behind the federal investigation, which is being heard by a San Antonio grand jury and is led by Washington prosecutors.

Bustamante said most constituents he speaks with in the 29-county District 23 offer words of support. But he still believes the investigation is harmful.

The probe began as a look into the activities of Bustamante and his friend Eddie Garcia. According to the two men, the grand jury was examining Garcia's attempt to acquire a contract for a 7,000-seat bingo hall and bingo game on the Kickapoo Indian reservation near Eagle Pass, a border town in Bustamante's district.

Bustamante has said the investigation began as retaliation for his backing of Hispanic FBI agents, who successfully sued the agency for discrimination.

As the investigation has progressed, prosecutors have called dozens of witnesses and sought records appearing to deal with other matters. Last week, they requested and received some of Bustamante's campaign finance records.

Bustamante contends the federal prosecutors are trying to hurt him by taking aim at his friends and associates.

Jaffe, for instance, and his father, Morris D. Jaffe Sr., are friends of Bustamante's, the congressman says. The Jaffes have had ties with big name Democrats and were friends and supporters of former U.S. House Speaker Jim Wright.

Bustamante said the indictment of Jaffe and the two women lawyers was "criminal."

"They wanted to embarrass them," he said. "I just feel bad for my friend and the two ladies."

M. Douglas Jaffe Jr., 41, his company Jaffe Group Inc., and company attorneys Patricia Pozza, 41, and Mary Ella McBrearty, 39, were named in a three-count indictment issued Wednesday.

The government alleges Jaffe and Ms. Pozza conspired to break federal election laws that ban corporate contributions to federal campaigns.

The indictment claims Jaffe and Ms. Pozza solicited donations in 1988 from Jaffe Group employees for two political action committees that supported Democratic candidates and for the gubernatorial campaign of Jim Mattox, with the understanding the employees would be reimbursed with company bonuses.

Ms. McBrearty is accused of being one of the contributing employees. She, Jaffe, Ms. Pozza and the corporation also are accused of concealing the source of the donations.

The defendants have declined to comment on the case, but some of their lawyers are quick to cite politics as a factor in the charges.

Seagal Wheatley, who represents the Jaffe Group, said "it is a politically charged time of the year, and bizarre events such as this indictment against innocent people often occur."

Gerald Goldstein, who represents Ms. Pozza, also hinted that politics might be involved. He noted that foreign electronics giant Toshiba Corp. and some of its executives also were accused of violating federal election contribution laws and last month were allowed to pay about $18,000 in civil fines.

And Texas Democratic Party officials have questioned the election-year timing of the charges.

For Bustamante's opponent Bonilla, the San Antonio probe produces election-year rhetoric. But Bonilla says although he occasionally mentions the investigation and is asked about it by voters and the press, it is not his central campaign issue.

'Too Fat Polka' set to open

By SUZANNE GAMBOA AP Writer

MIDLAND — Federal Judge Lucius Bunton said last spring what had been on many minds after state prosecutors charged a Who's Who list of El Pasoans with setting up a scam that bilked investors of $9.6 million.

Bunton quoted the "Too Fat Polka" when he reluctantly moved the case from state to federal court.

"I don't want her, you can have her, she's too fat for me," Bunton wrote.

The case is thick with a web of allegations and a long list of El Paso heavyweights as defendants. Jury selection is scheduled to begin Monday.

The trial will bring about two dozen lawyers to the courtroom for the defendants and more than 500 witnesses have been identified. The district attorneys office will only bring in two prosecutors. The prosecution already has cost taxpayers more than the $250,000 budgeted for it.

Assistant District Attorney Andrew Thomas said prosecutors have been tossing out some accusations and getting rid of certain defendants to thin the voluminous case.

"We're trying to throw away the need for the girdle," Thomas said.

But he wasn't sure Friday if he was succeeding. State attorneys had arrived at a Midland hotel with 130 boxes of documents, but had to reserve another suite next door for more boxes.

"We're getting a four-inch stack a day of new motions and have been for I don't know how long," Thomas said.

When an El Paso grand jury handed up its indictments last year, they named 11 El Pasoans and 19 businesses. The list now has been whittled to seven major defendants and 11 businesses. The original 32-page indictment is now about 13 pages.

It names such one-time El Paso movers and shakers as financier and former car dealer Maury Kemp, former El Paso Electric Co. chairman Evert Wall and former state GOP chairman Tad Smith. El Paso Electric also is named.

The accusations revolve around Kemp's failed First Service Life Insurance Co. and more than $9 million in annuities it sold. The company was based in the Cayman Islands and not registered in Texas, therefore the annuities — investments that earn interest that is periodically paid to buyers — were not insured.

When First Service Life went belly up, investors, many from Mexico, lost their money. The state alleges investors' money was diverted to risky ventures without investors' knowledge.

The defendants also are accused of conspiring to steal the stock of Triangle Electric Supply Co., an electronics components company in El Paso.

It alleges that in 1986, the law firm Kemp, Smith, Duncan & Hammond prepared documents that put $50 million made from the annuities sales into an escrow account.

INDIANAPOLIS — Melissa Etheridge said radio reaction to female rock singers never seems to change.

"I have a certain amount of success, and one radio station that's not playing me because I'm a woman isn't going to make or break my career," the singer said. "But it might make or break another woman's career. And I get really upset about that."

The cover of her "Never Enough" album features a shirtless Etheridge with her back to the camera and a guitar in her hands.

INDIANAPOLIS — As a youth, Mario Van Peebles was disturbed by images of blacks on television and in the movies.

"It wasn't until the black butler came in — and I said, 'Wow, that's not really how it is, is it?' That's very damaging for a black child to see," he said.

Van Peebles, who starred in and directed the gang drama "New Jack City," was in Indianapolis on Friday to accept a Screen Image Award at the annual Black Expo.

He said distortions in TV and film will continue until more minorities become involved as writers, producers and directors, or in management.

Director Penny Marshall said the part ended up being scripted especially for O'Donnell.

"The part was originally for a hot, sexy girl, but I liked Rosie so much we changed the story to suit her," Marshall said.

KALISPELL, Mont. — Mary Hart and husband Burt Sugarman have angered some of their Montana neighbors with plans to fence off public land for extra privacy.

The couple bought 130 acres last summer on Whitefish Lake, 14 miles north of Kalispell in northwestern Montana.

NEW YORK — Rosie O'Donnell says she was a natural for the role of the wisecracking third baseman in "A League of Their Own."

"I was always the first girl picked for the neighborhood teams," O'Donnell said in the July 20 issue of People magazine. "I got picked ahead of my three brothers, which I think still affects them."

ROME — Pope John Paul II was undergoing a medical test and may face a testicular probe related to his alleged sexual abuse in the past.

Pope may undergo surgery

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROME — Pope John Paul II was undergoing medical tests and may face surgery for an intestinal problem that could be related to his shooting 11 years ago.

After an overnight fast, diagnostic tests began this morning at the Gemelli Clinic. Gemelli is the same Catholic hospital where the pope had been rushed for surgery when shot in the abdomen by a Turkish gunman in St. Peter's Square on May 13, 1981.

Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro said no details on the pope's condition were expected until the tests were completed, probably Tuesday. The tests were to include a CAT scan, a sophisticated X-ray of internal organs.

The pope's hospitalization forced postponement of a visit by President Rodrigo Borja of Ecuador, who is seeking papal mediation of a border conflict with Peru.

The 72-year-old pontiff announced the hospitalization himself, during his traditional Sunday appearance at a window of the Apostolic Palace overlooking the square. The announcement was seen as a way to dispel alarm and any air of secrecy over the health problem.

"I would like to tell you something confidentially. This evening I'm going to Gemelli Clinic for some diagnostic tests. I ask your prayers so that the Lord is near to me with his help and with his support," the pope said to the surprise of the tourists and pilgrims crowding the square.

Navarro said that if tests showed a need for surgery, the operation would be done while the pope was in the hospital, two miles north of the Vatican.

"I'm optimistic, but I'm speaking as the spokesman for the Holy See and not as his doctor," said Navarro, who holds a medical degree.

Navarro said it would likely be two or three days before a decision is reached on how to treat what he called a "dysfunction," or ailment, in the small intestine which possibly might be related to the old bullet wound.

The pope had been set to start a 10-day vacation in the Italian Alps on Wednesday, but that will have to be put off for now, Navarro said.

Hospital spokesman Giuseppe Pallanch said the pope would have a private room and a study, and two rooms would be used by the pope's Polish secretary and other staff. The Polish nuns who cook for him would also be in the hospital, Pallanch said.

Nurses snapping photographs, visiting relatives and some patients — including one in a wheelchair and another with an intravenous needle in his arm — welcomed the pope when his black Mercedes convertible rolled up in front of the hospital Sunday evening.

Except for the 1981 gunshot wound and a subsequent infection and followup surgery, the pope has enjoyed remarkably good health and stamina in his nearly 14-year-old papacy.

PRI ousted in Chihuahua

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHIHUAHUA, Mexico — For the first time in its 63-year history as Mexico's ruling party, the PRI today admitted defeat without a fight in gubernatorial elections in Mexico's largest, richest state.

Supporters of the main opposition party were in the streets overnight celebrating the victory of their candidate, Francisco Barrio, who claimed the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party cheated him of victory six years ago.

The results "don't favor us. If the tendency persists, we accept defeat," Mario Tarango Ramirez, PRI's Chihuahua state president, told reporters. "We would look bad to nipitack and fight for something we didn't win."

However, in the Pacific state of Michoacan, the PRI was ahead in early official returns in that gubernatorial race. But the opposition accused the PRI of widespread fraud.

The PRI has been in power since 1929, winning virtually all national and state elections, often through electoral fraud. Under President Carlos Salinas de Gortari, who came to power in 1988, it has accepted defeats in governor's races in Baja California and Guanajuato — but hotly contested the results in both states.

Salinas has sought to modernize Mexico and clean up its image abroad, now that his administration is negotiating a free trade agreement with Canada and the United States.

Initial official results in Chihuahua were expected later today, with final results on Wednesday. But unofficial results announced early today by the PRI showed that with 1,524 polling stations counted of a total of 3,095, the main opposition National Action Party, or PAN, had 161,148 votes while the PRI had 151,700.

"If this is the opinion of the voters, then it's the Chihuahuans who decide," Tarango said.

Results announced earlier by the PAN showed Barrio won 60 percent of the vote over PRI candidate Jesus Macias, based on returns from about 700 polling stations in the conservative state bordering Texas.

"This is a triumph for the people of Chihuahua," Barrio told reporters early today as thousands of his supporters poured into the streets of this state capital to celebrate victory.

"Even though the results aren't final, I can definitely say that the victory was ours," he said. "I hope we can establish cordial, respectful relations but I don't know if (the PRI) is ready to become an opposition party."

Two voters wait to cast their ballots in Colonia Villanueva, a poor neighborhood in Chihuahua, during Sunday's elections. The ruling PRI party admitted defeat in Mexico's largest, richest state in a test of the strength of President Carlos Salinas de Gortari.

One group of perhaps 5,000 cheered for hours outside PAN headquarters. "PAN si, otro no!" — "PAN yes, the other no," they chanted as motorists honked their horns in unison. "Barrio si, Macias no."

There was no crowd celebrating outside the PRI office. Macias had no immediate comment.

In Michoacan, the state election commission announced early today that with 23 percent of the polling places counted, PRI candidate Eduardo Villasenor Pena had 58 percent of the vote and the opposition Revolutionary Democratic Party, or PRD, had 30 percent.

PRD President Cuauhtemoc Cardenas, however, immediately accused the PRI and the government of widespread fraud. He said his party's results showed it had won and called for a victory celebration on Tuesday.

PRD candidate Cristobal Arias "is the winner," he told a packed news conference.

Michoacan was Cardenas' stronghold in his 1988 bid for the presidency, which represented the strongest opposition challenge ever to the PRI. Many people believe Cardenas was deprived of the presidency by fraud, allowing Salinas to win.

A heavy turnout was reported among Chihuahua's 1.2 million registered voters, who also cast ballots for candidates to 18 seats in the state legislature, and 67 mayors. Observers said there were many irregularities, but they stopped short of calling it fraud.

Both Barrio, 41, who claimed the PRI stole his bid for governor in 1986, and Macias, 42, are businessmen and former mayors of Ciudad Juarez, across the border from El Paso, Texas.

Michoacan, a largely agricultural state, is a stronghold of the PRD, a breakaway faction of the PRI. But PRI has been concentrating a lot of funds and effort to try to break its rival.

No news draws journalists

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — There's no news here. Political conventions are non-events — outdated, overblown remnants of a fleeting past.

Suspense? There's more suspense watching the tide come in.

So why are 15,000 journalists covering the Democratic National Convention — more, probably, than will cover any other single news event this year?

Why are there three times as many journalists as delegates? Why are news organizations spending millions of dollars on computers, telephones, televisions, cameras, travel, coffee, overtime?

Why was a camera crew behind the counter at a deli across from Madison Square Garden on Sunday filming a bologna sandwich?

There may be no answer to that last question — the sandwich didn't appear to be for any particular candidate — but some were willing to take a crack at the others.

One answer is habit. News organizations cover conventions because they've always covered conventions. "They have to let people go cover the conventions; it's sort of a morale thing," said Jack Germond, a Baltimore Sun columnist who has been covering conventions since 1964.

Another answer is that the convention is in New York, where many news organizations are based — and where the local news media is large and voracious.

Another is technology. Conventions are television events now, and television needs lots of people. CNN has about 300 people at the convention; of those, maybe 25 will actually be seen. "Television is the medium that requires a cast of thousands to get a few people on the air," observed Hal Bruno, ABC's political director.

Finally, some people, Bruno and Germond among them, seem to believe that conventions really do matter.

"This is a major news event, where the party will reveal itself for what it is, where it's headed and what its candidate will offer in the fall," said Steve Haworth, a CNN spokesman.

"Parties have taken the first step toward winning or losing the election at the convention," Bruno said. "The convention is still an important story."

Time computer analyst arrested for selling credit card numbers

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEARWATER, Fla. — A computer analyst for Time magazine was arrested for allegedly selling thousands of subscribers' credit card numbers for $1 apiece, police said.

The buyers were undercover sheriff's deputies, and investigators don't believe the numbers were sold to anyone else, said Lt. Rick Wilfong of the Pinellas County sheriff's office. Along with the numbers were names, addresses and expiration dates — enough information to make unauthorized telephone orders, police said.

Thomas Ferguson, 44, who has worked at the magazine's Tampa customer service headquarters for 18 months, faces four counts of trafficking in credit cards, police said. Peter Costiglio, a Time Inc. vice president in New York, said the company would bolster its computer safeguards.

"Any company property involved has been recovered," Costiglio said. "There has been no breach of the security system."

Ferguson was suspended pending the outcome of the investigation.

Police found computer disks containing the credit card numbers of about 80,000 subscribers at Ferguson's Clearwater home.

Authorities said they met Ferguson four times to buy about 3,000 credit card numbers since being tipped off.

Keating trial much too late

The news that a federal jury awarded at least $2.1 billion in damages against Charles Keating Jr. and three co-defendants for swindling thousands of elderly and other savings and loan investors is comforting.

It may be little else, however, for the plaintiffs. Despite the ruling, it is clear that those who lost their savings will recover only a portion at best.

Jurors deliberated for eight days, capping a civil fraud trial in which more than 20,000 class-action plaintiffs claimed losses of $288.7 million and sued for $1.2 billion under federal and Arizona racketeering statutes.

They determined Saudi European Investment Corp., Conley Wolfswinkel and Continental Southern Inc. had conspired with Keating and officers in American Continental Corp. and its Lincoln Savings subsidiary to mislead regulators and keep his savings and loan afloat by continued sales of junk bonds.

Ninety of the 95 other individual and corporate co-defendants originally named in the lawsuit, including national law and accounting firms, have completed or have pending settlements that could total nearly $250 million.

Keating, 68, is serving a California prison term stemming from the bond sales.

Continental Southern and Wolfswinkel did not put on defenses during the nearly 3 1/2-month trial. A lawyer for Wolfswinkel did offer a closing argument denying wrongdoing and Saudi European Investment put on an active defense.

Clearly, the jury thought wrong was intentionally committed. We needed a better watchdog, however, than the federal government.

U.S. views

While supporters of a balanced budget constitutional amendment bemoan its defeat in the House, some analysts are suggesting it may have been a blessing in disguise.

We don't quite buy that rationale — a balanced budget would move the country a long way on the road to economic stability. However, the reasoning of some analysts is that the proposed balanced budget resolution was flawed because it did not contain a tax-limitation feature. Thus, big-spending advocates could have used the amendment, if ratified, as a means to raise taxes to finance their programs.

The view here is that given a clear choice between tax hikes and spending cuts, Congress would finally start to trim the budget. However, Daniel Mitchell of The Heritage Foundation contends that without specific checks on the size of government, the amendment could have degenerated into an annual excuse to raise taxes to balance the budget.

Indeed, various proposals with built-in limits were floating around Capitol Hill but apparently got lost in the politicking shuffle.

Certainly, when the next serious effort is mounted to pass the balanced-budget amendment, provisions such as this should be considered.

The Daily Oklahoman

Rich Bond, chairman of the Republican National Committee, said recently, "There is no such thing as dirty tricks in this Republican Party."

For Bond, and anyone gullible enough to believe him, here are a few reminders: Willie Horton, Anita Hill and Watergate.

The Republican and Democratic parties both have a long history of "dirty tricks." The only difference is that the Republicans are very organized and generally artistic about their smear campaigns.

The Democrats in the past few decades have been almost reassuringly inept in most of their attacks. Even when they had evidence of a president selling arms to a sworn enemy of the United States the best they could do was take out a few of the minor players.

What probably has the Republicans scared this time around is that Ross Perot looks to be every bit as efficient and skillful as they are at digging up skeletons.

Combined with the fact that he has a larger war chest, you can practically hear the elephant's knees knocking.

Thanks to SMMC staff, physicians

To the editor:

I have just returned to my home in Ballinger after a 10-day stay in Scenic Mountain Medical Center.

Most people are always in a hurry to leave a hospital. But you have such a very nice hospital, with the best of help, that I wasn't in a hurry at all.

I just know that I had the best group of nurses, the clock around, that a patient could have. They didn't wait for me to ring the bell, but were always coming in to see about me. I want them to know how very much my wife Dorothy and I appreciated all they did for me, and what a Blessing they must be to all that enter that hospital.

I'm not about to leave out Dr. Rudy Haddad, our Urologist who did my surgery, and his office staff, for all of their help. We've known Dr. Haddad since 1987 and think he is the greatest.

We parked our travel trailer on the hospital grounds, and my wife was very comfortable in it while there.

Again I want to say "Thank You To My Nurses". You had to work so hard to get where you are.

Real estate lessons are important

Economists are always looking for indicators that will tell them which way our downtrodden economy is headed.

Today I have an indicator of my own.

I sold my house. The one I moved out of three-and-a-half years ago. The one that has just set there like a big fat empty money-eater, all that time.

The one I reduced and reduced and it still wouldn't sell.

The one I happened to mention in a column and said that if any one would buy it, I would send their firstborn to college and come over each weekend and wax their car.

The one nobody wanted even with that offer.

The one I had to pay a visit to each month with a wheelbarrow loaded with money.

I would open the front door and dump all the money into the house.

Don't get any wrong ideas here. I didn't make any money on the house. As a matter of fact, I lost money on the transaction.

Lewis Grizzard

It's the way of the '90s. Buy high. Pay and pay and pay. Then, sell low.

I often have heard these wild tales of people selling their homes and going to the closing and actually leaving there without a check. Not me. At the closing, I had to write one of my own. The New Economics: seller writes a check instead of receiving one.

But I'm thankful I've finally unloaded the house regardless of what it cost me to do so. And I've learned my lesson. The day of the easy real estate buck is gone. I'm not certain where it went.

Perhaps the Japanese were responsible for it. Perhaps Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina had just taken a bath in a real estate deal when he bashed the Japanese recently with mention of the surprise the Enola Gay brought to the Land of the Rising Sun in '45.

Maybe it was Reaganomics. Maybe it was the federal deficit. Or, perhaps it was simply carelessness and putting too much faith in an American capitalistic system that is limping that got me into the troubles I had with that house.

I admit I was cocky. What happened was I found another house I liked better. The new house was in a more convenient location.

No problem. I bought the new house, thinking the old one would sell overnight. Not only would I be in a new house perfectly suited for me, but I'd make a bundle on the sale of the old one.

Nope. Now, I know the true meaning of the phrase "Voodoo Economics." A real estate agent with the magic powers of a witch doctor couldn't have gotten anything near what I originally asked for that turkey.

As a matter of fact, several years ago I went to see Madame Coldwell Banker, a fortune teller, who specialized in real estate, and asked her to look inside her crystal ball and tell me what she saw in the future in regard to the house I was trying to sell.

"I see a tall, dark stranger," she said.

"A buyer willing to pay cash for the asking price?" I asked.

"No," the seer replied. He looks more like a bankruptcy lawyer."

Yeah, I learned my lesson. Actually, I learned several.

LESSON NO. 1: Never buy another house until you've sold the one you're in.

LESSON NO. 2: Never think about burning a house you can't sell. You never know just how close you might come to actually doing it.

LESSON NO. 3: Selling my house at a big loss is an economic indicator all right: It indicates that I'm an idiot when it comes to real estate.

Pleading for Bush's tuition grants

President Bush has launched one more appeal to Congress to give his plan of tuition grants a fair trial. The appeal is hopeless, but the effort is useful. The idea makes so much good sense that ultimately it will command popular and political support. The more it is discussed, the better.

Under the Bush proposal, Congress would appropriate $500 million for the coming fiscal year. States and cities wishing to participate in the program would apply for demonstration grants.

Within a given school system, every eligible child would receive a grant of $1,000 to be applied toward tuition in any lawfully operating public, private or religious school.

Critics of the plan raise a threshold objection: Any grant that went even indirectly toward support of a sectarian school would be unconstitutional. Lamar Alexander, secretary of education, disputes the contention. He finds an analogy in the GI educational benefits of World War II.

These were not restricted to enrollment in non-sectarian institutions. Thousands of veterans used tax funds to attend such schools as Notre Dame and Fordham.

Alexander feels the president's plan "is unquestionably constitutional under Supreme Court precedents," but in today's litigious society, to say that something is "unquestionable" is a highly questionable assertion.

The court has been wrestling with such questions since the Everson case of 1947. That was the case in which the court approved the use of public funds to bus children to private schools. In 1968 came the Allen case, extending permissible aid to non-sectarian textbooks for use in Catholic schools.

Time passed, and in 1973 came the Nyquist case. Here the court struck down a New York law providing small tuition grants only to low-income families whose children attended non-public schools.

Finally in this sequence came the Mueller case of 1983. Here the court upheld a Minnesota law providing income tax deductions for educational expenses. Unlike the New York law in Nyquist, the Minnesota law covered children attending any school, public or private.

James J. Kilpatrick

Two of the justices who supported the Minnesota plan (Burger and Powell) have retired. Two dissenters who opposed the Minnesota plan (Marshall and Brennan) also have retired. It is anyone's guess how the court would divide if the president's plan ever comes to the bar. We all should live so long.

Constitutional issues to one side, the plan offers incentives that many cities would find wonderfully attractive. Under the president's formula, for example, parents in Birmingham, Ala., would receive up to $34 million that would find its way to both public and private schools.

Denver parents might receive as much as $40 million. In Fresno, Calif., the tempting figure is $49 million. In Hartford, Conn., $20 million; in Orlando, Fla., $72 million. These bonanzas would come on top of existing grants.

The whole idea is to give eligible parents a choice for their children. Such critics as Sen. Tom Harkin of Iowa scoff at the idea that $1,000 would go far toward tuition at a private school. Alexander has some rebuttal figures: The average tuition among Catholic schools is $1,327; more than one-third of the Catholic schools charge less than $1,000. The most recent data for all private schools indicate that 44 percent have tuition fees under $1,000.

The big objection, insistently raised by the huge teacher unions, is that any program of tuition vouchers would hurt the public schools. Alexander denies it. His argument is that many public schools do a poor job because they lack competition. Once a program of tuition grants had gone into operation, the weak schools would have to improve if they wanted to stay alive.

My own feeling, expressed for the past 30 years, is that tuition grants symbolize the very essence of democracy. In a free society we ought to take the total funds available for education, and divide that figure by the number of children between 6 and 18. Every child ideally would get an equal slice of the pie. One family might choose a school specializing in languages, another in sciences, another in the humanities — and for that matter, another in athletics.

Over a span of 20 years, so bold a program would invigorate both public and private schools. In time we might wind up with better poets, biologists, engineers and second basemen. It's surely worth a try.

Seven stogies, no bogies: Laoretti wins Open

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

BETHLEHEM, Pa. (AP) — Add Larry Laoretti to the list of homespun heroes of golf.

What John Daly did for the "grip it and rip it" approach with his PGA title last year, Laoretti did for fat cigars and fast play Sunday with a runaway four-stroke victory in the U.S. Senior Open at Saucon Valley Country Club.

Laoretti, who has an endorsement deal with a tobacco company, puffed his way through seven stogies, three birdies and a final-round 68 that left the likes of Jack Nicklaus, Dave Stockton, Chi Chi Rodriguez and Gary Player gasping for breath.

"For the man to play 9-under is just phenomenal. It's just incredible scoring," said Player, the winner of nine majors, two Senior Opens and 16 senior tour events who finished five strokes back Sunday in a four-way tie for third.

Laoretti's biggest previous win? "Maybe a $5 Nassau somewhere," he said, though he had won a couple of local tournaments in 30 years as a club pro, and had three seconds on the Senior PGA Tour last year.

Laoretti is another everyman champion, the easygoing guy at the club who never takes the cigar out of his mouth and whose ball is in the air before his partner has even found the 150-yard marker.

"The more time I have to think about a shot, the worse I do," said Laoretti, 53, who was a club pro in New York and Florida before giving it all up three years ago to take a shot at the big senior money.

He'd won more than a half-million dollars in two seasons before Sunday's $130,000 check.

But he and his wife, Susan, their 2½-year-old son, Lonnie, and caddie Bob O'Brien still go from tourney to tourney in a motor home. Their base for the past

Larry Laoretti, of Palm City Fla., with his ever present cigar in place, hits a shot during Sunday's final round of the U.S. Senior week: Site No. 43, Quaker Woods Campground.

There will be no change. "For me, traveling in a motor home is first class," Laoretti said. "We like it that way."

For a man who spends as much time over the ball as, well, a 2½-year-old, the key to Laoretti's success Sunday was summed up in two ironic words: "Patience prevailed," he said.

His consistent driving and iron play led to 11 straight pars on the 6,700-yard, par-71 course. Then he hit an 8-iron to two feet on the par-5 12th for birdie to go 7-under. Playing partner Al Geiberger who was tied with Laoretti for the lead, bogeyed the hole for a two-stroke swing.

Laoretti added a 14-footer for birdie on No. 16, and the 20-footer on the 18th merely capped the day and gave Susan an excuse to run across the green and hug her husband, though bemused Geiberger had yet to putt out.

Other contenders found different ways to fade or fall short. Runner-up Jim Colbert shot a 32 on the back for a 69 and 279 total, but a double-bogey from the trees on the par-4 No. 5 haunted him.

Nicklaus made a customary charge, shooting a 67, but took bogey-6 on No. 12 when his tee shot clipped some trees. He was in third at 280.

Dave Stockton, the leader after two rounds at 9-under before a disastrous 77 on Saturday, regained his putting touch Sunday but missed nine greens in a round of 70, finishing in the tie for third.

Geiberger followed his bogey at the 12th with another on the 13th and had a 72 to complete the group at 280.

As Geiberger pointed out on Saturday, there are different categories of players on the senior tour: superstars who attract television and big galleries and big purses; the steady pros like himself, Stockton and Colbert, and club pros finding new life. "He's one of those Cinderella stories of the senior tour," Geiberger said.

Laoretti said he never tried to play on the PGA Tour. "I was a club pro and happy to be a club pro," he said. But he also said: "I've always regretted that I didn't go try."

Laoretti said he played in eight tour events and one U.S. Open, missing the cut at Winged Foot in 1974.

The years as a club pro, going through a divorce, working on his game in preparation for the senior tour while his wife supported them.

HR breaks Rangers' streak

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Starter Dennis Cook kept Cleveland in the game long enough to give his batters a shot at a victory.

Mark Whiten and Carlos Baerga did the rest, and the Indians salvaged the finale of a four-game series Sunday night with a 6-3 victory over the Texas Rangers.

"Sometimes you just have to give credit to the other team," said Rangers interim manager Toby Harrah, who suffered his first loss after three wins since replacing Bobby Valentine on Thursday.

Harrah went with reliever Kenny Rogers in two clutch situations, and Rogers was no match for Baerga, who was 3-for-4, and Whiten, who set up one run with his baserunning, then lined the game-winning three-run home run in the eighth.

"Cook kept us in the game and gave our offense a chance to get something going," said Indians manager Mike Hargrove. "Starting pitchers have to give you seven good innings."

Moon, Jones may miss Oilers camp

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Oilers are getting close to training camp but are far from set. Six veterans and a dozen draft choices remain unsigned.

Questions also remain about whether quarterback Warren Moon or longtime veteran defensive end Sean Jones will be attending camp in San Antonio next week.

"As usual, I'm very hopeful we'll get them all in," Oilers general manager Mike Holovak said. "But it may be going a little slower than it did last year."

The summer of 1991 will be remembered as one of the Oilers' worst contract nightmares as 12 players, including the club's top three draft choices, missed all or part of training camp. Six veterans never made it to camp at all.

"We probably have as many players signed as anyone right now," Oilers coach Jack Pardee said. "Still, it's always the one that you don't have signed that you worry about."

Moon has said he is considering being a first-time holdout for training camp when veterans report next Sunday because of a continued discrepancy over his bonus pay from last season.

Jones, 29, announced last week he was retiring from the game. But because he still is under contract with the Oilers, team officials say he more likely is pursuing a trade.

Last season's Pro Bowl starters guard Mike Munchak, defensive end William Fuller and cornerback Cook held the hot-hitting Rangers to three runs, two earned, over 6 2/3 innings, before Steve Olin (3-3) pitched two scoreless innings for the victory. Eric Plunk got the last out for his second save.

All benefited from the hitting of All-Star Game selection Baerga, who was 10-for-14 in the series. Whiten, who went 2-for-3, and scored twice, and Albert Belle, who hit a two-run homer, his 19th, in the third.

Whiten put the Indians ahead 3-2 in the seventh.

Immediately after Rogers replaced starter Todd Burns with Whiten on first, pinch hitter Brook Jacoby beat out a single down the line that pulled third baseman Dean Palmer out of position. Whiten kept running and got to third before shortstop Dickie Thon could reach the base.

Whiten promptly scored on Sandy Alomar's suicide squeeze bunt. "That was heads-up baserunning by Whiten," saluted Harrah.

"Palmer has to make the play going to his backhand side," Whiten said. "Even though he has a strong arm, I knew he couldn't get much on the throw, so I kept running."

Texas, which scored all of its runs on two-out rallies, tied it off Cook in the seventh on a triple by Rafael Palmeiro, who tied a club record with the fourth five-hit game of his career.

In the eighth, Baerga ignited the winning rally with a single.

"Between Baerga and Palmeiro, I'm not sure who was hotter," said Hargrove. "When Carlos learns more about his ability and this league, he can be one of the best hitters in the league."

"I don't know how to get him out," Harrah said of Baerga, who is 18-for-36 against Texas this year.

"I haven't been doing anything differently against Texas," said Baerga. "I'm just really happy to be going to the All-Star Game."

When pinch hitter Carlos Martinez hit a one-out double, Harrah stuck with Rogers, who has allowed 18 of 32 inherited runners to score. Whiten lined an 0-1 pitch over the left-field wall.

"Rogers threw a fastball that I was able to drive," said Whiten.

Cris Dishman top the list of the Oilers' unsigned veterans for 1992. Others still unsigned Sunday included free safety Bo' Orlando, receiver Curtis Duncan and backup linebacker Scott Kozak.

Dishman, who will be starting his fifth season in the NFL, already has said he'll stay out until the final week of camp. He made $575,000 last year, including incentives, and reportedly is seeking $1 million this year.

Munchak, who made $800,000 plus bonuses last season, also wants a $1 million paycheck for his 11th pro season and is threatening to be a first-time holdout.

Fuller, a seven-year veteran, made $650,000 in base salary last season, but incentives brought his pay up to about $1 million. This year, he wants more than $1 million.

Texans win local hang glide

HERALD STAFF REPORT

Mike Degtoff won the cross country competition and Dave Duecker took first place in spot landing at the Third Annual Big Spring Cross Country Championship and Fun Fly-In for hang gliders last week.

Degtoff, of Round Rock, led after each day of the three-day cross country competition, finishing with a 146.85 mile total. He had the best flight of the meet at 108.1 miles.

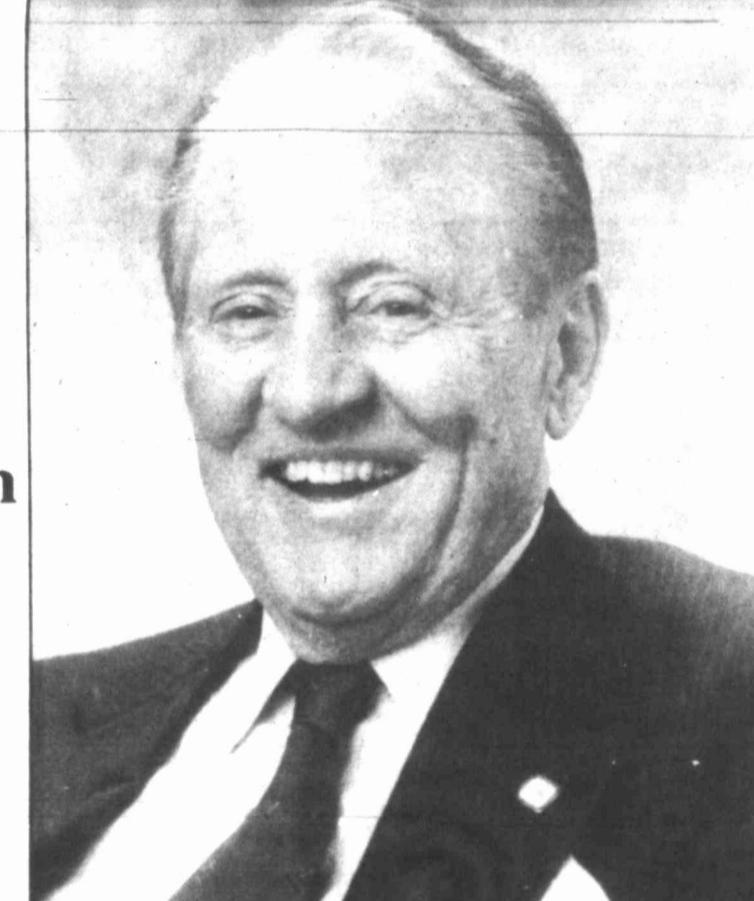

Duecker, a Denver City pilot, was the only flyer to land directly on the spot in the spot landing contest. Second place in spot landing went to Martin Mitter at nine feet and third place to Mark Lippford at 10.5 feet.

Meet director Tim Doogs said the event went off "without a hitch" and that he will try to have a bigger event here next year.

FORT WORTH — Candidates to become United Methodist bishops include five Texans, with four of five others currently serving from the state set to retire this year.

United Methodists' eight-state South Central Jurisdictional Conference, scheduled to begin Monday night, will also consider electing the region's first female bishop.

The jurisdictional conference will start with a worship service at the First United Methodist Church in Fort Worth, the host congregation. The meeting concludes Thursday.

The conference, one of five conducted simultaneously nationwide,

Trio back after week at FHA meet

By JOHN H. WALKER
Managing Editor

Three area high school students are back in West Texas today after spending a week in Chicago at the national convention of the Future Homemakers of America (FHA).

And the three — Sterling City's Denise Petty, Coahoma's Dianne Hayes and Big Spring's Melinda Wilhelm — all hold state or national office in the organization.

The three arrived back in Big Spring about 7:15 Friday evening and joined in a celebration with friends and family at Pizza Inn.

At one time, FHA was exactly what the name implies — a high school organization to help make better homemakers.

Now, however, the organization is much more because of the changing family roles and responsibilities.

"The focus of the organization is centered on the growth of the family," Petty explained. "We work toward personal growth and on the multiple roles of the family members... multiple wages earners in a family and the development of community leaders."

Hayes added that FHA is the only vocational organization with the home as the central area of concern.

Petty is a national officer in the organization, and went through regional elections in March, state elections in April and the national election last week to earn the seat.

Hayes, the Region 1 vice president for public relations, was elected in March while Wilhelm, the state vice president of HERO, or Home Economics-Related Occupations, was elected in March at regionals and April at state convention.

Region 1 stretches from Coahoma to El Paso and from Big Spring to the top of the Panhandle.

French planes hit by small-arms fire

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — A U.N. official said today that three French planes had been hit by small-arms fire as they brought aid to Sarajevo, underlining the risks of the international effort to help the besieged city.

Mortars, anti-aircraft weapons and heavy artillery bombarded Sarajevo and its airport overnight. Weekend fighting also was reported outside the capital, where a journalist described scenes of burning homes and corpses strewn in the rubble.

France announced today it was postponing sending nine military helicopters pledged to the United Nations in Sarajevo. It was unclear whether the postponement was linked to the shootings of the French planes, which occurred Tuesday, Friday and Sunday. The helicopters were to have left for Bosnia on Wednesday.

Maj. Gen. Lewis MacKenzie, commander of the U.N. force in Sarajevo, said he had informed governments about the attacks on the French planes, but all 17 scheduled flights carrying 207 tons of food landed Sunday and another 17 were expected today.

"It is up to the governments whether to send the planes and up to the pilots whether to land," the Canadian officer said.

The French aircraft were hit by small-caliber bullets that did not penetrate them. All were able to land.

The airport, closed for months because of the fighting, was reopened June 29 by U.N. peacekeepers. The United States and several European countries have since flown in tons of food and medicine.

U.N. civil affairs officer Mik Magnusson said he hoped a planned airlift of seriously ill Sarajevans would begin today with the evacuation of Zinaida Agic.

The six-week-old girl, born with a heart defect after Sarajevo's siege began, was flown to Ljubljana, Slovenia, on a special Italian plane carrying a surgeon, Magnusson said.

A U.N. military observer was wounded late Sunday near Velika Kladusa in northern Bosnia when his jeep ran over an anti-tank mine, Croatian defense officials said. Maj. John Brian, 39, of New Zealand suffered serious leg injuries but was out of danger, hospital officials in the Croatian city of Karlovac said.

Bosnian officials say at least 7,500 people have died in the war that began after Bosnia's majority Muslims and Croats voted on Feb. 29 to secede from Yugoslavia. Ethnic Serbs, who want to maintain ties with Yugoslavia, have grabbed about two-thirds of the republic.

Western nations stepped up pressure on Yugoslavia, which has backed Bosnia's Serbs, by deploying eight warships Sunday to the Adriatic to monitor compliance with a U.N. trade embargo on the country, which now is made up of only Serbia and Montenegro.

Radovan Karadzic, the leader of Bosnia's Serbs, spoke out against international intervention, the Yugoslav news agency Tanjug reported today. Foreign intervention would be "disastrous for the civilian population," Tanjug quoted Karadzic as saying.

Croatian President Franjo Tudjman on Sunday had backed repeated appeals by his Bosnian counterpart, Alija Izetbegovic, for an urgent session of the U.N. Security Council and military intervention. So far, the West has rejected appeals for military action.

Sarajevo was quiet today after blasts of mortar and anti-aircraft fire echoed overnight around its suburbs and in the city center. The heavy fighting subsided shortly after midnight, U.N. officials said.

Serbian forces still surrounded the eastern town of Gorazde. Bosnian officials accused Serb forces of bombarding Muslim-held town from the air and with tanks during the weekend.

Houses were burning and corpses lay in the streets, or buried under rubble, Enes Musovic, a Bosnian television journalist, reported from the town about 30 miles east of Sarajevo.

Both sides agreed to a brief cease-fire Sunday so the United Nations could truck more than 100 tons of food to Sarajevo suburb of Dobrinja, which has been under siege for 71 days.

Seriously ill child evacuated

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — An infant girl suffering from a congenital heart defect was flown out of Sarajevo today, the first passenger in what U.N. officials hope will become an airlift of the seriously ill.

A U.N. official, Mik Magnusson, said six-week-old Zinaida Agic was born with a hole in a wall of her heart and needed special care not available in Sarajevo, which has been under siege for four months.

An Italian air force C-130 transport with an ambulance and a surgeon on board flew into Sarajevo from Pisa, Italy, at 1:30 p.m. and left with the girl for Ljubljana, Slovenia, shortly after 2 p.m.

Magnusson said the hospital in Ljubljana has diagnostic equipment necessary to determine whether the girl needs surgery.

The child's mother, Senada Agic, accompanied her to Ljubljana.

Zinaida was brought to the Sarajevo airport in a white U.N. armored personnel carrier converted into an ambulance. She was accompanied by Maj. Vanessa Lloyd Davis, a British army doctor who helped arrange the evacuation after a Sarajevo hospital appealed to the United Nations for help.

U.N. officials are trying to arrange for the evacuation of seriously ill people, some children and stranded foreigners aboard relief planes that bring in supplies but leave empty.

Magnusson said officials estimate that there are about 170 seriously ill people, including about 50 children, who cannot be treated effectively in Sarajevo.

Historic building to get facelift, renovation

HERALD STAFF REPORT

One of Big Spring's historic buildings is due to get a facelift beginning this month.

First Presbyterian Church, Seventh and Runnels, has a major renovation planned. The $83,000 first phase will be contracted by Johnston Construction of Big Spring.

Initial work includes restoration, cleaning and repair of all masonry on the building. The brick and cut stone construction needs repair, and mortar needs cleaning or replacement.

"Eventually, we'll remodel the inside too," said Flynn V. Long, minister to the church. "Outside, it will be preserved and made to look almost exactly as it did originally. There will be some changes, but it will be basically restoring it back to what it was."

Also, a new entrance is to be built on Seventh Street. The doors will be at ground level to make the building more accessible to people with disabilities. Windows all over the structure will be replaced with an aluminum style that looks like the historic original but will be easier to maintain.

Built in 1929, the main part of the church and bell tower are among the oldest church buildings in town. First Presbyterian was founded in 1891 at Fifth and Main Streets.

Long said W.R. Settles, who built the Settles Hotel, was an original member of the church and contributed to its construction. The church was built one year before the hotel.

Architect Barry Wagner of Fredericksburg said the church has been remarkably well preserved. Additions built in the 1960s were very compatible with the original building, said Wagner, whose company will supervise the renovation.

"Mostly the mortar on the exterior needs to be cleaned," Wagner said. "There's some algae that has grown on it."

Restoration is also designed to correct erosion — after years of rain and blowing sand.

Funding for the church's new look is expected to come from a campaign to begin this fall, although some money has already been raised, Long said.

Eventually, the church hopes to completely remodel the structure, add tower bells and build classrooms and a Fellowship Hall.

A committee overseeing the project includes: John Kennemur, Tana Kennemur, Jim Bill Little, Katie Grimes, Polly Mays, Joe Horton, Claudie Patterson and Mark Morgan.

First Presbyterian Church is beginning a major renovation later this month. As part of the plan, this entrance on Seventh Street will be renovated to be more accessible to people with disabilities.

When relationship violence hurts men: rare, but painful

Difficult for men to admit abuse

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FINDLAY, Ohio (AP) — Counselors who work with battered men and women say it's especially difficult for men to admit they have been abused.

"Imagine how difficult it is for a woman to pick up the hot line and say she's been abused. Then imagine the embarrassment a man feels when he calls and he reaches a woman at the other end of that hot line," said Joan Dugan, who runs a shelter for battered women in northeastern Ohio.

Ms. Dugan is director of Action Ohio, a nonprofit group that lobbies for legislation to help battered women.

Steve Piatt, director of the Ohio Battered Network, said emphasis on domestic violence funding and help should continue to be placed on women abused by men. But he said the problems men face should not be ignored.

Piatt's nonprofit group helps set guidelines for shelters. He also is director of The Battered Men's Group, which treats men and women who abuse their mates. He said women abuse men for the same reasons as men who abuse women.

"They have a hard time dealing with the pain beneath their anger. They see it as a way of dealing with problems. They give themselves permission to be verbally and physically violent," Piatt said.

First Step, which operates a shelter for battered women and a treatment program in Fostoria, earlier this year set up a program called Passages for battered men and women to talk in groups. A counselor helps them cope.

There are about 20 men and women in each session, and the group includes abused men as well as men who were convicted of abusing women.

"They feel a little uncomfortable in the beginning," said David Engle, program director. "Then they have indicated that they were glad they had the opportunity to share with a male their perspective."

Engle thinks more abused men will seek help.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Bill L., a 32-year-old Californian, figures his girlfriend hit him hundreds of times in their two years together. She bit, scratched and punched.

"She threatened to kill me a couple times," he said. "She said she would wait until I'd fallen asleep, and then kill me."

And there was the day, after he finally had moved out, that she came at him with a five-foot-long barbell bar because he had a date for a Rolling Stones concert and she didn't.

So when he read the other day that the American Medical Association's new guidelines on domestic violence focused on female victims, "it was as though my suffering didn't occur to the rest of the world because I'm a man."

Men are far more likely to inflict physical injury than to endure it in their relationships with women, experts say. But Bill L. is not alone.

The AMA's scientific affairs council is planning to look into abuse of men by women, said Dr. Robert McAfee, vice chairman of the AMA board of trustees.

"About 5 percent of the domestic violence that we can identify does involve males" as victims, he said.

Most of this is probably psychological, involving berating or belittlement, rather than physical attacks, he said.

Studies suggest men are the primary victims of physical violence in some 5 percent to 10 percent of domestic fights, said psychologist Robert Geffner, president of the Family Violence and Sexual Assault Institute in Tyler, Texas.

"It's not a major problem, in comparison to battered women," he said.

If a woman physically hurts a man, it is often after years of being abused by him, said Irene Gillman, director of the Psychological and Physical Abuse Center at Hofstra University in Hempstead, N.Y.

"I think there's no question about it, more women get physically abused than men," she said. "It's 50-50 in terms of emotional abuse, I would say."

But Murray Straus, a domestic violence expert at the University of New Hampshire, said his studies and more than 20 others found that women physically attack men in a relationship about as often as men attack women, if one includes minor violence like a slap or shove.

He stressed that the picture is far different if one focuses on injuries.

Women are six to seven times more likely to be seriously injured in a domestic dispute than men are, he said. That is partly because of gender differences in strength, but also "I think women in most cases don't have as much intent to injure," he said.

Only a minority of fights are bad enough to cause such injury, Straus said. A national survey found that two-thirds of physical conflicts involved only what he called minor violence: slapping, shoving and throwing plates or other objects, he said.

Geffner said studies showing that women physically attack men as often as the reverse overlook a crucial point: "Is he really in fear, is he being intimidated, or is she striking back in self-defense?"

The question of who is doing the intimidating is particularly important to answer in cases of "mutual combat," in which a man and a woman hit each other. Some research suggests this occurs in 20 percent to 35 percent of domestic physical fights, Geffner said.

"When you talk to some of these men in treatment, they say, 'She hurt me, but I wasn't really afraid of her. I knew she couldn't really hurt me,'" he said.

Clinton's first lady is different

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Hillary Clinton would make a different kind of First Lady — a lawyer in her own right who takes an untraditional view of the role.

"People ask me, 'How are you going to do the job differently?'" the wife of Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton said. "First of all, it's not really a job."

"We ought to let individuals have the right to be who they are. Eventually, we'll get to the point where being married to a public official is like being married to a journalist or a lawyer or anything else."

There has even been talk that she should be the Clinton who is running for president.

"People have always talked to me about running since high school," she said, adding that she had never considered it.

Women are moving into position as presidential contenders, Mrs. Clinton said, and she added:

"But outspoken women are seen as aggressive and pushy. Conservative women have succeeded first because they're more in line in identifying with the traditional male image of what's appropriate."

Mysterious deaths along border cause families pain

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

BROWNSVILLE, Texas — Tears flow into the Rio Grande from both sides of the border — from Teresa Salazar in Brownsville and from Faustina Rivera in Matamoros, two housewives in mourning.

In March, Ms. Salazar gave birth to a stillborn boy. In April, Ms. Rivera gave birth to a stillborn girl. Both children were anencephalic — they were born with undeveloped brains, with partly formed skulls.

"I felt responsible. ... I thought it was my fault he was born that way," said Ms. Salazar, months later.

Ms. Rivera never held her baby — "They didn't let me see her. I wanted to, but they wouldn't let me. I wanted to at least know her." But her husband, Hermilo Mata, touched the child before she was buried.

"I felt ... I don't know ... I felt something," he said, pausing frequently as he groped for words. "I didn't know why."

These two families are not alone in their tragedies, or in their bewilderment. On both sides of the border, far too many children are being born with brain and spinal defects. And no one knows why.

Some say the cause is in the breeze — toxic chemicals emitted by factories on the Mexico side. Some say solvents in the water are to blame, or that the fathers were exposed to chemicals at work. Others point to the mothers' diets.

But a yearlong medical investigation conducted by the Texas Department of Health and the U.S. Centers for Disease Control failed to find an answer; scientists said this month they could not determine any link between the defects and environmental factors.

"You've heard ... about all the things that people are pointing the finger at as a cause," said Dr. Dennis Perrotta, state director of epidemiology. "All of them, some of them, or none of them may indeed be true."

The only point of agreement is that something is wrong.

Nationally, anencephalic births occur two to three times per 10,000 live births; the rate in Texas is three or four per 10,000. In Cameron County, surrounding Brownsville, the rate has been consistently higher since about 1986, and jumped to an average of about 14 per 10,000 around 1989.

A year ago, obstetrical nurses at Valley Regional Medical Center reported a horrific streak — three anencephalic births during a single 36-hour period.

In Matamoros, meanwhile, a similar escalation has been detected. In 1987, the rate was 3.2 per 10,000 births. The next year it increased to 5.3, and then to 11.8; for the past three years, it has been 15 or above.

There also have been increases in other disorders, like spina bifida. These are neural tube defects, disorders involving the brain or spinal cord.

The disorders occur in embryos during the first 28 days of life, when the neural tube, a precursor to the spinal cord, is developing, said CDC epidemiologist Dr. Joe Mujinare.

"If the development does not occur properly ... at the head end, then anencephaly occurs," Mujinare said. "If the development does not occur properly at the lower end of the spine, then spina bifida occurs."

"Spina bifida can be very mild," he said, "or it can be very severe." Anencephaly, however, is fatal. The babies are either stillborn or die shortly after delivery.

Studies have shown links — some say tenuous links — between xylene and toluene, common chemicals used in Matamoros factories, and neural tube defects.

A 1979 study showed a link between women who had babies with neural tube disorders and exposure to toluene and xylene. Another medical study suggested that fathers who were routinely exposed to solvents at work were at greater risk of producing anencephalic children.

A 1991 study conducted by the National Toxic Campaign Fund found high concentrations of xylene in canals around some Matamoros factories.

Samples collected at the discharge near one plant showed the water contained 2.8 million parts per billion of xylene, more than 6,300 times U.S. drinking water standards. A sample from another plant had 23.2 million ppb, more than 52,700 times U.S. standards.

Marco Kältöfen, director of the Citizens' Environmental Laboratory in Boston, said the compounds also evaporate readily, making exposure likely through the air as well through water.

Air sampling in Brownsville has also consistently detected toluene.

A private study group has mapped the anencephalic cluster in Brownsville and found that most of the mothers lived within a 2.4-mile radius of the river. There has also been a seasonal link; the clusters for the last two years have begun showing in the spring.

These are all tantalizing clues to the mystery, but for the moment they are nothing more than clues: "It may be that we will never really know," says Dr. Tim Thurber, a pediatrician who is part of that group of local medical professionals.

Planning can save your family reunion

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WACO, Texas — Family reunions just aren't what they used to be. Almost extinct are the informal get-togethers held at Grandma's during which families talked, ate and reminisced.

Of course, there is still lots of talking and eating, but today's reunions often resemble a small scale carnival with a smorgasbord of activities, goodies and games.

Unlike the old-fashioned reunions, today's take lots of planning. Most families start a year or more in advance collecting money, choosing activities and securing a site.

Emma Navara Ceska, a Waco resident, said her family appoints a committee to do most of its planning.

"A planning committee, composed of representatives from different families, decides where it is going to be held, activities and needed supplies," she said.

Betty Kirkland, a Bellmead resident, said her family sent mailers to relatives months in advance asking if, where and when a reunion should be held.

"After we received their responses, we began making plans," she said. "We reserved rooms, talked to caterers and planned activities."

Although many families are opting for more elaborate, expensive family reunions, informal ones are still suitable for many families.

Regardless of whether the reunion is large or small, it still serves to keep the family intact.

Charlotte Talley, a McLennan County extension agent, said families will probably always have reunions because they help preserve family heritage. There are a host of activities that families can share, she said, to help keep customs and traditions alive.

As with most events, the success of the reunion depends on the work that goes into it. Preparation should be made for locations, meals and activities months in advance.

Larger families may opt to hold the reunion in a park pavilion or a hotel conference room. However, a backyard may be sufficient for smaller families. After the site is selected, families can decide on the type of meal that will be served.

Many families choose a buffet-style, pot luck meal, but catering is another option. Pot luck meals are cheaper, but they may cost more in manpower for families. Caterers usually take care of cooking, serving and cleaning, allowing for more relaxation.

After the basics are established, planning committees must decide if they are going to offer activities for children and adults.

Children's events can include sports, a pinata, contests and board games. Adult activities often include card tournaments, domino tournaments, dancing and story telling. It is really up to the family.

Waco resident Lola Miller said her family reunion begins with a spiritual devotion and ends with a competitive baseball tournament.

"We try to offer something for everybody," she said. "It makes it worth looking forward to."

Families should not get so carried away in the planning of the event that they forget to make plans for paying for it. Method of payment usually depends on size, location and activities of the reunion.

Families sponsoring smaller reunions may wait until the day of the event to take up a small love offering. However, organizers of larger events usually need funds in advance to pay for the rental of buildings and other expenses.

After the planning that goes into reunions, families usually are ready to sit down and enjoy them, but the work never ends.

Any teen can look like stars of '90210'

Whatever your ZIP code, "Beverly Hills, 90210" is within reach.

The Fox Television Network hit has spun off a torrent of merchandise, including teen fashions, look-alike dolls and paper products such as posters and calendars.

Hamilton Projects of New York, the official licensing company, says more than 1 million T-shirts were sold in the first month and 5 million posters in less than six months.

There's an official fanzine, with stories on how to dress like the characters and a profile of co-star Tori Spelling that says — surprise! — she loves to shop. There are also spin-off books on young-adult shelves, and Harper Collins says it plans to publish two new related novels by year's end.

Meanwhile, Mattel Toys is adding new meaning to the idea that the cast is a bunch of dolls with five "90210" fashion dolls. These miniature mannequins, with measurements not unlike Ken and Barbie, are dressed in school garb, plus a bathing suit for fun in the California sun.

All outfits are modeled on clothes worn on the show — leather-like bomber jackets, jeans and cowboy boots on the guys and funky menswear and denim miniskirts on the girls.

Brandon and Brenda Walsh, Dylan McKay, Donna Martin and Kelly Taylor dolls are in stores now. Andrea Zuckerman, Steve Sanders and David Silver are expected by year's end. Each is $17.50 suggested retail.

Apparel with the "90210" logo was introduced last October. Look for items like T-shirts, boxer shorts, jackets, shorts and hats, wristwatches and sneakers. Some also come with character likenesses.

Retailers include JC Penney, Sears, Macy's and Belk's — as well as some stores abroad.

"We've had a very strong start in Spain, Germany, England and Scandinavia," says Debra Joester, president of the licensing company. "We're marketing in Europe simply because there's such enormous demand from manufacturers for '90210' fashions over there."

With that sweet smell of success, an official fragrance can't be far behind. A July 15 launch is scheduled for JC Penney — with eye, lip and nail colors to follow.

Readers unleash pet language peeves

DEAR READERS: I recently wrote a column on the misuse of words, grammatical goofs and assorted speech irritants, and invited my readers to send me their pet peeves concerning same. Well, here's Collection No. 2.

The most annoying speech irritant is still all those "you knows?" and a close second is beginning every sentence with "basically." People who say, "I could care less" mean to convey that they care so little they could NOT care less — which is what they should have said in the first place.

Most people, even those in the jewelry business, pronounce "jewelry" as "jool-ree" instead of "jool-uh-ree." And many people in the real estate business pronounce "realtor" as "reel-a-tor"; it's

Dear Abby

"reel-tor," really it is!

If you think "epitome" means the ultimate, the tops or the height of — go stand in the corner. "Epitome" means a person or thing that is typical of, or possesses to a high degree the features of a whole class.

The word "arthritis" is correctly pronounced "arth-right-us" (three syllables); so why do so many people insist on pronouncing it

"arthur-ris"? The same for the word "athlete" — not "ath-a-leet."

My pet peeve is the lawyer or journalist who uses the word "gentleman" as follows: "According to the police report, a masked gentleman knocked the elderly woman to the ground and fled with her purse." (Some "gentleman"!)

The word "nauseous" is often misused, even by well-educated professionals, instead of the word "nauseated." Here's a way to remember the distinction: If you are nauseated, you are sick. If you are nauseous, you make other people sick.

Regardless of what you read in the ads, "Where it's at" is incorrect. "Where it is" is correct. Forget the "at."

Do you know what an asterisk is?

Of course you do. It's the little starlike symbol used in print to indicate the omission of letters or words. (It looks like " * "). But why do most people pronounce it "ass-trick"?

The confusion with "lie" and "lay" is still baffling to many. I explained that people lie down and chickens lay eggs. A reader now informs me, "People lay money on the counter, dogs lie by the fire, and magazines are found lying on the table. All last summer, I lay in my hammock and didn't produce a single egg."

Prominent newscasters have said "most unique" and "partially destroyed." "Unique" and "destroyed" are absolute terms and cannot be qualified, any more than "pregnant" or "dead."

Never say, "It's a true fact." If it's a fact, it's true. Also, forget "old antique." If it's an antique — it's old.

In closing, for heaven's sake — never say, "for heaven's sake." Some people do, so for heaven's sake, watch your language. And, if you have a pet peeve I haven't mentioned, please send it to me.
