Stenholm cleared of wrongdoing

By ANA RADELAT
Herald Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — U.S. Rep. Charles Stenholm of Stamford has finally received a letter from the Justice Department clearing him of wrongdoing in the House bank scandal.

Stenholm received his letter just prior to leaving Washington for a pair of political rallies in West Texas over the weekend.

More than two weeks ago, special counsel Malcolm R. Wilkey began sending letters of exoneration to House members who had overdrawn their accounts.

The letters — hand delivered by FBI agents — said, "On the evidence we have reviewed, I have concluded that there is no basis for pursuing criminal violations concerning your account."

About 200 of the 325 current and former House members have already received an identical letter from Wilkey. A former federal judge and Republican appointee, Wilkey has been reviewing thousands of bad checks written on the House bank during a 39-month period which "ended about a year ago."

Stenholm, who wrote 86 overdrafts at the bank, said he was confident he would be cleared. He said he hadn't been worried that his letter of exoneration, delivered to his office on Thursday, took awhile to arrive.

"I felt all along that I would get a letter," he said. "Because my name is Stenholm, I have always been last alphabetically — but that's not how this investigation has been conducted."

"I accept the explanation that it's taking (Wilkey) a while to check through all the accounts."

In April, when it was first revealed that Stenholm had overdrawn his Capitol Hill account, the lawmaker said he had "poured his heart out" to reporters about his conduct.

"And I'll say right now what I said back then. I had been in error but had broken no laws," he said.

Stenholm also said he was confident all of his colleagues would be cleared. "I would be surprised if there has been any criminal behavior by any House member because of their relationship with the so-called House bank," he said.

While Wilkey has said he will issue more clearance letters, Bush administration officials admit that some House members will not receive letters soon and will remain under a "legal cloud" on election day.

Most of Stenholm's 86 overdrafts, which totalled about $100,000, were written to pay for run-of-the-mill living expenses such as utility and department store bills. But the congressman also overdraw his account to give a donation to a Texas university. Two of the overdrafts were written to the IRS and totalled about $4,500.

The House bank was not federally insured and amounted to little more than a cooperative in which lawmakers' payroll checks were held on deposit. No penalties or fees were charged for overdrafts, so in a sense, lawmakers could write themselves interest-free loans.

The House bank scandal became public, when the House ethics committee reported that members had repeatedly overdrawn their bank accounts. The committee conducted an inquiry and identified 22 abusers.

The full House voted later to turn over all records to the Justice Department for a criminal inquiry.

Perot to decide by week's end

By JOHN KING
AP Political Writer

DALLAS — Ross Perot said today he expects a decision by week's end on whether to reenter the presidential race as President Bush and Democrat Bill Clinton sent emissaries to Texas to lobby the Dallas billionaire's followers.

Each side was saying its plan for revitalizing the sluggish economy more closely resembled Perot's ideas than did their rival's version.

Perot said his state coordinators, who were gathered in Dallas, would hear from both sides, then take the message back to their home states and make a decision on what the future course should be.

Perot said in an interview on NBC's "Today" show that the announcement "won't happen tonight" but added that "the process if it stays on schedule will happen by the end of the week."

"I don't make the decision," Perot said. "Volunteers will make the decision."

Perot said the Republicans and Democrats would each make two-hour presentations in what he called an extraordinary gesture on the part of his organization.

"Have you ever seen the Democrats hold a meeting and say, here, Republicans, see if you can come in and take over the party? I don't think that's happened. You haven't seen it happen either way. That's what we're doing."

It is highly unlikely that Perot could win at this late stage, but he could significantly impact the race in several major states and perhaps even more if he unleashed a massive television advertising campaign.

So with a confounding political year at another curious turn, both the Bush and Clinton campaigns sent high-level delegations to showcase their economic and other campaign planks to Perot and the supporters in hopes of winning their backing.

"What Clinton supporters and Perot supporters share is a yearning to change this country for the better," said Clinton campaign chairman Mickey Kantor, the Arkansas governor's lead ambassador at today's meeting. "We want them to join us."

Perot was to meet informally with each delegation before they each entered closed, two-hour sessions.

Bush was campaigning in Dallas today but had no plans to attend the meeting; Clinton was off the campaign trail tending to state business in neighboring Arkansas.

Bush said in an interview on ABC's "Good Morning America" that his economic blueprint should make a hit at the Dallas meeting. "That's one of the reasons I'm glad that we were invited down there, because we have by far the best deficit-reduction plan," Bush said. "And I think that's what appeals to the Perot volunteers."

Clinton said on NBC's "Today" show that Bush had been like "a kid in a play yard" by rejecting a bipartisan commission's planned debate. He said the idea was to avoid talking about the economy. He said the president was holding out for a format that in 1988 allowed him to "zing old Dukakis over and over and blow off the questions."

On Sunday, Bush and Clinton jockeyed to be seen as the candidate most like quasi-candidate Perot, who in July abandoned plans to run but is on all 50 state ballots. Perot says he's reconsidering because neither Bush nor Clinton has offered a credible plan to cut the budget deficit.

"Mine is the only agenda that includes cutting the growth of mandatory government spending, cutting the size of government and reducing the federal deficit because that is the way to give the kids here today a better America tomorrow," Bush said in Michigan during a stop on his two-day train tour.

Clinton saw things differently. "If you compare Perot's plan to mine and Mr. Bush's, he's much closer to me than he is to Bush," Clinton said while campaigning in Iowa. He added that he and Perot held similar views on economics, political reform and health care.

While the Bush and Clinton camps tried to get close to some of Perot's positions, neither campaign was willing to endorse all of Perot's platform. It calls for raising Medicare premiums, the gasoline tax, income taxes on the middle class and taxing a higher percentage of Social Security benefits for retirees who earn more than $25,000 annually.

As they gathered, sentiment among Perot supporters appeared mixed. Many were adamant that Perot run but some were open to supporting either Bush or Clinton if convinced one had a serious economic plan.

"My hope is to come out with a candidate who is addressing the problems of the country," said Minnesota Perot leader Don Dow. "I'm not going in with a particular candidate locked in."

Having a local office of the American Red Cross helps in responses to the areas needy but that office needs donations to stay open. Some annual donations come from United Way.

"People need to make sure their local Red Cross stays open," said Marianne Brown Esquilin, director of the Howard/Glasscock office based at the Northside Community Center in Big Spring. "We have to have a local office so they can help."

Red Cross was here to help families that lost homes and other property to tornadoes that struck the Coahoma and Knott areas. Some $70,000 from the national Red Cross office was used to fix homes and assist families. Two were completely destroyed, 15 had major damage and 288 had minor damage.

Recently, more than a $1,000 was given to John Viera and his wife and their three children to buy food and furniture and help them move into a rented home on the old air base after their Northside home was gutted by fire Sept. 11. Up to another $1,200 may be authorized to help fix the home.

Seretha Baker, who works in food service at the Big Spring State Hospital, got more than $4,000 in help, including materials to renovate her home on Moore Road after it burned in July. Other help to Baker included clothes, motel bills, medicine and food.

"It was great," Baker said of the help. "They even helped me get some more clothes because I lost everything."

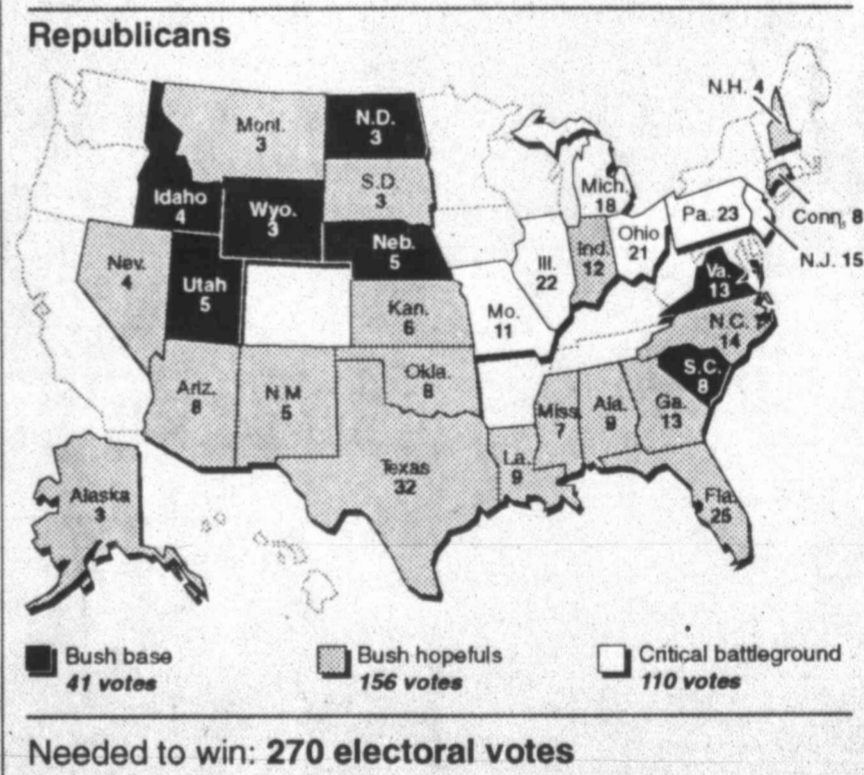

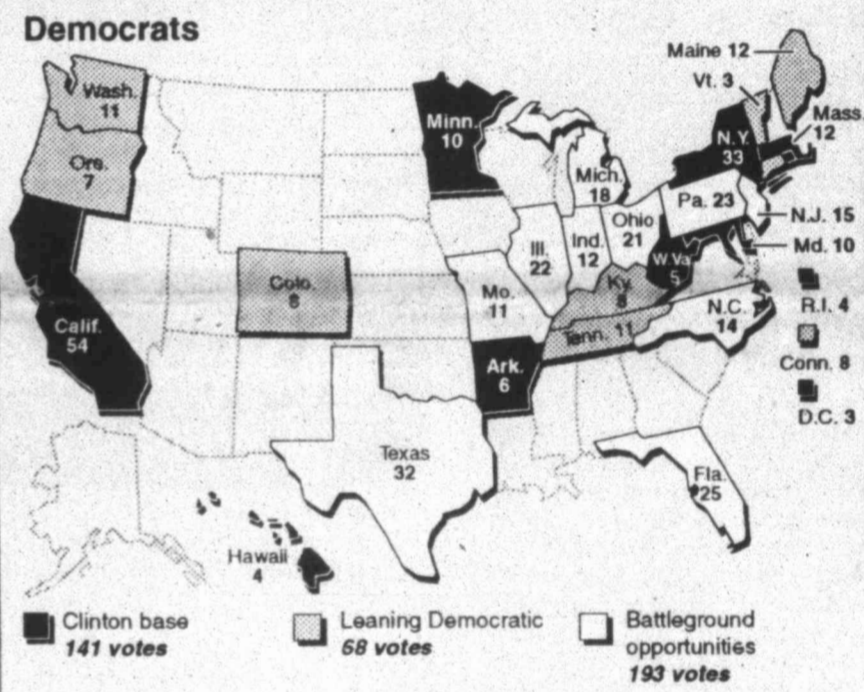

Rebuilding of the home, being done by her parents, is almost done, she said. "It looks pretty good."

The local Red Cross office, relying on $8,091 from United Way this year plus about another $10,000 in donations, has been threatened with closure in the past. Half that budget is for Esquilin's salary and $2,400 is

Laredo's river water helps boost water sales

The ASSOCIATED PRESS
LAREDO — Water vendors in this border city are doing a brisk business as residents fed up with the heavily treated Rio Grande water supply flock to inexpensive water machines with plastic jugs in hand.

"I think it's cleaner than regular water. And my husband keeps saying he gets a stomach ache from the city water," said Sara Jimenez, who regularly takes empty gallon jugs to the vending machines. But those who operate the machines say there's nothing wrong with the treated water supply, other than a bad taste. "The city water is completely safe in Laredo, that's what we use as our base," said Paul Reynolds, local president of Watermill Express, one of the water vendors here. "But being safe to drink and tasting good are two different things," he said. "We're removing many different things that are creating the taste."

pany operates the vending machines outside Laredo's HEB supermarkets says consumers are just becoming more selective. "People are becoming more health conscious, that's all," said Lopez. "People are scared about illegal toxic dumping and things like that, they're saying there must be something in the water." But Laredo's utilities director, Tomas Rodriguez, insists the water supply is among the cleanest around. He says the water machines are nothing more than gimmicks cashing in on residents' unfounded fear of drinking tap water.

"It's a novelty," Rodriguez said. "Our water is better than any bottled water or purified water on the market." Rodriguez says Laredo's water has chlorine to fight disease. "That water doesn't have any chemicals to combat disease, bacteria or germs that would be harmful to your health," he explained. "If they want to buy it, fine." He claims the water vending machines sell a product that is easily contaminated. "People should be very careful," he cautioned. "Their jug better be absolutely clean. If there's one speck of germ, it will multiply. There's nothing in the water to kill the germs." The solution, says Reynolds, is to pour a little chlorine into the water bottle, swish it around, and rinse it out before filling the bottle up. "There's nothing wrong with chlorine as a disinfectant," Reynolds explains. "You just don't want to be ingesting it over a long time." Reynolds says the company is rapidly expanding from its McAllen base, with 52 water units dispensing 9 million gallons a month. The vending machines, in towns along the Rio Grande from Brownsville to Laredo, sell water for 25 cents a gallon. In the next few months, Reynolds says the company will install water machines in Mexico, as well, beginning in Reynosa, Tamaulipas. Thirty machines are ultimately planned for Nuevo Laredo. Miguel Chapa loaded his trunk this week with eight gallons — a week's worth — of drinking water. "We live in El Cenizo, and we feel that the water there is not purified enough for drinking," said Chapa, 35. "I never heard anything bad about it, but I just want to play it safe."

California church split over Railey

The ASSOCIATED PRESS
LOS ANGELES — Immanuel Presbyterian Church parishioners are divided into two camps: those who support Walker L. Railey and those who don't. The former Dallas minister, accused of attempting to kill his wife, resigned from a church administrative post Sept. 16 in hopes of quelling what one member called "an ugly uprising." But even with his decision to step aside, the feud between Railey's friends and foes has polarized the troubled Immanuel parish, once among the largest and most influential protestant congregations in Los Angeles. After leading a relatively obscure existence in California for five years, Railey was arrested Aug. 25 in his Immanuel office in the attempted murder of his wife of 21 years. Peggy Railey, 43, had been found choked nearly to death in the garage of the couple's Dallas home in April 1987. At the time of the attack, Railey was senior pastor at First United Methodist Church and a prominent figure in Dallas civic circles. He left the ministry and Texas a short time later.

Peggy Railey survived the attack but has remained in a coma-like state, unable to identify her attacker. Walker told authorities he returned to his house and found his wife on the garage floor. Railey moved to California, and in May 1991 was hired as executive administrator to resurrect the dwindling 525-member Immanuel parish.

Bovine TB has doctors worried

The ASSOCIATED PRESS
HOUSTON — Some doctors and federal officials say they're worried steers imported from Mexico could spread a bovine form of tuberculosis to people. Nearly 1.2 million Mexican steers were imported last year. Many of the animals — which Mexican veterinarians must test for TB — come through Texas.

'The threat of TB in Mexican cattle has always been there.' Burt Rutherford TCFA
U.S. quarantine rules, he said. Seven El Paso-area Holstein dairy herds containing as many as 20,000 cattle are under quarantine, Beals said.

Dr. Jeffrey Starke, director of the Childrens Tuberculosis Clinic at Ben Taub Hospital in Houston and chairman of a state TB advisory committee, agreed that importation of steers "raises a potential health threat to people."

"There is some question about the credibility of the TB test applied in Mexico," said Dr. Terry Beals, executive director of the Texas Animal Health Commission.

But Starke sees no correlation between increased Mexican steer imports and the recent upturn in the human form of TB.

Although cases of "mycobacterium bovis" in humans have been extremely rare, "We think this is a big potential problem," Beals said.

The disease can be transmitted through the air, meat and milk. Spread of TB among domestic cattle has been limited by rigid

Dallas Co. official charged

The ASSOCIATED PRESS
DALLAS — A Dallas County commissioner has been charged with misdemeanor assault after authorities say he pushed a sergeant while protesting outside a police station.

Price and about 40 other people staged a demonstration there to protest what they claim are racist promotion policies and disciplinary actions.

John Wiley Price, who was not arrested, faces a fine of up to $500 if convicted in the Saturday incident.

King tried to stop Price from walking, but the commissioner grabbed the sergeant's upper arms with both hands "and shoved him backwards," a police report says.

Police say Sgt. Mark King was pushed shortly after 9:30 a.m. near the department's southeast operations bureau.

"Nobody touched him," Price said Saturday after being told about the charge.

Prosecutor attacks solons

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

DETROIT — A prosecutor who has been unable to make murder charges stick against Dr. Jack Kevorkian because of a gap in the law lashed out at legislators after the suicide-machine inventor helped a fifth person kill herself.

"I think it's just a disgraceful disregard of their duty," Oakland County Prosecutor Richard Thompson said. "They'd rather deal with simple things like the state insect, the state flower."

Kevorkian's lawyer said Saturday that Kevorkian had helped a 52-year-old woman with terminal lung cancer kill herself. Lois F. Hawes placed a mask over her face and turned on a canister of carbon monoxide with Kevorkian present, Geoffrey Fieger said.

Her last words were, "Please give me the gas," Fieger said. In three previous cases in which

'I think it's just a disgraceful disregard of their duty. They'd rather deal with simple things like the state insect, the state flower.'

Richard Thompson Prosecutor

Kevorkian has helped people commit suicide, Thompson filed charges only to see them thrown out by the courts because Michigan has no law against assisted suicide.

Four bills dealing with assisted suicide have languished in a legislative subcommittee since March.

Thompson said he won't try to charge Kevorkian in the fourth suicide until a state appeals court rules on one of the earlier dismissals. And he said it's too early to determine possible action in Hawes' death.

Sen. Fred Dillingham, a Republican who has sponsored a bill making it a crime to assist in a suicide, said, "There's no stopping Kevorkian unless we pass legislation that literally will take him off the streets."

But Rep. Lynn Jondahl, a Democrat and chairwoman of the House subcommittee on death and dying, said: "We've been holding hearings all over the state, and there is overwhelming support for allowing the option of assisted suicide in a humane and thoughtful way. But it's not clear what people want the law to be."

All five suicides Kevorkian has assisted since 1990 have involved people with terminal or painful illnesses who killed themselves with devices or materials the 63-year-old retired pathologist supplied.

Detroit teachers end strike; return to classrooms today

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

DETROIT — A tentative contract in hand, teachers in the nation's seventh-largest school system ended their month-old strike and returned to work today.

Teachers voted overwhelmingly Sunday to end the walkout even before taking a formal ratification vote, after hearing their union president dispute the school district's analysis that the contract would cost some teachers their jobs.

Today is a preparation day for the teachers. For their 168,000 students, classes will begin Tuesday.

Outside Redford High School, smiling teachers exchanged hugs and greetings. Some lugged shopping-carts full of plants and papers.

"Sure, there's going to be questions about the strike," said Redford math teacher Sharon Appling as she reported for work this morning. "I'm going to handle this and analyze this as the right to disagree, the right to have an opinion and the right to defend that opinion."

The union will vote next week on whether to ratify the contract, which gives the 10,500 teachers raises of 4 percent in its first year and 3 percent in its second.

The second-year raise is contingent on money collected from delinquent property taxes, and a district spokesman said Saturday the first year's raise probably would be paid for by laying off up to 250 teachers and an undetermined number of administrators and other non-teachers.

Union President John Elliott told more than 1,000 teachers Sunday that he doesn't believe that analysis.

"For the life of me, I don't know why the board made that statement, other than for the sake of a threat," he said. "How can you lay off teachers when you don't have enough of them in the first place?"

Irish raise interest rates

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — The Central Bank of Ireland raised interest rates today in a bid to make the Irish pound more attractive to investors who have been dumping one European currency after another.

The bank increased its overnight interbank lending rate by 3 points, to 13.75 percent, in hopes that would stop speculators from selling off the Irish pound, also known as the punt, in favor of the German mark.

But the punt showed little immediate change against the mark, Europe's most powerful currency.

Higher interest rates can boost the value of a currency by giving investors a stronger return on money they keep in the bank.

Traders in recent weeks have been unloading currencies from other countries as they buy more marks. This has created fears that trade could be hampered if businesses do not know day-to-day what currencies will be worth in different countries. But traders who sold off weak currencies have scored big profits.

The speculation forced Britain and Italy to remove their currencies from the European Exchange Rate Mechanism, which sets maximum fluctuations among member currencies in an attempt to maintain economic stability.

Also today, European Community finance ministers met in Brussels, Belgium, to discuss the turmoil in the monetary markets. Some ministers, possibly Britain's chancellor of the exchequer, Norman Lamont, were expected to suggest changes in the monetary system, although no decisions were considered likely today.

Through much of last week, traders tried to push the French franc below its floor of the ERM, but they eventually gave up as the central banks of France and Germany teamed up to defend the franc.

Within the ERM, the Irish punt is not allowed to trade at a rate of less than 2.6190 marks. The punt was quoted at 2.6350 marks late this morning, showing little change after the interest rate increase.

Higher interest rates can boost the value of a currency by giving investors a stronger return on money they keep in the bank.

Irish Finance Minister Bertie Ahern said he hoped the rise would be temporary, perhaps lasting no longer than three months. Commercial banks, including the Bank of Ireland, are expected to soon pass on higher interest rates to their customers.

Britain's decision to remove sterling from the ERM caused a sharp devaluation in the currency. The move stirred concerns among Irish exporters that their products could become too expensive in Britain.

That led some currency traders to believe the punt may have to be devalued to bring it more in line with the value of the British pound, so they have been selling billions of punts in hopes they can later buy them back at a cheaper price.

But Ireland's central bank is doing what it can to avoid devaluing its currency. The central bank has gone into foreign exchange markets and purchased billions of punts, while also imposing new rules that make it more difficult to speculate against the punt.

'Divorce' case sets precedent

When Florida Circuit Judge Thomas S. Kirk told 12-year-old Gregory Kingsley that he was ruling in favor of his highly publicized effort to divorce himself from his biological parents, a precedent was set.

What happens now? Will local youngsters go to court to legally separate themselves from their parents, or will we continue to see the more traditional legal maneuvering from protective agencies and foster parents?

The Florida case was certainly unique. Young Gregory expressed himself well when he told reporters he wanted to file the suit because he was the one who had been mistreated and felt abandoned.

The bottom line, in Howard County and elsewhere, is that children are people, too. They have the right to expect love and affection and a family life.

Perhaps it just took a precedent-setting case in Florida to remind us all of that.

National voices:

A professor of history at Ohio University and a fellow at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars in Washington, Alonzo L. Hamby has been poking around Harry Truman's papers during the course of writing a biography of the 33rd president. They show Truman to be candid, shrewd and, in the case of a 1947 memo, prescient.

Forty-five years ago, Congress was engaged in debate over a proposed amendment to the U.S. Constitution that would limit presidents to two four-year terms. The proposal was approved and sent to the states, where it was ratified in 1951 as the 22nd Amendment.

During the 1947 debate on Capitol Hill, Truman jotted down some thoughts on the amendment, which Professor Hamby related in a recent article in The Wall Street Journal. The president's thoughts are particularly appropriate since, as columnist David S. Border points out . . . voters in 15 states will decide on term-limit initiatives this fall.

Noting that the Congress had passed the presidential-term limitation amendment, Truman wrote that it also should have covered both the Senate and House. He believed a two-term limit for Congress would "prevent the fossilization of the key committees" and allow the country "to vote into or out of power a president, a legislative majority and one-third of the Senate at every general election."

There, in a nutshell, is one of the reasons why the idea of term limits has caught fire across the country. Harry Truman saw the problem clearly more than 40 years ago. Not everyone is blessed with his insight.

When men start having babies . . .

TRUE EQUALITY — BY LEWIS GRIZZARD

A male friend showed me a group of photographs of women in a recent issue of U.S.A. Today. "Women are coming after us," he said. "These are photographs of all the women running for the Senate."

There was a pack of them to be sure. But read my words:

I have nothing against women running for the Senate or being elected to the Senate. I'd even take Murphy Brown over Ted Kennedy.

I also have nothing against gains women have made in the business world, nor the fact they are achieving equal pay status with men in the work place.

But let us look into the future here. We could have a woman president, an all-woman Congress, and women could take complete charge of the business world, but there would remain one ultimate inequity between men and women.

They have the babies, we don't.

Lewis Grizzard

They're the ones who have to go through morning sickness, carry around all that extra weight for nine months and endure the pain of childbirth, while all their husbands (providing they have husbands in this day and time) have to do is pace around in the waiting room.

I'm not saying all women resent this inequity, but perhaps the most radical and militant portion of the women's movement are.

I don't think these women will ever rest and consider the sexes equal until men have to start having babies, too.

This could never happen, you say? Did you read the other day the report that through genetic engineering it might be possible for people to live 400 years.

If scientists and researchers can figure out a way to add 325 years to the average life span, you don't think they'll eventually figure out a way for men to have babies?

Certainly they will, and I think they should begin working immediately on such a project. It would solve a lot of modern day problems.

"Honey," a wife could say, "I've really got a big project going on down at the firm. Why don't you have our next baby?"

"But, Sweetheart," the husband might reply, "I've got the member-guest golf tournament coming up at the club. If I were pregnant the extra weight would really louse up my swing."

"Darling, I had our last baby. It's your turn. That's only fair."

Fair. That's the key word here. How can men and women ever be completely equal and how can the reproduction process be totally fair until both sexes are able to give birth?

I'm no scientist, so I don't have all the details worked out here, and there would be certain anatomical matters to be considered.

But we've sent a man to the moon, haven't we? And we're soon going to be able to live 400 years.

Figuring a way for men to have babies, too, might be nothing compared to all the other things we've accomplished. Would I have a baby if science ever comes up with a way to make that possible? Sure I would. Equal is equal. And fair is fair, and I like to see an end to the war between the sexes.

But I'd wait a while, I think. Like at least until I was 225. I just don't think it's a good idea for kids, male or female, to have babies.

And that would also give me 180 years to find a wife (I'm old-fashioned) with whom I can get along.

Even for me, that should be plenty of time.

James J. Kilpatrick

If Robert Samuelson of Newsweek will kindly move over, I would like to sit beside him on the gridlock bench. Now that Newsweek has become a house organ for Bill Clinton and the Democratic Party, Samuelson is the only sensible writer left around the joint. On the matter of "gridlock," he is exactly right. He's for it.

A great deal of talk is heard these days about the inability of the government to govern. A Republican president stays at loggerheads with a Democratic Congress. The Democrats have the votes, but George Bush has the veto. This is thought to be a terrible thing.

A clamor rises for one-party government. Elect Bill Clinton, goes the argument, and give him solid Democratic majorities in each house. Then, by golly, we Democrats will Get Things Done!

With the gridlock broken, we will do all this in 100 days, and provide a plan of national health insurance also.

Hallelujah, brothers, the millennium has come! Says Mr. Samuelson: "Count me out. I love divided government."

This is the truth: The American people do not want Congress to Get Things Done. The people would like to see as little as possible done.

Nothing else could explain the bizarre situation that constantly recurs in American politics. Roughly half of the states perform a politically inexplicable act: They elect one Democratic senator and one Republican senator. Thus they express a wishful hope that on key votes their senators will cancel each other.

In this ambition they are responding intuitively to a warning from a most respected source. "Beware of energetic governments!" cried Thomas Jefferson. "They are always oppressive."

By this rough mechanism the voters do their best to slow the juggernaut. Analyzing votes on the Hill, Congressional Quarterly identified 16 key votes in 1991. On 11 of the 16, the senators from Montana, South Dakota and Washington voted in opposite directions. On 10 of 16 the senators from North and South Carolina might as well have stayed in the cloakroom.

Grassley of Iowa agreed with Harkin of Iowa on only four of 14 key votes in which they both participated. Bentsen of Texas voted with Gramm of Texas only seven times. Warner and Robb of Virginia were more congenial: They agreed on nine of the 16 key issues.

I find this delightful. I find it incomprehensible. Wirth and Brown have the identical constituency in Colorado. Why do the same voters elect the liberal Wirth, the conservative Brown? What political sense does it make in Iowa to elect both the conservative Grassley and the liberal Harkin?

One-party government would certainly be more efficient. If we really lived by a party system, as Great Britain does, there would be clear party accountability.

Do the people want to Get Things Done? Not really. Between Jan. 3 and Aug. 31 of this year, members introduced 3,638 measures. Only 120 have become law. The number will strike some of us gridlock lovers as more than a mite too high.

Aren't hardest lessons best?

Is it not true the lessons learned the hardest are the ones we gain more from and we carry with us the longest?

When questions began to surface two weeks ago about Texas Railroad Commission chairperson Lena Guerrero's campaign biography falsely claiming she was a University of Texas at Austin graduate and member of the honor society, Phi Beta Kappa, I was shocked, disappointed and disgusted.

Not with her completely, like all others who have taken the sanctimonious high road to her condemnation. My disgust was centered on the particular situation and the way she handled it.

There is no excuse for any lying, but everyone, including myself, have allowed rationalization to cloud a false statement, making one believe in it more than what is reality.

As her opponent also found out, it is too easy to embellish on one's accomplishments or involvement with activities when it may bring applause.

As someone with far too high standards, far too little belief in most of those in power and as an Hispanic woman, I was drawn to Guerrero because of her achievements, persona and determination.

From her humble beginnings, she learned the value of hard work. Guerrero was named by Texas Monthly to their top 10 legislators. When she was appointed to a commission in an industry she did not have a background in, she rolled up her sleeves and learned quickly, gaining the respect of her peers and the people she would work with — oil men.

Some oil men, when first hearing of the new appointment, wondered who this Lee Guerrero was — and were shocked to learn it was not Lee, but Lena, as in Maria Elena.

The odds were against her, but it did not stop her. Again she finds herself with the odds against. And again she is fighting to the end.

Honesty and integrity — two things that are far too precious and far too rare. Two things that Guerrero has been stripped of in eyes of many because of a serious mistake she had the opportunity to rectify before this past Thursday.

But is Lena the first to slip? Will she be the last? Will she slip again? Has she let down the people of Texas? Has she let down the Hispanic community?

From my conversations with Big Spring residents and reporters covering the campaign throughout the state, to the majority of the Hispanic community, Guerrero is still someone to speak of with respect.

The Hispanic community is increasing in Texas and across the United States. With the increase more people are seeking political office and the arduous uphill battle has just begun. As one person put it, there are so few minorities in the position to gain a state-wide office, you can not chance anything or disguise anything as something it is not. The world is on your shoulders.

In Guerrero's case, people began making serious inquiry to a rumor that has apparently been in circulation for at least a year. With the embarrassing findings, they failed to acknowledge who Guerrero hurt the most — herself.

The 101 semester hours and C+ average did not keep her from doing a good job as a legislator or as commissioner once appointed. It did not bring her ill-gotten wealth.

Near tears, Guerrero resigned from the commission, hoping to regain the voter's trust she has lost and vowing to continue her quest for victory in the race.

Is it not true the lessons learned the hardest are the ones we gain more from and we carry with us the longest?

Oilers defense controls Chargers, 27-0

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON (AP) — On the day of his lowest passing production since last October, Houston's Warren Moon proved he could still surpass milestones and win.

Moon threw for 175 yards against a San Diego defense determined to eliminate big plays, but he scored on a 3-yard toss and a 5-yard run in the Oilers' 27-0 victory Sunday.

He even got to rest in the fourth quarter when Cody Carlson got his first playing time of the season.

"I always want to be out there, but I know Cody wants to get in as much as he can," Moon said. "But it was good to watch from the sidelines and relax a little for a change."

It was Moon's lowest yardage since Oct. 20, 1991, when he passed for 171 against Miami, but it was enough to put him over 50,000 yards for his pro career.

Moon completed 17 of 28 passes and has passed for 50,052 yards in his CFL and NFL careers and sent the Oilers into their week off at 3-1. San Diego dropped its fourth straight game under rookie coach Bobby Ross.

It was Houston's first shutout since a 27-0 victory over Pittsburgh on Oct. 22, 1989.

The Oilers led 10-0 at halftime on Moon's 3-yard TD pass to Haywood Jeffries, who had 10 catches for 77 yards, and a 49-yard field goal by Al Del Greco.

Ross still thought the Chargers were ready for an upset.

"I honestly felt at halftime that we were going to win the football game," he said. "Some of the things we were doing in the first half, although not spectacular, were very solid. We controlled the ball and kept it out of Warren's hands."

While Houston's defense came up with the big plays, Lorenzo White and Moon each had 5-yard touchdown runs and Del Greco added a 46-yard field goal, his eighth conversion in nine tries this season.

Bubba McDowell intercepted Stan Humphries' final pass of the first half, and Mike Dumas deflected a punt that set up Moon's touchdown run.

San Diego reached Houston's 3-yard line in the final four minutes, but Steve Jackson's 18-yard interception return stopped the Chargers' best scoring chance.

Dumas added his second big play with two seconds left, intercepting Humphries' final pass at the Oilers' 1.

"It's been our downfall all year long, we move the ball up and down the field and then key mistakes shut us down," San Diego running back Rod Bernstine said. "We thought we could run the ball at them and make them tired."

"But it didn't work. Every time I looked up it seemed like eight guys were there."

Bernstine was the Chargers' leading rusher with 22 yards on 9 carries. San Diego had 262 total yards, 62 on the ground.

"I think one of the biggest reasons for our intensity was because Shawn Jefferson guaranteed them a win," safety Bubba McDowell said. "A lot of the players took that personally. You can't make guarantees like that, this is the NFL."

Jefferson, drafted by Houston in 1991, was traded to San Diego for Lee Williams and the Oilers' No. 1 pick in 1992. Jefferson started against the Oilers after predicting a Charger victory over his former teammates.

49ers gives New Orleans the boot

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

Steve Young's legs and Mike Cofer's toe were enough to put the San Francisco 49ers back on top in the NFC West.

Young, the NFL's second-ranked passer entering the game, ran for 67 yards and set up the 49ers' only touchdown and Cofer kicked three field goals as San Francisco edged New Orleans 16-10 Sunday night.

The 16 points were just over half of the 31 the 49ers (3-1) had run up in each of their first three games.

"Every time we come down here it's a tough game," said San Francisco coach George Seifert, whose team won for the fifth time in its last six Superdome appearances against the Saints. "They have a fine team and the fans get behind them."

In other games, it was Chicago 41, Atlanta 31; Buffalo 41, New England 7; Denver 12, Cleveland 0; Minnesota 42, Cincinnati 7; Houston 27, San Diego 0; Tampa Bay 27, Detroit 23; Miami 19, Seattle 17; Los Angeles Rams 18, New York Jets 10 and Green Bay 17, Pittsburgh 3.

Tonight, the Los Angeles Raiders visit Kansas City.

The most important of Young's seven carries was a 26-yard dash that set up the 49ers' only TD.

"There were times we might have sacked another quarterback," said coach Jim Mora of the Saints (2-2). "He was able to escape the rush and get a lot of yardage on the ground. This guy's an exceptional athlete."

Cofer came into the game 3 for 7 on field goals this season, but was perfect in three tries. His 26-yard field goal broke a 10-all tie in the fourth quarter and he added a 42-yarder about 4 minutes later.

That was just enough to hold off the Saints, who committed the last of their five turnovers when Eric Davis intercepted Bobby Hebert's pass in the end zone in the final seconds.

Bucs clinch with 5-2 win

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

PITTSBURGH — The Pittsburgh Pirates became the first team since Philadelphia in 1976-78 to win three straight NL East titles, beating the New York Mets 4-2 behind Danny Jackson to win their league-record ninth championship since divisional play began in 1969.

Jackson pitched six-hit ball over seven-plus innings and Jay Bell drove in two runs as the Pirates swept the three-game series to improve to 13-2 against the Mets. The Pirates are 19-7 this month and have won nine of 11, and 11 of 14.

The only team in baseball to win 90 or more games each season of the 90s, the Pirates are just the third NL team to win three straight titles. They also won three in a row from 1970-72.

It was a vast improvement for the 49ers, who came into the game ranked 27th on defense.

"We had taken a lot of heat and deservedly so," cornerback Merton Hanks said. "We just wanted to play 49ers' defense."

Bears 41, Falcons 31
Neal Anderson ran for two touchdowns and Jim Harbaugh threw for two more as the Bears raced to a 31-7 halftime lead and held off the Falcons at Soldier Field.

Outscored 41-0 in the second half of their last two games, Chicago was outscored 34-10 in this one, with Andre Rison catching three TD passes. But the Bears mounted a clinching, 80-yard drive with Brad Muster going the final 14 yards for a 38-21 lead.

Both teams are 2-2.
Vikings 42, Bengals 7
Rich Gannon ignored the pain from a chipped bone in his right hand and threw for a career-high 318 yards and four touchdowns passes for the visiting Vikings (3-1). He passed for 212 yards in a 28-point first half.

Cris Carter had a career-high 11 catches for 124 yards and two TDs. Terry Allen ran for three touchdowns, and Todd Scott had three of the Vikings' four interceptions against Boomer Esiason, who was 11 for 21 for 97 yards.

Bills 41, Patriots 7
Jim Kelly threw for three touchdowns as Buffalo scored 35 points in the second half in its second straight rout. The visiting Bills (4-0) beat Indianapolis 38-0 last week and missed their second shutout when Hugh Millen threw a 4-yard TD pass with 8:41 to play.

Thurman Thomas scored his seventh touchdown of the year on a 1-yard run and finished with 120 yards on 18 carries.

The Patriots (0-3) have been outscored 65-13.

David Treadwell kicked four field goals as the Broncos (3-1), who came in 27th in rushing, gained 188 of their 300 yards on the ground.

The Browns (1-3) sacked John Elway five times.

Second-year back Reggie Rivers clinched Denver's victory with a 48-yard run from his own 5 in the fourth quarter, helping set up Treadwell's last field goal.

Mike Tomczak became the Browns' third starter in three games, following Bernie Kosar (broken ankle) and Todd Philcox (broken thumb). The shutout was Denver's first since 1989.

Buccaneers 27, Lions 23
The Buccaneers (3-1) ended their 15-game road losing streak when Vinny Testaverde's 14-yard touchdown pass to Ron Hall with 49 seconds left capped a wild fourth quarter and handed the Lions (1-3) their first loss at the Silverdome in 12 games.

The Bucs trailed 16-13 when Barry Sanders fumbled a handoff and tackle Santana Dotson ran it back 42 yards to put Tampa Bay up 20-16.

Mel Gray then scored on an 89-yard kickoff return, Detroit's first since 1982, but Testaverde completed five of six passes for 52 yards in the winning drive.

Packers 17, Steelers 3
Brett Favre, making his first career start, threw two touchdown passes after Pittsburgh special-teams mistakes, and Green Bay (2-2) handed Pittsburgh (3-1) its first loss.

Gary Anderson's field goal in the first quarter gave Pittsburgh a 3-0 lead but the visiting Steelers couldn't score again.

Favre capitalized on a blocked field goal attempt for a 76-yard scoring pass to Sterling Sharpe in the second quarter, then hit Robert Brooks with an 8-yarder in the fourth quarter after a muffed punt.

"There were times we might have sacked another quarterback. He was able to escape the rush and get a lot of yardage on the ground. This guy's an exceptional athlete," Saints coach Jim Mora talking about 49ers QB Steve Young.

Dolphins 19, Seahawks 17
Dan Marino, making his Kingdome debut, passed 15 yards to Fred Banks with 2:15 left for Miami's only touchdown, rallying the Dolphins (4-0) over the Seahawks (1-3).

Marino drove the Dolphins 80 yards in 12 plays with the help of backup quarterback Scott Mitchell. Mitchell came in and threw an 18-yard pass to Tony Martin to the Seattle 16 with 3:44 left or a third-and-10 play after Marino was knocked wozy with a concussion. Marino came back for the next play.

Pete Stoyanovich kicked field goals of 53, 31, 36 and 27 yards for the Dolphins.

Rams 18, Jets 10
Kevin Greene and Larry Kelm came up with key defensive plays, and the Rams kept the visiting Jets winless in four games.

Greene inspired the Rams when he sacked quarterback Browning Nagle for a safety just before halftime, then set up one of Tony Zendejas' three field goals with a fumble recovery in the fourth quarter.

Kelms' interception of Nagle in the final period set up Zendejas' last field goal and gave the Rams (2-2) some breathing room.

with membership extending to wives and children.

"The car club is made up of friends and their families who are interested in customizing cars," said Billy Yanez, a founding member of Santana Car Club. "The best thing about the club is that we are all together and having a good time."

Jackie Yanez, Billy's wife, said, "Most of the club members are married, and include their families. The wives are all considered members and equal."

The Yanez's own a 1974 Chevrolet Caprice, a 1978 Ford LTD and a 1981 Cadillac. The Caprice equipped with hydraulics has been painted and modified three times since they purchased it two years ago.

The Caprice has been featured several times in Only's Low Riding Magazine for winning awards at area car shows for paint job, car hopping, full custom and people's choice.

The cars compete with other cars coming from all over Texas, New Mexico and as far as California.

The Santana club members have also been featured in the magazine for winning the best club participation award in an Odessa car show last year. Both clubs travel together to car shows, Yanez said.

But before they enter a car into a show, a tremendous of long hours and hard work are put into customizing the car. Working together, club members of Santana and Low Image begin with an idea and complete their project months later with a shiny, lowered, stereo-equipped, customized show car.

"Every time we have a chance we work on our cars," said Luis Rios, founding member of Low Image.

"Everybody chips in and helps." Rios and his wife, Janie Rios, own 1954 Chevrolet parked in Yanez's body shop waiting for modifications.

She's living her life as an example for youth

By CONNIE SWINNEY
Staff Writer

Perhaps among the most difficult transitions in life are ending relationships and moving to another town to start life anew.

Diolanda Perez, a single mother of two children, is a transplant from Lamesa where she was born and raised.

"I came to Big Spring to get a fresh start," she said.

Her fresh start, beginning in 1987, includes working in technical service at the Howard County Junior College library, community and church service as well as taking courses in computer, speech and math.

Perez said she has always felt family, along with the church and community, reign as priorities in her life.

She said she struggled to balance her priorities before coming to Big Spring. "I've grown so much since my divorce. I'm able to do more community service and further my education, where as before I was spending most of my time meeting all the needs of my family."

Establishing her community service credentials locally, Perez has carved herself a niche. She serves as president of Hispanic Women for Progress (HWP).

"Living here in West Texas, the Hispanic culture is everywhere," she said. "I see the culture fading out, and the younger generation

Personalities...

needs to help bring it back. "When you live in the (United States), you become Americanized. That's not bad as long as you know where you came from," she said. "It's not something these kids should be ashamed of. You have to be a very smart person to be able to speak two languages."

Her group remains active in raising funds for scholarships, and HWP works hard to support local Hispanic youths.

"I want the organization to grow and get to where our scholarships are bigger," she said. "We're kicking off an essay contest also to get young people thinking about their culture."

Because Perez spends much energy in her work, in school and aiding the community, she puts forth extra effort caring for the needs of her two children, Christina, 16, and John, 10.

"I like to participate in supporting the school activities like band and football because my kids are involved," she said. "I had been involved in the PTA in the past, but between the kids, work and classes, I haven't had the time.

"I am there to provide any personal help that they need," she added. "I stress education — not necessarily straight As — just keeping their grades up."

Closest to her heart, Perez said, are her activities in the church. "I love people, and in the church, you really get to know them," she said. "With my children, I try to teach them to keep religion as a main point in our lives."

"The media shows us that there are a few children that need an extra push. They need positive role models," she said. "I can be that for them."

The most inspiring experience for Perez reflected her view on the progress of her own life.

"I was asked to speak to a group of women about survival skills. It made me feel good to see that these women were trying to carry on with their life through whatever means," she said. "No matter their circumstances, they realized they could find a way to keep on their feet through education."

Diolanda Perez believes family, church and community are some of the most important things in life. With her work and dedication, she's setting an example to the community's youth.

Teenage parents Becky Matheson and fiance Ronnie Glass hope the Austin Project can keep their family healthy and well-adjusted as their daughter, 5-month-old Destinee, grows up. The comprehensive program provides health care, counseling and job training for young people.

Austin Project is help for dreams

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN — The Austin Project and Destinee Glass are two dreams that were born at the same time.

If they both grow the way they should, they will be good for each other and for the community around them.

Destinee is a 5-month-old baby girl whose teen-age parents need the community's help to see that she stays healthy, well-adjusted and prepared later in life to get a job.

The Austin Project is a 300-page document approved recently that lays out a comprehensive program to do just that by providing health care, parental and child counseling, and job training for young people from the time they are conceived until their late teens.

Local leaders like Austin NAACP president Jeff Travillion hail the effort as a necessary step in delivering these services to young people in a way that is more direct and thorough than the current hodgepodge system in which children still fall through the cracks, even when social services overlap.

"Poverty has an impact on more families now than it ever did," Travillion said. "So now we have to look at our institutions such as local government and the University of Texas and see if their resources are really being used like they should. We have become a society of single-issue organizations. We can't afford that any more."

Destinee's mother, Becky Matheson, sees it the same way, only on a more personal level. She was 16 when she became pregnant with Destinee.

"I was confused and scared," Matheson recalls. "The only thing I knew about birth control was the pill. I had seen (contraceptive) sponges and douches and things like that in the store, but I didn't know what they were for."

"I really didn't know anything until after Destinee was born. And then I needed someone to show me how to take care of a baby, how to bathe it, and what to do when she was sick," said Matheson, who is now 17. "Babies look like little dolls, but they aren't dolls. They are people, and they need constant attention."

The father of her baby, Ronnie Glass, 18, was a top athlete at Pflugerville High School. He quit school and got a job working on the assembly line at a local company.

The two young parents and their daughter, together, are a living example of the diversity of services needed to help a family survive in a complex society — a society where training in the schools is often inadequate to prepare young men like Glass for a job in high-tech industry; where young mothers like Matheson are unsure of where to go for day care and prenatal advice; and where children like Destinee lack a constant monitoring to make sure they don't fall behind in their physical or mental development.

The Austin Project directors, led by University of Texas professor Walt Rostow, want to consolidate and expand the kinds of support programs that keep young families intact.

The next step in making the Austin Project a reality is to find out what it will cost. One of the unique aspects of the program is that the private sector and volunteers will be asked to donate money or time to keep the tax costs of the effort to a minimum.

Whatever the price tag, it will be worth it, said Marilyn Lawrence, Ronnie Glass's mother. Now 35, she was 17 when she became pregnant with Ronnie in 1972. Back then, there were few programs for young women in her situation.

"There was such a stigma about being unmarried and pregnant that I had to quit school," Lawrence remembers. "I couldn't go back to class until I had had my baby."

Although Glass and Matheson have more community resources available to them today than Destinee's grandmother had in the 1970s, the young parents are having to leave Austin to build a future. Glass has qualified to enter the U.S. Army as soon as he finishes the home-study high school diploma course he pursues after work.

Glass believes that the only hope left for other young couples he and Matheson will leave behind when they leave Austin for their Army career is the Austin Project and all the programs it contains.

"Whatever they do, they shouldn't limit the number of people who can qualify for the project," said Glass, glancing at his new daughter. "I'm glad it's aimed at children, because kids should always be put first when it comes to getting help."

Collection's value is more than monetary

On a visit to the Heritage Museum this week, you will see a very special collection amassed by Mary and Adrian Randle over the last 40 years.

The work of nationally renowned Native American artists in the fields of pottery, textile weaving, basket weaving and jewelry are all part of the collection. It is on loan to the museum through November and will be on display throughout the fall.

Children are especially invited to view the collection each Saturday when they and their parents pay no admission fee. Each weekend a special craft project will be available for children to make and take home.

Almost everyone I know collects something, whether it is of monetary or personal value.

My good friend at a local radio station collects chess sets. The curator in Scurry County collects pink flamingos. A museum volunteer collects postage stamps.

Other collections of which I am aware include dominoes, china, Native American artifacts, trading cards and railroad memorabilia. They all have in common a genuine love for the items they are collecting, with price value a secondary concern at best.

However, owners, collectors and heirs of special pieces sometimes find the monetary rewards brought by selling their items greater than the philanthropic rewards of giving it to a museum.

I am sorry to say I have seen this happen in the last few years with a wonderful collection that no museum will ever display. What could have been an eternal tribute to the lady who spent her life amassing the collection instead became no more than a line in an auction catalog.

Angie Way

When a collection is given to the Heritage Museum, it is a special event for everyone involved.

If you have been to the museum in the last couple of years, I am sure you were impressed by the photograph collection. Local resident Wofford Hardy collected the 48 photographs while living in Ohio. He presented the entire collection — photographs from the Edison, Columbia, Victor, Pathe, Zonophone and more, in memory of his mother, Ruth Johnson Hardy.

The museum has received other collections in its two decades of existence. A wonderful collection of demitasse cups and saucers came to the museum from the Schwarzenbach family, in memory of Maymie Schwarzenbach. They are on display in the museum's original building in a china cabinet.

Several collections of arrowheads and other points are also periodically displayed. These, as well as fans, postcards, minerals, records and many more items have been given to the museum from collectors throughout the area.

A collection in a museum is a wonderful thing for anyone interested in seeing an expert view of certain items. Through exhibition, the collector shares not just their collection, but the knowledge gained through the experience of acquiring items sometimes unique and always special.

"The car club is made up of friends and their families who are interested in customizing cars," said Billy Yanez, a founding member of Santana Car Club. "The best thing about the club is that we are all together and having a good time."

Jackie Yanez, Billy's wife, said, "Most of the club members are married, and include their families. The wives are all considered members and equal."

The Yanez's own a 1974 Chevrolet Caprice, a 1978 Ford LTD and a 1981 Cadillac. The Caprice equipped with hydraulics has been painted and modified three times since they purchased it two years ago.

The Caprice has been featured several times in Orly's Low Riding Magazine for winning awards at area car shows for paint job, car hopping, full custom and people's choice.

The cars compete with other cars coming from all over Texas, New Mexico and as far as California.

The Santana club members have also been featured in the magazine for winning the best club participation award in an Odessa car show last year. Both clubs travel together to car shows, Yanez said.

But before they enter a car into a show, a tremendous of long hours and hard work are put into customizing the car. Working together, club members of Santana and Low Image begin with an idea and complete their project months later with a shiny, lowered, stereo-equipped, customized show car.

"Every time we have a chance we work on our cars," said Luis Rios, founding member of Low Image. "Everybody chips in and helps." Rios and his wife, Janie Rios, own 1954 Chevrolet parked in Yanez's body shop waiting for modifications.

She's living her life as an example for youth

By CONNIE SWINNEY
Staff Writer

Perhaps among the most difficult transitions in life are ending relationships and moving to another town to start life anew.

Diolanda Perez, a single mother of two children, is a transplant from Lamesa where she was born and raised.

"I came to Big Spring to get a fresh start," she said.

Her fresh start, beginning in 1987, includes working in technical needs to help bring it back.

Personalities...

"When you live in the (United States), you become Americanized. That's not bad as long as you know where you came from," she said.

"It's not something these kids should be ashamed of. You have to be a very smart person to be able to speak two languages."

Her group remains active in raising funds for scholarships, and HWP works hard to support local Hispanic youths.

"I want the organization to grow and get to where our scholarships are bigger," she said. "We're kicking off an essay contest also to get young people thinking about their culture."

Because Perez spends much energy in her work, in school and aiding the community, she puts forth extra effort caring for the needs of her two children, Christina, 16, and John, 10.

"I like to participate in supporting the school activities like band and football because my kids are involved," she said. "I had been involved in the PTA in the past, but between the kids, work and classes, I haven't had the time.

"I am there to provide any personal help that they need," she added. "I stress education — not necessarily straight As — just keeping their grades up."

Closest to her heart, Perez said, are her activities in the church. "I love people, and in the church, you really get to know them," she said. "With my children, I try to teach them to keep religion as a main point in our lives."

"The media shows us that there are a few children that need an extra push. They need positive role models," she said. "I can be that for them."

The most inspiring experience for Perez reflected her view on the progress of her own life.

"I was asked to speak to a group of women about survival skills. It made me feel good to see that these women were trying to carry on with their life through whatever means," she said. "No matter their circumstances, they realized they could find a way to keep on their feet through education."

with membership extending to wives and children.

"The car club is made up of friends and their families who are interested in customizing cars," said Billy Yanez, a founding member of Santana Car Club. "The best thing about the club is that we are all together and having a good time."

Jackie Yanez, Billy's wife, said, "Most of the club members are married, and include their families. The wives are all considered members and equal."

The Yanez's own a 1974 Chevrolet Caprice, a 1978 Ford LTD and a 1981 Cadillac. The Caprice equipped with hydraulics has been painted and modified three times since they purchased it two years ago.

The Caprice has been featured several times in Orly's Low Riding Magazine for winning awards at area car shows for paint job, car hopping, full custom and people's choice.

The cars compete with other cars coming from all over Texas, New Mexico and as far as California.

The Santana club members have also been featured in the magazine for winning the best club participation award in an Odessa car show last year. Both clubs travel together to car shows, Yanez said.

But before they enter a car into a show, a tremendous of long hours and hard work are put into customizing the car. Working together, club members of Santana and Low Image begin with an idea and complete their project months later with a shiny, lowered, stereo-equipped, customized show car.

"Every time we have a chance we work on our cars," said Luis Rios, founding member of Low Image. "Everybody chips in and helps." Rios and his wife, Janie Rios, own 1954 Chevrolet parked in Yanez's body shop waiting for modifications.

She's living her life as an example for youth

By CONNIE SWINNEY
Staff Writer

Perhaps among the most difficult transitions in life are ending relationships and moving to another town to start life anew.

Diolanda Perez, a single mother of two children, is a transplant from Lamesa where she was born and raised.

"I came to Big Spring to get a fresh start," she said.

Her fresh start, beginning in 1987, includes working in technical service at the Howard County Junior College library, community and church service as well as taking courses in computer, speech and math.

Perez said she has always felt family, along with the church and community, reign as priorities in her life.

She said she struggled to balance her priorities before coming to Big Spring. "I've grown so much since my divorce. I'm able to do more community service and further my education, where as before I was spending most of my time meeting all the needs of my family."

Establishing her community service credentials locally, Perez has carved herself a niche. She serves as president of Hispanic Women for Progress (HWP).

"Living here in West Texas, the Hispanic culture is everywhere," she said. "I see the culture fading out, and the younger generation

Personalities...

needs to help bring it back. "When you live in the (United States), you become Americanized. That's not bad as long as you know where you came from," she said. "It's not something these kids should be ashamed of. You have to be a very smart person to be able to speak two languages."

Her group remains active in raising funds for scholarships, and HWP works hard to support local Hispanic youths.

"I want the organization to grow and get to where our scholarships are bigger," she said. "We're kicking off an essay contest also to get young people thinking about their culture."

Because Perez spends much energy in her work, in school and aiding the community, she puts forth extra effort caring for the needs of her two children, Christina, 16, and John, 10.

"I like to participate in supporting the school activities like band and football because my kids are involved," she said. "I had been involved in the PTA in the past, but between the kids, work and classes, I haven't had the time.

"I am there to provide any personal help that they need," she added. "I stress education — not necessarily straight As — just keeping their grades up."

Closest to her heart, Perez said, are her activities in the church. "I love people, and in the church, you really get to know them," she said. "With my children, I try to teach them to keep religion as a main point in our lives."

"The media shows us that there are a few children that need an extra push. They need positive role models," she said. "I can be that for them."

The most inspiring experience for Perez reflected her view on the progress of her own life.

"I was asked to speak to a group of women about survival skills. It made me feel good to see that these women were trying to carry on with their life through whatever means," she said. "No matter their circumstances, they realized they could find a way to keep on their feet through education."

Diolanda Perez believes family, church and community are some of the most important things in life. With her work and dedication, she's setting an example to the community's youth.

Teenage parents Becky Matheson and fiance Ronnie Glass hope the Austin Project can keep their family healthy and well-adjusted as their daughter, 5-month-old Destinee, grows up. The comprehensive program provides health care, counseling and job training for young people.

Austin Project is help for dreams

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN — The Austin Project and Destinee Glass are two dreams that were born at the same time.

If they both grow the way they should, they will be good for each other and for the community around them.

Destinee is a 5-month-old baby girl whose teen-age parents need the community's help to see that she stays healthy, well-adjusted and prepared later in life to get a job.

The Austin Project is a 300-page document approved recently that lays out a comprehensive program to do just that by providing health care, parental and child counseling, and job training for young people from the time they are conceived until their late teens.

Local leaders like Austin NAACP president Jeff Travillion hail the effort as a necessary step in delivering these services to young people in a way that is more direct and thorough than the current hodgepodge system in which children still fall through the cracks, even when social services overlap.

"Poverty has an impact on more families now than it ever did," Travillion said. "So now we have to look at our institutions such as local government and the University of Texas and see if their resources are really being used like they should. We have become a society of single-issue organizations. We can't afford that any more."

Destinee's mother, Becky Matheson, sees it the same way, only on a more personal level. She was 16 when she became pregnant with Destinee.

"I was confused and scared," Matheson recalls. "The only thing I knew about birth control was the pill. I had seen (contraceptive) sponges and douches and things like that in the store, but I didn't know what they were for."

"I really didn't know anything until after Destinee was born. And then I needed someone to show me how to take care of a baby, how to bathe it, and what to do when she was sick," said Matheson, who is now 17. "Babies look like little dolls, but they aren't dolls. They are people, and they need constant attention."

The father of her baby, Ronnie Glass, 18, was a top athlete at Pflugerville High School. He quit school and got a job working on the assembly line at a local company.

The two young parents and their daughter, together, are a living example of the diversity of services needed to help a family survive in a complex society — a society where training in the schools is often inadequate to prepare young men like Glass for a job in high-tech industry; where young mothers like Matheson are unsure of where to go for day care and prenatal advice; and where children like Destinee lack a constant monitoring to make sure they don't fall behind in their physical or mental development.

The Austin Project directors, led by University of Texas professor Walt Rostow, want to consolidate and expand the kinds of support programs that keep young families intact.

The next step in making the Austin Project a reality is to find out what it will cost. One of the unique aspects of the program is that the private sector and volunteers will be asked to donate money or time to keep the tax costs of the effort to a minimum.

Whatever the price tag, it will be worth it, said Marilyn Lawrence, Ronnie Glass's mother. Now 35, she was 17 when she became pregnant with Ronnie in 1972. Back then, there were few programs for young women in her situation.

"There was such a stigma about being unmarried and pregnant that I had to quit school," Lawrence remembers. "I couldn't go back to class until I had had my baby."

Although Glass and Matheson have more community resources available to them today than Destinee's grandmother had in the 1970s, the young parents are having to leave Austin to build a future. Glass has qualified to enter the U.S. Army as soon as he finishes the home-study high school diploma course he pursues after work.

Glass believes that the only hope left for other young couples he and Matheson will leave behind when they leave Austin for their Army career is the Austin Project and all the programs it contains.

"Whatever they do, they shouldn't limit the number of people who can qualify for the project," said Glass, glancing at his new daughter. "I'm glad it's aimed at children, because kids should always be put first when it comes to getting help."

Collection's value is more than monetary

On a visit to the Heritage Museum this week, you will see a very special collection amassed by Mary and Adrian Randle over the last 40 years.

The work of nationally renowned Native American artists in the fields of pottery, textile weaving, basket weaving and jewelry are all part of the collection. It is on loan to the museum through November and will be on display throughout the fall.

Children are especially invited to view the collection each Saturday when they and their parents pay no admission fee. Each weekend a special craft project will be available for children to make and take home.

Almost everyone I know collects something, whether it is of monetary or personal value.

My good friend at a local radio station collects chess sets. The curator in Scurry County collects pink flamingos. A museum volunteer collects postage stamps.

Other collections of which I am aware include dominoes, china, Native American artifacts, trading cards and railroad memorabilia. They all have in common a genuine love for the items they are collecting, with price value a secondary concern at best.

However, owners, collectors and heirs of special pieces sometimes find the monetary rewards brought by selling their items greater than the philanthropic rewards of giving it to a museum.

I am sorry to say I have seen this happen in the last few years with a wonderful collection that no museum will ever display. What could have been an eternal tribute to the lady who spent her life amassing the collection instead became no more than a line in an auction catalog.

Angie Way

When a collection is given to the Heritage Museum, it is a special event for everyone involved.

If you have been to the museum in the last couple of years, I am sure you were impressed by the phonograph collection. Local resident Wofford Hardy collected the 48 phonographs while living in Ohio. He presented the entire collection — phonographs from Edison, Columbia, Victor, Pathe, Zonophone and more, in memory of his mother, Ruth Johnson Hardy.

The museum has received other collections in its two decades of existence. A wonderful collection of demitasse cups and saucers came to the museum from the Schwarzenbach family, in memory of Maymie Schwarzenbach. They are on display in the museum's original building in a china cabinet.

Several collections of arrowheads and other points are also periodically displayed. These, as well as fans, postcards, minerals, records and many more items have been given to the museum from collectors throughout the area.

A collection in a museum is a wonderful thing for anyone interested in seeing an expert view of certain items. Through exhibition, the collector shares not just their collection, but the knowledge gained through the experience of acquiring items sometimes unique and always special.

Angie Way is curator of the Heritage Museum. Her column appears alternate Mondays.

Exhibit shows history of internment

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — Wing Luke Asian Museum director Ron Chew didn't want the lessons of the Japanese-American internment during World War II to be forgotten.

So, with the help of the Japanese-American community, the museum put together a grassroots-history exhibition as a powerful reminder of the price they paid — the economic loss, the loss of faith in American justice, and the breakup of a community.

"It was really an opportunity to tell a story through the community's own voice," Chew said.

The Wing Luke Asian Museum focuses on the history of all the Asian-American cultures in the Pacific Northwest.

The museum's show, "Executive Order 9066: 50 Years Before and After," opened last February on the 50th anniversary of the signing of the order which forced the evacuation and internment of 120,000 Japanese Americans on the West Coast. It closed in Seattle at the end of August and this fall is scheduled to begin a cross-country tour, through 1995.

With around 175 photographs pulled from family albums and 200

Bob Santos, preservation professional artifacts, including artwork and furniture unearthed from basements and attics, the exhibit spans 100 years.

There's a replica of a Minidoka internment-camp barrack — Minidoka was the desolate Idaho camp where most Japanese-Americans from the Northwest were sent.

"It's educating a whole generation who never knew about (the internment) to understand the ramifications of the war, internment and discrimination of people because of their color and race," said Bob Santos, executive director of the Chinatown-International District Preservation and Development Authority.

Chew said many internees never shared memories of the internment because it was too painful. But the display helped them begin to talk about it.

"It was a breaking of silence," he said. "Ultimately, it provided a necessary healing process."

"It gives the general public a missing piece of history that they had not been taught in the schools or was glossed over by the media's ignorance of the events," Chew said.

The display reminds Fumi Lee of Las Vegas of her stay at Minidoka.

"It brought back memories of the bleakness of camp life," Lee said.

"The barbed wire fences, and the guns aimed at us," she said. "The rows of barracks, the bare rooms with only a pot-bellied stove, and the rain that would turn the dust and sand into mud."

Woman must face her past all over again

DEAR ABBY: When I was young and foolish I was very promiscuous. I went to bed with any guy who asked me out—older men, married men, first dates, and even an occasional pickup. I never tried to count them, but there were dozens. Of course I paid a terrible price. I picked up crabs, herpes, gonorrhea and had two abortions. (I don't know how I missed AIDS because I never used protection of any kind.)

In an effort to get my life together, at age 26, I moved to a distant state, met the most wonderful man in the world, fell head over heels in love, and we were married within a year. I never told him anything about my past—I even pretended to be a virgin.

Now the problem. I am pregnant, and because of my herpes, I may have to have a C-section. I was totally honest with my doctor. He says he will keep my past confidential, but if a C-section is necessary, he may have to discuss the reason with my husband.

Dear Abby

Abby, if my husband knew how many men I've slept with, he would be devastated. I doubt that he would leave me, but he would probably never trust me again.

I am seeing a counselor who advised me to tell my husband no more than is absolutely necessary. My minister advised me to tell my husband everything and pray for his forgiveness. Part of me wants to take my minister's advice; the other part says, "Keep your past to yourself and live a good Christian life from now on."

What do you say, Abby?—SINNED AND SORRY

DEAR SINNED: I agree with your counselor. However, you are carrying the herpes virus, so you must tell your husband because it may flare up and become active. Surely your doctor has explained this to you. If you do not take precautions during a flare-up, you could infect your husband.

You must tell your husband you lied to him about your past; admit that you contracted herpes, and have your physician explain to him the necessity of taking precautions.

After that, try to be the best wife and mother possible. I wish you well.

DEAR ABBY: In response to your letter from "Overbooked," I'd like to report what our postmaster told me when we lived in North Dakota:

Do not open an unwanted package.

Mark it clearly: "Refused."

Draw an arrow pointing to the return address.

I have tried this system, Abby, and it works. While the sender paid only a special book rate to send it, he has to pay first class postage to send it back. I have never received a second package from an unwanted source.—PHILLIPS TODD, HASTINGS, NEB.

FOR TUESDAY, SEPT. 29, 1992

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A partner decides to pitch in after all. You are able to gain a new perspective. Be willing to take fast actions that have an impact on your work. Move on an idea quickly and with enthusiasm. Say yes to a proposition. Tonight: Try a close encounter. *****

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Changes that occur behind the scenes bring great news. What has been a given could no longer be. You are suddenly "released." A work associate is full of ideas—go along with them. Tonight: Accept an invitation. *****

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Although your focus might be on getting the job done, there is good news involving a partnership. You are able to regain your perspective, and your point of view changes because of it. Open up to new possibilities. Tonight: Make a health or dietary resolution. *****

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Refuse to settle when a partner once again gets "lucky." You know what is needed. Alternatives surround a relationship—you just need to get creative. A change in how you view a situation allows it to open up. Tonight: Do what you really love. *****

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Don't get stuck in your head. Review recent events. Know that you might be coloring the story because of your stress level. Accept responsibility and take a long-overdue stand. Tonight: Make a must appearance. *****

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Loved ones are definitely offbeat. Willingly discuss your needs and expectations. Brainstorm and get to the root of a work-related problem. Tonight: Explore a travel opportunity. *****

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be sensitive to alternatives that are opening up to you. You surprise yourself as to how good you feel. Be willing to confide in a friend and get needed support. Tonight: Have a close encounter. *****

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Friends seek you out, and you get some interesting news. Work with the unexpected and use your imagination. Your ability to drive a situation makes you a winner. Look beyond the obvious. Tonight: Count on your desirability. *****

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You might not like what it takes to complete a job or task. Unexpected financial changes can create an uproar. Look at different options and possibilities—don't be naive about money any longer. Tonight: Clear out the cobwebs. *****

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Creativity and fun merge, and it might take everything you've got to get your work done today. A more productive situation can develop, if you simply let go of your expectations. Your view of a friendship changes. Tonight: Wear a grin. *****

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Come from a grounded place today. You hear news that, while it might startle in you, opens you up to new horizons. Be more honest with yourself. Talks with a trusted friend prove to be supportive and informative. Tonight: Look at a major change. *****

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): It might be necessary to open up and have a long-overdue chat. Refuse to let a misunderstanding continue. Question alternatives that surround a trip or an opportunity to grow intellectually or spiritually. *****
