Jet crashes into apartment; 200 feared killed in firestorm

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands — The firestorm finally over, the search began today for more than 200 people feared killed when an El Al airlines cargo jumbo jet smashed through an apartment complex after losing two engines.

Fourteen bodies were found after the Sunday evening crash but the search for more victims was hampered by the precarious condition of the two stricken 10-story buildings in the low-income complex.

The plane's two right-wing engines tore off shortly after takeoff and it was struggling to return to Schiphol Airport some 10 miles away for an emergency landing. The engines landed in a lake.

It was supper time when the plane plowed into the crook where the two apartment buildings meet, a blast of ignited jet fuel touching off a raging blaze that took four hours to control.

Pulverized or burned were some 80 apartments, officially home to 239 people but thought to be housing far more.

The stricken Bijlmermeer (Bij'l-mur-MEER) complex is known to house many illegal aliens, who would not be listed on occupancy records.

In the chaos, police had to hold back distraught residents whose loved ones were trapped by the inferno and people were seen jumping from windows to escape the flames.

Mayor Ed Van Thijn told a dawn news conference that 209 people were unaccounted for.

Shortly after dawn, lines of hard-hatted rescue workers carried stretchers into the cordoned-off disaster zone as the digging for corpses began.

"The hope that anyone is in there still alive is minimal," said Fire Chief Hugo Ernst. He said it could take four days to move the rubble aside and retrieve the bodies because one of the buildings is on the verge of collapse.

The pilot had reported that both engines on one wing caught fire after takeoff for Tel Aviv from Schiphol, and Monday, Rescue workers picked their way through the remains of the apartment complex which was hit by an El Al 747 cargo plane Sunday in Amsterdam, Netherlands. Hundreds are feared dead after the cargo jet smashed into the complex and exploded into a fireball that took over four hours to control.

Early voting on bond issues still slight; election Saturday

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

Tuesday is the last day to vote on two separate bond referendums on a Saturday ballot and only 321, 3 percent of eligible voters, have cast ballots as of this morning.

"That's right in there, kind of what we thought," said Paul Hopper, coordinator of Big Spring Main Street Inc., a downtown revitalization group pushing passage of a $1.4 million bond issue to control flooding along Beal's Creek up to magnitudes that occur about once every 10 years.

Also on the ballot is a $1.1 million bond issue for paving of 2 to 4 percent of city streets.

The Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce, another group backing passage of the flood-control bonds, last week announced predictions that less than 1,000, 10 percent, may vote. In an average turnout, 16 percent of registered voters voted in the council elections last year, 4 percent voted early.

Those opposed to the flood-control issue, including some Big Spring City Council members, have not organized efforts to defeat the issue. The council in June voted unanimously to let voters decide.

But those in opposition are speaking out, Hopper said. And one reason for low turnout so far, he surmised, is that misinformation is being put out by those opposed.

"They're (voters) holding back to see just what will come out," he said. "We would hope that everybody looks at the facts."

Opponents point out that the flood-control project will not prevent larger floods and say it may not be money well spent. If passed it would require a property tax increase of 5 cents per $100 of valuation of pay off the debt in 17 or 18 years. Totally, each cent amounts to $1 in taxes per $10,000 valuation. The 1992-93 tax rate is 66.09 cents.

Proponents say it should be passed because the bond would be much cheaper than flood damages, benefit economic development, eliminate an eyesore, help alleviate bug and varmint breeding and the influx of $3.2 million in matching federal money for it would boost the economy.

There is no apparent public opposition to the street bonds. If passed it would require a property tax increase of 4 cents per $100 of valuation. Voters authorized the bonds 12 years ago but it was never used and therefore is up for reauthorization.

Essie Ortiz faces her disabilities

Editor's Note: In recognition of Hispanic Heritage Month, the Big Spring Herald will publish daily articles on Hispanics and Hispanic culture.

By MARTHA E. FLORES
Staff Writer

When Essie Ortiz began school in Lamesa in the mid-1960s she faced one disability — a language barrier.

Before she graduated salutatorian, she found herself confronting another disability — vision deterioration.

Hispanic
Heritage Month

When she was 13-years-old, a rare and mysterious condition began to deteriorate her eyesight. At first doctors were baffled by it. For the next five years, she and her parents traveled Texas going to different specialists in hopes of finding out what the problem was and if there was a solution.

When she was 19, doctors in San Antonio diagnosed her as having Stargardt disease. Ortiz was told she was born without a macula lutea, the small yellowish area lying slightly lateral to the center of the retina that constitutes the region of maximum visual activity. She was the fifth case the specialists had seen.

"I can't see through the center of my eye," Ortiz said. "I only have periphery vision. Although I was born without it, it did not develop until I was a teenager.

Ortiz said she had a difficult time coping with the fact she was losing her eyesight at such a young age. She was embarrassed to tell people. When the Texas Commission for the Blind visited her, she ran away from them, she said.

"I was in such denial I didn't have anything to do with them," she said. "When I was in high school, I didn't let any of my classmates know how bad my eyesight was."

After graduation, she decided to attend Howard College although she had received numerous four-year scholarships because of her uneasiness about her condition.

"The deterioration stabilized during college, but I had to sit at the front of the classroom to see the board," she said. "I read real slow and had to hold the book real close."

"But what I found out in college is that when I told people they did not look at me as an outcast, instead they did everything to help. Teachers and especially Mr. Wayne Bonner, a counselor at Howard, went out of their way to help."

After receiving her associates, she married and began a job search. For the next few years, Ortiz worked as a waitress, machinist's assistant and did clerical work.

She then made contact with the commission's district office in Odessa. After testing, she was certified as being legally blind. The commission assisted her in her job search.

After more than 20 interviews at various businesses in town, Ortiz said she was hired by the Big Spring Veterans Administration Medical Center as a time keeper in 1987. The commission provided special equipment, a computer with large print and a closed-circuit television magnifying any print placed on the set's platform.

"The biggest obstacle I had when I was looking for a job was people giving me a chance," she said. "The last thing people should do for me is feel pity. All I ask is for a little bit of consideration."

Within the last year, Ortiz's vision has begun to deteriorate again. She can not drive. She can no longer read the newspaper beyond the large headlines. Her husband, Lupe, and her children; Brianda, 11, Angelica, 10, and Gabriel, 5, work together to help Ortiz by reading to her what she can not.

"If I am baking, my daughters will read the recipe to me or they read the newspaper," she said. "My husband has always read to me. When I was in college, he would help me read my textbooks."

Import tax wanted along with NAFTA

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Some members of Congress want to tax imports from Mexico and Canada to make up for what they see as deficiencies in the proposed North American Free Trade Agreement. But the Bush administration and some business groups oppose a border tax, saying such a fee would undermine the whole purpose of a treaty designed to eliminate all tariffs over 15 years.

Several proposals are floating around on Capitol Hill to address border environmental cleanup and retraining for workers who lose their jobs as trade patterns shift.

One of the few features the plans have in common is that they all skirt use of the word tax — calling it a "cross-border tariff," a "user fee" or "conversion of a current customs fee."

Whatever it's called, the administration doesn't like any of the plans.

"We've worked very hard to bring tariffs down," says U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills, who oversaw 14 months of negotiations before a treaty was concluded in August.

"I believe greater revenues will be created by the creation of greater wealth and we will simply destroy that option if we replace the duties that we have taken off with taxes to be put on."

But tariff backers such as House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., and Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., who have urged retraining, job creation and environmental programs. His plan also calls for Mexico and Canada to levy a similar fee, which would be phased out by all three nations over a period of years.

—Delaware Republican Sen. William Roth and New York Democratic Sen. Daniel Moynihan, both members of the Senate

Finance Committee, introduced legislation last October that would create a Trade Adjustment Assistance Fund by assessing a "small" temporary fee on goods entering the United States from Mexico. The money, from an as-yet undetermined tariff, would be used to retrain workers who have lost their jobs as American industries shift production or relocate to Mexico.

—De la Garza, who chairs the House Agriculture Committee, is calling for the administration to keep a portion of the Merchandise Processing Fee currently collected by the U.S. Customs Service on imported merchandise. The new Environmental and Infrastructure Border Maintenance Fee, levied only on Mexican goods, would be used for border and Gulf of Mexico projects. De la Garza has suggested Mexico convert an existing fee of its own for similar use.

who did it, I'm hurting twice as much," said Dorothy Bartholomew of Fort Worth, a CURE board member.

CURE members Sunday marked the group's 20th anniversary. The meeting included testimonials from relatives of suspected and convicted criminals who reflect frustration, pain and anger over the criminal justice system.

Prisoners' families often feel both the victims' pain and the public shame for a crime in which they were uninvolved, Ms. Bartholomew said.

"We try to help the families through a difficult situation," she said. "We say: 'You haven't done anything. You're no criminal.'"

Diana Ray said when her son was charged with sexually assaulting an 8-year-old girl, she was forced to deal with the anguish virtually alone because attorneys warned her that discussing the case could force the trial to be moved.

"So hardly anyone knew — even my closest friends," said the Fort Worth woman.

Ms. Ray said her son has been released after more than eight years in prison. But the strain tore apart her marriage and left her searching for a way to help others.

"Even though he's out, he's not free and neither am I," said Ms. Ray, crying.

Moon's son-in-law now owner of the Crawford Farms

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN ANTONIO — No one thought much about it last summer when a New York-based corporation plunked down $8.1 million to buy Crawford Farms, a 3,000-acre horse ranch near Carrizo Springs with a palatial Spanish-style house.

Now it's going to be the talk of Dimmit County.

Those attending the June 11 auction got a chance to view the "football field-sized" main house with a living room the size of a hotel lobby and the horse farm with an indoor show arena that seats 3,600.

Bidding opened at $5 million and ended five minutes later after James Park, representing the Han Corp. of Hawthorne, N.Y., submitted the winning bid of $8.1 million.

No one realized the identity of the new opener.

Han officials now confirm that Park is the son-in-law of Rev. Sun Myung Moon, founder of the Unification Church.

Local citizens and officials discovered that when the Reverend Moon came to the ranch recently.

Han Corp., it has now been revealed, is primarily owned by Unification Church members, according to Han Vice President Mark Turegano.

"The Reverend Moon was down about a week ago by invitation of Han management. He was impressed," Turegano told the San Antonio Express-News.

"The one thing I heard that he said was: 'Wow, this place is a palace.'"

Han and church officials disclaim any connection, and both say there is little likelihood the ranch will be used for church or religious functions.

"Han is not an affiliate, subsidiary, product or function of the church. There is no connection. I don't know the exact ownership of it," said Peter Ross, spokesman for the Unification Church.

Concerning Moon's visit, Ross said, "He's the founder of the church and its spiritual leader. But many times there are projects or institutes founded by the Reverend Moon in his personal capacity.

"If he was down there, it was evidently not in his capacity as head of the church."

Han said the ranch will primarily be used for horses.

"Han is a commercial venture," he said. "The ranch is going to be a completely commercial facility, meaning horse breeding, farming, hunting and corporate retreats," he said. "his will be a commercial operation, not a religious operation."

"I would assume that had the Unification Church wanted a place for retreats, they would buy it themselves," he said.

But he declined to identify any of Han's owners.

The news was greeted by surprise by locals.

"I'm shocked. You caught me off guard," said Dimmit County Attorney Charlie Johnson. "But we've got the Catholics; we've got the Protestants; and we've got some Mormons. I don't know if the Unification Church will be looking for converts, and I don't know how successful they'd be."

"I do know people around here don't have too much to donate to the Reverend Moon."

Runaway killed during a gang drive-by shooting

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN ANTONIO — A 13-year-old runaway who had been hiding out with gang members at a duplex was shot to death when the apartment was peppered with gunfire during an apparent drive-by shooting, police say.

Police said Sherilyn Langos, an eighth grader at Anson Jones Middle School, was shot in the back early Sunday. She was pronounced dead at 2:27 a.m. Sunday at Brooke Army Medical Center.

"She never felt she was putting herself in danger," Sandy Langos, her father, told the San Antonio Express-News. "No matter how much you explained it, she couldn't comprehend it."

Officers said the girl ran away from home last Thursday and was staying at the duplex.

About 15-20 young people, including some who admitted to being gang members, were staying in the house when the shooting occurred.

Officers said there were about a dozen bullet holes in the wall and window of the duplex.

Ms. Langos, who had been sitting in a back bedroom, got up at the sound of gunfire and tried to escape, but she was shot in the back, police said.

The shooting was under investigation early today.

Group aids criminals' families

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT WORTH — Crime victims' families are not the only people who suffer when laws are violated, said relatives of prison inmates who are helping each other cope.

"Hold your head up and don't be afraid to say you have a relative in prison," said Lois Robison, whose son, Larry Keith Robison, was convicted of murder.

Members of the national group called Citizens United for the Rehabilitation of Errants held their statewide meeting in Fort Worth over the weekend.

"A lot of people are shocked when they find out two schoolteachers have a son on Death Row," Ms. Robison said Sunday.

Members of COPE said widespread news coverage of cases such as that of Kenneth Allen McDuff exacerbate their pain.

McDuff, a paroled former death row inmate, has been indicted in convenience store clerk Melissa Northrup's death and another slaying. He is scheduled to stand trial in Houston in January.

The group founded in San Antonio in 1972 promises help for criminals' relatives, who actually have much in common with those of crime victims, they say.

who did it, I'm hurting twice as much," said Dorothy Bartholomew of Fort Worth, a CURE board member.

Republican backers on the spot with veto of cable bill

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush's veto of a bill to re-regulate cable TV rates is turning a bill co-authored and supported by Republicans into a presidential campaign issue they'd hoped to avoid.

To consumers, the issue has always been simple: Cable television prices have been rising too fast and something should be done about it.

But as senators who shared that view prepared to vote late today on whether to override Bush's weekend veto of the bill, they also considered the impact their decision would have on the president's re-election chances.

The bill went to the president after passing the Senate 75-24 and the House 280-128. House support appeared to be holding strong, and unless nine senators changed their votes, Bush likely would suffer his first loss in 36 veto fights with Congress.

That's not an event the president, who is trailing in the polls, could easily afford four weeks before the election.

Democratic presidential candidate Bill Clinton, who is trying to make the bill a campaign issue, said Sunday that Bush "made a mistake. I would have signed it."

Sen. Al Gore, D-Tenn., the Democratic vice presidential candidate, who co-authored the bill, accused Bush of "standing square with the big cable operators, the monopolies that have been raising rates and squeezing out competition."

The timing of the veto showdown wasn't accidental. Opponents of the measure, including its most ardent detractor, Democratic Sen. Tim Wirth of Colorado, knew that delaying the process to this point would put Republican supporters of the bill in an awkward position.

Bush had 10 days to veto the bill, but the fact that he didn't do so until just a few hours before the bill would become law without his signature was seen by some as a signal that the White House was having trouble persuading Republican senators to change votes for the sake of the president.

On Sunday, Bush invited key Republican senators to the White House to urge them to sustain his veto. But chances remained doubtful late in the day.

"I think the president was poorly advised on this one," Rep. Christopher Shays, R-Conn., said Sunday after a news conference called by House members to demonstrate that cable regulation had bipartisan support.

Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., a co-author of the measure, said "The cable legislation is strongly consistent with basic Republican principles."

Danforth said it emphasizes that competition is preferable to regulation, unregulated monopolies are not in the public interest and some regulation is necessary where there is no competition.

The monopoly that cable television companies enjoy in all but a tiny fraction of communities has allowed them to raise rates with no threat of losing customers to a competitor.

The legislation would enhance competition by requiring that cable programming be made available at reasonable rates to other companies who can provide multiple television channels, like satellite.

The government would only regulate rates in communities that did not have competing television systems.

Firefighters conquer fire

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAMINO, Calif. — Firefighters doused hot spots and began packing up their equipment today at a wildfire that burned nearly 25,000 acres of timber, destroyed 40 homes and cabins and led to two deaths.

Authorities said they expected to gain full control tonight of the fire in the Eldorado National Forest, about 140 miles northeast of San Francisco.

Dozens of firefighters suffered mostly minor injuries.

The deaths occurred Thursday when a firefighting plane crashed, killing the pilot and another man. The U.S. Forest Service said the pilot had reported engine problems.

Jim Gaffney, a fire captain with the state Forestry Department, estimated damage at $245 million. He said the firefighting costs would reach $12 million.

Pete Marquez, a fire prevention officer with the Forestry Department, said that the blaze was caused by humans but that investigators didn't know if it was an accident or arson. The fire started Tuesday in a campground.

Among the trees burned were ones planted to replace those destroyed in a 1959 fire. The replacement trees were just reaching marketable age, according to Michigan-California Lumber Co., which owns half the land affected by the fire.

ANC will not disband military wing

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The ANC said today that it would not bow to demands from the rival Inkatha Freedom Party to disband its military wing as a condition for resuming talks.

African National Congress officials said the demand from Inkatha leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi was "a red herring" and an excuse not to return to talks on ending apartheid and giving blacks the vote.

ANC and Communist Party leader Chris Hani said Sunday that ANC-led groups would go ahead with marches on Buthelezi's KwaZulu homeland and the Bophuthatswana homeland.

The ANC wants both homeland governments removed from power.

Such marches could lead to violent confrontation that would aggravate South Africa's political crisis. An ANC march on the Ciskei homeland last month ended with homeland forces killing 28 protesters.

Hani did not set a date for the new protests.

Buthelezi told a rally Sunday that the ANC must disband its military wing, Spear of the Nation, calling it a threat to stability. He accused the ANC of trying to suppress his Zulu-dominated group.

Inkatha is considered the second-strongest black group in South Africa behind the ANC. It broke off talks with the white government after President F.W. de Klerk and ANC leader Nelson Mandela agreed last month on ways to halt political violence.

Buthelezi called the agreements "a declaration of war to the Inkatha Freedom Party ... and the Zulu people."

"It is time to say: this far and no further," he said. "If that means that we will die, so be it."

Much of the violence, which has claimed the lives of more than 8,000 people in three years, stems from an ANC-Inkatha power struggle.

Police said Monday at least nine people, including a police officer, had died in political unrest in various parts of the country during the weekend.

De Klerk has said Inkatha must be part of negotiations on a new constitution to end white minority rule.

The ANC says its armed wing is not involved in any military operations inside South Africa, but Inkatha and the South African army say Spear of the Nation cadres play a major role in fomenting township violence.

Multiparty talks involving the government, the ANC, Inkatha and other groups broke down in May because of a dispute over the transition from white minority rule to a multiracial government.

The ANC broke off talks with the government a month later to protest the violence, but agreed to return last week following the summit between Mandela and de Klerk.

"I may not agree with what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it."

Taking survey of real estate vote

MOBILE, Ala.—You've heard of the Washington Post-ABC Poll and the Times-Mirror Poll and the CBS-New York Times Poll and all those other polls that tell us Democrat Bill Clinton is leading President Bush in the race for the White House anywhere from 21 to 9 points.

I have no idea how these polls are conducted, but I do know this: Never in my life has a political pollster asked me who I was voting for in an election. You would think they would finally get around to me, because there are so many polls and so many elections.

But not once have I been called or stopped on the street and asked: "If the election were today for whom would you vote?"

If I were asked such a question, I think it might be fun to lie. Maybe if more people lied to pollsters there would be more drama to elections, more startling upsets.

"This is incredible," Dan Rather might say on election night. The polls showed an overwhelming base of support for Politician A but Politician B is pulling off a major upset. Hey, none of you lied to the pollsters, did you?"

Since none of the polls have contacted me, and I really don't trust them anyway, I decided I would conduct my own poll just for the fun of it.

The Grizzard Poll was here in Mobile, where I was speaking to the Alabama State Realtors Assn., the people who sell houses.

When the economy goes sour, so do the sales of houses.

Do these people blame the president for that and want to give Bill Clinton a chance? My poll was very scientific. There were may be 500 people in the audience, and I said to them, "I'm taking a poll. If the presidential election were held today, how many of you would vote for Bill Clinton? Clap your hands if you're for Bill Clinton."

Near silence. Maybe three claps. Maybe four. I couldn't give you the exact number of Alabama Realtors who were for Bill Clinton, but I think more would have clapped for 25 percent mortgage rates.

"Okay," I said. "How many of you would vote for George Bush?" It was nearly unanimous for the president.

So, you may be asking what does the Grizzard Poll indicate? For one thing, it indicates that if Bill Clinton runs into any Alabama Realtors he'd better take Tipper Gore with him. He might need something wide to hide behind.

I think it also indicates that the Realtors may be afraid interest rates, now the lowest in years, might go up al a Jimmy Carter if Clinton is elected; that Clinton would put a heavy tax on the wealthiest Americans who buy the most expensive houses, and they might back off from real estate.

Or, they aren't supporting Clinton because they think he is a draft-dodging womanizer who is slicker than a bucket of eels.

I did manage to collar one Realtor who was still in the hall when I came out from backstage. I asked her if she had applauded for the president, and she said that she had. I asked her what she didn't like about Bill Clinton.

"I don't like his hairdo," she said.

I'll soon be speaking to the American Society of Barbers at their annual convention in Vitalis, Okla., and I'll poll attendees on this issue.

That's what's great about being in the political polling biz. You just never know when somebody is going to open up a whole new bucket of eels.

Welcome mat out for guests

We welcome numerous visitors to our community today and wish them well during their visit.

Maribel Jaso, newly appointed District 8 Engineer for the Texas Department of Transportation, will be in our community attending a luncheon in her honor at the Big Spring Country Club.

Also at the luncheon will be Ray Stoker, Jr., chairman of the Texas Department of Transportation, and State Sen. John T. Montford, D-Lubbock, our state senator and chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. A representative of State Rep. Rob Junell, D-San Angelo, will also attend.

Joining these individuals at the luncheon will be a number of guests from Lamesa and San Angelo and other points along U.S. 87, including a large number of Howard County residents.

While the primary function of the luncheon will be to welcome Ms. Jaso, the groups from Lamesa, San Angelo and Howard County will take advantage of the opportunity to launch an organized effort to work toward the extension of I-27 south from Lubbock along the U.S. 87 route.

A study has been funded to determine the best possible route for the interstate to follow. One look at the map, especially considering the need to provide connections with Mexico and the overseas markets via the Gulf of Mexico, and you'll see the I-27 / U.S. 87 / U.S. 277 route is easily the most direct and logical.

So while we truly extend the hand of friendship to Ms. Jaso — and welcome Mr. Stoker and Sen. Montford to our community once again — we'll also take the opportunity to bend an ear whenever possible.

Government wants to be nanny to us all

The road to hell, it is said, is paved with good intentions. The maxim goes back a thousand years. On Sept. 10 the House took one more step down that long and tempting lane. By voice vote the House approved a bill to protect little children.

A better intention scarcely could be imagined. No one said a word against the bill. Only four members said anything at all. They agreed that the bill is a good bill and should pass. The job was done in 30 minutes.

One section of the bill applies to the manufacturers of balloons, marbles, and toys with small parts. The makers would be required to attach a prominent label saying, for example, "Choking hazard — This toy has small parts. Keep away from children under 3 years old."

On the packaging of balls with a diameter of 1.75 inches or less, the mandatory label would say: "This toy is a small ball that presents a choking hazard. Remind 3- and 4-year-olds to keep small balls out of mouth."

Michael Bilirakis, R-Fla., offered a long and finely detailed amendment to require the labeling of five-gallon buckets. These are the familiar plastic containers designed chiefly for bulk quantities of paint, cleaning solutions and construction materials. They often are reused for scrubbing, car-washing and the like.

Cardiss Collins, D-Ill., chairman of the subcommittee that handled the bill, supported the amendment. She said that between 1984 and 1991 an estimated 200 infants drowned by falling into these buckets. Alex McMillan, R-N.C., said he recently had become a grandfather. He was particularly sensitive to child safety, and even though he does not ordinarily support product-specific directions to the Consumer Product Safety Commission, he too was delighted to support the amendment.

The measure requires manufacturers or retailers to apply a warning label to every bucket that is sold. The label shall be 5 inches high and 2.75 inches wide. The label shall be firmly attached in such a way that it cannot be easily removed. It shall be placed on the bucket just below the point where the handle is inserted.

"The label shall contain a picture of a child reaching into a bucket and shall include an encircled slash and triangle with an exclamation point upon a contrasting field before the word "WARNING!"

Moreover, the label shall contain on a contrasting background the following: "Child Can Fall In to Bucket and Drown — Keep Children Away From Buckets With Even a Small Amount of Liquid."

Bilirakis acknowledged that bucket manufacturers have an ongoing campaign for voluntary labeling, but even so, "I believe that a federal, mandatory labeling standard would be more efficient and certainly more effective."

The gentleman had brought a five-gallon bucket with him to the floor. Federal regulations, he said, already require that other labels be attached to buckets, but his warning label would be larger and more conspicuous. He was not trying to protect bucket makers from multiple state labeling requirements — he has no bucket makers in his district.

What to say? Who could criticize a law so well intended? The Consumer Product Safety Commission last spring declined to impose labeling requirements on toys, balloons and balls on the commonsensical grounds that no amount of labeling will overcome the negligence of parents. Staff studies indicated that 1.2 billion balloons and 1.5 billion marbles are sold annually. They are blamed for an average of eight choking deaths a year. The Collins bill would overrule the CPSC decision.

Yes, the accidental deaths of eight children by choking on balloons or 25 by drowning in buckets are occasions of sorrow. Yet it is not the balloons, the marbles or the buckets that are at fault. It is the parent who puts marbles in a baby's crib or lets a toddler play unattended around a five-gallon bucket.

Little by little, one well-intended step at a time, we keep moving down the road that makes government the one great nanny of us all. What becomes of individual responsibility? Little by little, step by step, we discard that old value as we plod along the way.

Spur brings about change

NEW ORLEANS — An autumn weekday in the French Quarter. Not much stirring except a few middle-aged tourists.

Royal and Bourbon Streets are as quiet as they get — swirling, impressionistic paintings of wrought iron, asparagus fern and peeling paint.

This is the only city in the South where rot and mildew have aesthetic appeal. It's the only place where streets below sea level render every rain a flash flood and nobody seems to notice. Or where Baptists drink in public and exotic dancers host foreign dignitaries.

There is more to New Orleans, of course, than Bourbon Street, that avenue of drink and striptease that has thrilled generations of boys on holiday.

But this may well be the only American city with the audacity to make debauchery an industry. Something sinister can disturb the sensuous peace. (Recently, District Attorney Harry Connick Sr. — yes, the crooner's father — was accused by the world's most inept armed robbers. When Connick told the juveniles they were robbing the DA, they fled.)

This city usually saves its energy for partying, however. If Atlanta is the city too busy to hate, New Orleans is the city that doesn't know how. Or at least that's what I always figured.

But diverse, colorful, wicked New Orleans has been in an uproar the past year, ever since black city councilwoman Dorothy Mae Taylor introduced an ordinance requiring Mardi Gras krewes to open their memberships in order to obtain city parade permits.

Krewes are private Carnival clubs, and most have been segregated a century or longer.

Rather than comply with forced integration, some krewes disbanded, or announced they wouldn't be sponsoring Mardi Gras parades.

Would Carnival fold its tents rather than comply? With each new krewe withdrawal the anger against Dorothy Mae Taylor grew. She inspired surly signs at last year's festivities, not to mention the daily ire of radio talk show freaks. Dorothy Mae's name was mud.

Then recently one of Carnival's oldest krewes, Rex, made what Mardi Gras buffs considered a revolutionary, if oblique, announcement. Rex made quiet history: "Greetings to all. . . Much has occurred about Carnival and its traditions since our last visit and we hope those discussions have ended. Now is the time to accentuate the positive and eliminate the negative. . . ."

"Recently a number of persons from many walks of life and varied backgrounds have joined our loyal following. . . . We will continue our cherished tradition of Carnival secrecy regarding our members. . . ."

Those in the Carnival know say Rex invited three black city residents to join its ranks, including a prominent surgeon. The names of the newest members were withheld, in keeping with yet another tradition.

Rex insists that it had planned to integrate even before the ordinance became a matter of regional debate. After 120 years, white members claimed they had decided on their own that asking blacks to join was the right thing to do.

They sound a lot like Southern politicians of the 1960s, who always claimed they would have gotten around to desegregation in their own good time if only the federal government had left the South alone.

The truth is — and all of us know it deep down — that it usually takes a Dorothy Mae Taylor to make us enact laws that make us act. Someone willing to withstand community scorn while questioning tradition.

Rex is getting a lot of credit for accentuating the positive, and that's good. At least this krewe didn't take its floats and beads and go home, acting the petulant child, as some have done. At least one significant part of the Carnival parade is marching in the right direction.

But if we're going to heap praise on Rex, let's give Devil Dorothy her due. A bunch of rich white men didn't wake up in the middle of the night and decide, "Hey, our club's too exclusive. Let's recruit blacks."

Brenda Brooks

There was an interesting article in the Big Spring Herald two Fridays ago. The article dealt with a Census Bureau study stating the working black couples are the only kind of black family to see their income rise sharply compared with whites over the past two decades.

Income rose from 72 cents on the dollar of white median income in 1967 to 85 cents in 1990. For most black couples, the income of the wife makes the difference between being middle class and living at the poverty level.

This wasn't news to me. I quickly ran through my list of friends and family. I could only come up with two black couples where the wives stay at home. One couple recently had their phone disconnected for non-payment. The other wife is married to a former Los Angeles Laker.

As far as family goes, there hasn't been an unemployed wife in our family since everyone lived on the farm back in East Texas. Even then, the wives hired out to do laundry, cooking and cleaning for the white families in the community.

For both of my grandmothers, it was not uncommon to work two jobs, and sometimes three. I never heard them complain either.

My mother encouraged me to get an education so that when not if, I got a job, I would be able to make a decent living and in her words, "be able to dress up and not wear a uniform to work."

Well, I do make a decent living. The part about dressing up is a family joke. Remember, I am a pumper for an oil company.

God has blessed me to where I can say I work because I want to. I don't take this choice for granted.

I realize this is the first generation of black women to have a real choice. My daughters already take it for granted.

My 6-year-old informed me she wants to be a "homemommy" when she grows up. I asked her why and she replied "I want to stay at home and make beds and be cozy."

I told her I thought it was a wonderful idea.

Needed to leave the Metrodome early this week? Too bad. Turned off the game at Sun Devil Stadium between Washington and Phoenix after three quarters Sunday? You missed it. Caught in a long line at the concession stand during the final two minutes at Mile High Stadium? You were out of luck. Could only catch the first half of the Los Angeles Rams contest with San Francisco at Candlestick Park? That's not good. At all those places, the action happened late and led to some of the most thrilling finishes in the NFL this season.

Minnesota got three touchdowns in the fourth quarter to defeat Chicago 21-20. The Cardinals, who trailed by 18 points in the final period, beat the defending Super Bowl champion Redskins 27-24. John Elway put together another routine fourth-quarter comeback as Denver topped Kansas City 20-19.

The Bears' collapse was the greatest — or worst, depending on whom you were rooting for. Jim Harbaugh had led Chicago (2-3) to a 20-0 margin through three quarters, enroute to a seemingly easy victory until he decided to audiblate the line of scrimmage and change a play called by coach Mike Ditka.

Bad choice. A poor pass to Neal Anderson was picked off by Todd Scott and turned into a 35-yard touchdown for Minnesota, igniting the 21-point quarter that made the Vikings 4-1 for the first time since 1977.

At Phoenix, Washington also squandered a large lead in alarming fashion. Trailing by 18 points, Cardinals cornerback Robert Massey returned two interceptions for touchdowns in the fourth quarter and Chris Chandler threw a 9-yard scoring pass to Larry Centers with 41 seconds left.

It was the Cardinals' first victory in 11 games and left the Redskins (2-2) with as many losses as during their Super Bowl season last year.

In Denver, it was just another case of Elway vexing Kansas City losers of 10 straight at Mile High — and Chiefs coach Marty Schottenheimer, just 1-9 against the Broncos.

Down 19-6, Elway threw two touchdown passes in the final two minutes for his 30th successful fourth-quarter comeback in his 10-year career.

The Broncos (3-2) snapped a string of 12 straight quarters without a TD when Elway hit Mark Jackson for a 25-yard score with 1:55 remaining to cap an 14-play, 80-yard drive.

At Candlestick Park, the Rams were up 17-10 early in the final quarter before San Francisco's Steve Young took over. The quarterback rushed for touchdowns of 8 and 39 yards, and directed the drive which led to Mike Cofer's 21-yard field goal with one second remaining.

Dolphins 37, Bills 10 — Louis Oliver, who'd watched too much of Buffalo's passing schemes, made sure the Bills saw enough of him.

"I've seen their routes for three years and it was about time I started breaking on them," said Oliver, who had three interceptions, returning one 103 yards for a touchdown to tie an NFL record as Miami (4-0) beat Buffalo for just the second time in six seasons.

Dan Marino threw three touchdown passes at Rich Stadium, one to Keith Jackson, the former Philadelphia All-Pro who signed a four-year, $6 million deal with the Dolphins last Monday after being declared a free agent.

The powerful Bills offense, which had averaged 38 points through four games, committed five turnovers. Jim Kelly threw for 306 yards, but his four interceptions tied a career high.

Falcons 24, Packers 10 — Chris Miller outplayed his former backup, Brett Favre, and Andre Rison caught two TDs as Atlanta (2-3) snapped a three-game losing streak.

Miller's scoring passes to Rison covered 10 and 21 yards. He also threw a 2-yard scoring pass to Mike Pritchard.

Favre, a rookie reserve with the Falcons last year and a Packer starter this season because of an injury to Don Majkowski, completed 33 of 43 passes for 276 yards, but could produce only one touchdown.

Sterling Sharpe had 107 yards on nine catches for Green Bay (2-3).

Saints 13, Lions 7 — New Orleans' rookie Vaughn Dunbar rushed for 70 yards, almost twice that of Barry Sanders, and the Saints rang up six sacks against struggling Detroit (1-4).

Dunbar's 22 carries included the Saints' first rushing TD of the season.

Chargers 17, Seahawks 6 — Anthony Miller caught first-half touchdown passes of 67 and 5 yards, ending with nine receptions for 142 yards as San Diego (1-4) finally won for new coach Bobby Ross.

Stan Humphries, the lowest-rated NFL quarterback, completed 15 of 28 passes for 200 yards and wasn't intercepted. He was picked off eight times in his previous three starts.

San Diego held Seattle (1-4) to just 180 yards, prompting Seahawks fullback John L. Sullivan to question his teammates' efforts.

Raiders 13, Giants 10 — Los Angeles (1-4) broke a very un-Raider-like eight-game losing streak dating to Dec. 1, 1991, as Jeff Jaeger made a career-long 54-yard field goal in the fourth quarter.

New York (1-3) led 10-0 in the first half, but gave up a 68-yard TD pass from Todd Marinovich to Tim Brown in the third quarter and a pair of field goals by Jaeger.

Colts 24, Buccaneers 14 — Jeff George overcame a poor start to defeat Tampa Bay as Indianapolis (2-2) surpassed its 1991 victory total.

George, who had two of his first three passes intercepted, led the Colts to 17 points in the second half, including touchdown throws of 34 yards to Jessie Hester and 14 yards to Kerry Cash.

Jets 30, Patriots 21 — New York showed the kind of defense missing since its two best defenders went out with long-term injuries in winning for the first time this season.

The Jets sacked Hugh Millen seven times for 59 yards and held New England (0-4) to a touchdown through three quarters.

Although Jeff Lageman and Dennis Byrd are sidelined, the Jets' defensive front four dominated. Marvin Washington and Paul Frase each had two sacks and New York kept Millen under siege most of the way.

Cary Blanchard, signed this week to replace inaccurate Jason Staurovsky, made three field goals.

New York quarterback Browning Nagle threw touchdown passes of 7 yards to Terrance Mathis and 19 yards to Rob Moore.

Lemieux will be richest player

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

PITTSBURGH — On his 27th birthday, Mario Lemieux is expected to sign the contract of his life.

The Pittsburgh Penguins have called a news conference for today, presumably to announce a spectacular new deal with Lemieux — a seven-year contract said to be worth $42 million.

At the same time, they may also reveal who will be coaching their team as the 1992-93 season begins Tuesday. The Penguins have been without a coach since failing to reach agreement on a contract with Scotty Bowman.

Lemieux, though, will be the main focus of attention at the news conference, scheduled for 4 p.m. CDT at a downtown Pittsburgh hotel, and for more reasons than his birthday.

The contract will make Lemieux the highest paid player in the NHL and probably a Pittsburgh Penguin for the remainder of his career. The overall deal is worth twice the $21 million, six-year contract that Eric Lindros signed with the Philadelphia Flyers earlier this year.

Interestingly, the Flyers and Penguins will open the season featuring the NHL's two highest-paid players Tuesday night in Pittsburgh.

Lemieux's new contract supersedes his current five-year deal, worth about $12 million. The new deal, which Tom Reich has been negotiating throughout the summer with Penguins owner Howard Baldwin, would replace the final two seasons on Lemieux's current contract.

The money that Baldwin will pay Lemieux is about two-thirds what he paid for the entire team when he bought the Penguins for $65 million in 1991.

Baldwin said during the summer he wanted to sign Lemieux to a long-term deal that would bind him to the Penguins for the rest of his career and beyond. And Lemieux said he would play the seven years as long as his troublesome back, which caused him to miss the first 50 games of 1990-91 and 16 games last season, holds up.

"At the moment, it's fine," Lemieux said recently. "I've been playing golf every day, and at training camp I've been able to skate for hours without any problem."

Lemieux's current contract, which ranks fourth in the NHL, includes payments for past services rendered to the Penguins. Part of Lemieux's complicated new contract will include a marketing arrangement.

The Penguins have been secretive about the deal. But Lemieux actually broke the story himself last week in a radio interview in Montreal when he said he was close to signing a seven-year, $42-million contract. Some reports said the contract was worth as much as $45 million.

The 6-foot-4, 210-pound center is recognized as hockey's top player, having led the Penguins to two straight Stanley Cup championships. Both years, Lemieux was voted the most valuable player in the playoffs.

Gonzalez HR champ

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Juan Gonzalez and Kevin Brown reached important milestones in a game that actually belonged to the one of the elder statesmen of the Texas Rangers.

Gonzalez captured the major-league home run crown Sunday by hitting his 43rd in the Rangers' 9-5 victory over the California Angels. Brown earned his 21st win to tie Jack Morris for the most in the majors.

Yet the most celebrated player on Texas seemed to be Brian Downing who, five days before his 42nd birthday, turned the final game of his 19-year career into an impromptu retirement party.

The scene could not have been more appropriate. Before joining the Rangers as a free agent a month into the 1991 season, Downing spent 13 years with the Angels and ranks as their career leader in several offensive categories.

"I wanted to play my last game here (at Anaheim Stadium)," Downing said. "Deep inside, I feel it's probably time. I feel good about what happened."

Rather than play the entire game, Downing decided to make one farewell plate appearance. So he was listed as the second hitter in Texas' starting lineup, at second base, so Kevin Reimer could be the designated hitter, a role usually reserved for Downing.

Regardless of what happened in the top of the first, Jeff Frye would go in to play second in the bottom of the inning.

It couldn't have been scripted better. Downing ripped a fastball from Bert Blyleven into left field for his 2,099th and final hit and departed to an ovation.

"I just wanted to hit the ball hard," Downing said. "I wanted one last feeling of a line drive. I just didn't want to hit a dribbler someplace."

The cheering actually began long before the hit. As Downing approached the plate, the Rangers flowed to the top step of their dugout and stood in a neat row, applauding.

Catching on, the Angels did likewise in their dugout, then both teams were joined by the crowd of 21,986.

"The way the team stood, it made it all worthwhile," Downing said. "I'm not a great player."

But his work ethic and competitiveness has always been appreciated.

Lady Steers lose first league game

ANDREWS — The Big Spring Lady Steers fell from the unbeaten ranks in district play as they dropped a 15-7, 15-2 decision to Andrews Saturday.

The loss puts Big Spring in a second place tie with Monahans, a half-game behind Pecos. The Lady Steers play Monahans Tuesday. Lady Steers coach Lois Ann McKenzie said Andrews played a strong game. "Andrews played way over their heads," said McKenzie. "I realize that going into district play Andrews had a good record, but from the reaction of their kids you could tell they don't normally play that way."

"My kids played flat. I think they looked at Andrews' district record and just thought we could beat them. Hopefully we'll have it back together Tuesday."

The Lady Steers, 10-10 for the season, will host Monahans Tuesday at Steer Gym. Freshmen action begins at 5 p.m., followed by junior varsity and varsity play.

Jim Dent won $118,800 for his second-place finish at 134 and was followed by Gibby Gilbert at 135 and Don January at 136.

European women edge Americans

EDINBURGH, Scotland (AP) — Europe's best women golfers, decided underdogs, captured the Solheim Cup by winning seven of 10 singles matches on the final day over a United States team.

Led by 1987 U.S. Open champion Laura Davies, who won every match she played in the three-day tournament, the European team posted an 11½-6½ victory on the rain-soaked Dalmahoy East course, a dramatic turnaround from two years ago, when the Americans won 11½-4½.

Davies started the rout with a 4 and 2 victory over Brandie Burton, and Helen Alfrédsson of Sweden and Trish Johnson of England also won.

Huskies on top of list

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

Some Miami fans were upset that the Hurricanes didn't regain the No. 1 ranking after beating Florida State. It didn't disturb Dennis Erickson, though.

"If we don't beat Penn State, it doesn't make any difference anyway," the Hurricanes' coach said.

Despite a dramatic 19-16 victory over Florida State, second-ranked Miami gained little ground on No. 1 Washington in this week's Associated Press college football poll. However, the Hurricanes could overtake the Huskies with an impressive win Saturday at No. 7 Penn State.

"It's hard for me to think anybody's better (than Miami)," Florida State coach Bobby Bowden said. "But they'll have their work cut out for them next week. Playing Florida State and Penn State back to back is like us playing Miami and Florida back to back."

Washington, which replaced Miami as the top team a week ago, received 42 first-place votes and 1,528 points after beating Southern Cal 17-10. Miami got 16 first-place votes and 1,497 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters.

The Huskies (4-0) lost two first-place votes from the previous week, while the Hurricanes (4-0) gained four.

Michigan (3-0-1) moved up a notch to No. 3 after whipping Iowa 52-28, and Tennessee (5-0) climbed three spots to No. 4 with a 20-0 victory over LSU. Michigan received one first-place vote and Tennessee got two.

Texas A&M (5-0) remained No. 5 after edging Texas Tech 19-17. Alabama (5-0), which received one first-place vote, jumped three places to No. 6 after routing South Carolina 48-7.

Penn State (5-0) rose one spot to No. 7 after beating Rutgers 38-24, and Florida State (4-1) dropped to No. 8 after losing to Miami for the seventh time in eight years.

Idle Colorado (4-0) moved up one place to No. 9, and Virginia (5-0) jumped four spots to No. 10 after downing Wake Forest 31-17.

Stanford (4-1) is 11th, followed by Georgia (4-1), Notre Dame (3-1-1), Nebraska (3-1), Syracuse (3-1), Oklahoma (3-1), Georgia Tech (3-1), Mississippi State (3-1), UCLA (3-1) and Southern Cal (1-1-1).

Boston College (4-0-1) and Ohio State (3-1) are tied for 21st, just ahead of Florida (1-2) and California (3-1). Clemson (2-2) and North Carolina State (4-2) are tied for 25th.

Of the millions of suffering from mental illness, about one-fifth receive appropriate help, but socially-perceived illness, said Sha clinical director of County Mental Health. The removal of the target of a nation heighten the awareness associated with mental illness. Mental Illness Week is established through a joint effort by both houses of the legislature and signed into law by Governor Mark White, Naboris said. Saturday, the first to be, is the week of Mental Illness Awareness. In any given year, nearly 36 million U.S. citizens, the age of 18, suffer from mental illness, according to the National Alliance for Mental Health. "We want the public to know that those in pain don't have to live with their pain, and that there is help out there," said Sha. According to a 1991 report, the indirect costs of mental illness, such as lost productivity, are estimated at $50 billion annually.

Ending stigma aim of Mental Illness Awareness Week

By GARY SHANKS
Staff Writer

Of the millions of Americans suffering from mental illness, only about one-fifth will seek appropriate help, because of the socially-perceived stigma of the illness, said Shannon Nabors, clinical director of the Howard County Mental Health Center.

The removal of this stigma is the target of a national drive to heighten the awareness of the problems associated with mental illness. Mental Illness Awareness Week is established annually through a joint resolution passed by both houses of the U.S. Congress and signed into law by the president, Nabors said. Sunday through Saturday, the first full week in October, is the week designated as Mental Illness Awareness Week.

In any given six-month period, nearly 36 million U.S. citizens over the age of 18, and 12 million children suffer from a diagnosable mental illness, according to the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill.

"We want the public to know that those in pain don't need to be along with their pain, and that there is no shame in seeking help," Nabors said.

According to a 1988 estimate, the indirect costs of untreated mental illness, such as lost employment, reduced productivity, accidents and social welfare programs greatly increase the total annual cost of mental and substance abuse disorders to $273 billion.

About 1.5 million people will suffer from manic depression (bipolar illness) in their lifetime. While 80 percent of these people can be helped with medication, only a fraction of those seek help, according to the study.

In any one year, 2 million Americans suffer from schizophrenic disorders and only 60 percent receive treatment.

Suicide is the eighth leading cause of death in the U.S., according to the study. Every day, more than 18 children kill themselves, but the highest suicide rate is among the elderly. More than 6,000 older Americans commit suicide annually.

In the U.S. homeless population, 33 percent have persistent and severe mental illness, while another 35 percent suffer from chronic alcoholism, according to the report.

Each year at this time, psychiatrists and other mental health specialists try to get the community to discuss and better understand mental illness, Nabors said. "Fear, ignorance and misunderstanding keep mental illness (hidden). Inappropriate shame keeps us silent, but the real shame is that these illnesses are almost always treatable."

Local mental health center hub of care

By GARY SHANKS
Staff Writer

Officials at the Big Spring State Hospital and the Howard County Mental Health Center are seeking to educate the public about the insidious and ubiquitous nature of mental illness.

Because of the social stigma attached to mental illness, many people who can be successfully treated do not seek help, and try to hide the condition, said Shannon Nabors, center director for the mental health center.

A person displaying one or more of the following warning signs should be evaluated by a psychiatrist or other physician as soon as possible:

- Marked personality change.
- Inability to cope with problems and daily activities.

- Strange or grandiose ideas.
- Excessive anxieties.
- Prolonged depression and apathy.

- Marked changes in eating or sleeping patterns.
- Thinking or talking about suicide.

- Extreme highs and lows.
- Abuse of alcohol or drugs.
- Excessive anger, hostility or violent behavior.

The Howard County Mental Health Center serves as the hub for outpatient mental health care for Howard, Martin, Borden and Glasscock counties, and provides administrative services for the much larger outreach system.

Dedicated in May, the center is located at 315 Runnels in a renovated building donated by the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company.

The top floor of the building houses administration offices for the Big Spring State Hospital's 15 satellite centers, which service a 23 county area across West Texas,

Because of the social stigma attached to mental illness, many people who can be successfully treated do not seek help, and try to hide the condition.

Shannon Nabors
center director

Nabors said the downtown center has removed some of the stigma in people's minds, which kept some of those in need of help from coming to the hospital grounds.

The community services center was originally staffed by one psychologist, a social worker and two clerks, Nabors said. This office was located on the grounds of BSSH in its inception in 1963.

Since that time the community services division has grown into a network of 15 centers, of which the Howard County Mental Health Center is the largest. This network of centers has a catchment area of about 25,000 square miles and employs about 200 people, Nabors said.

said Robert Von Rosenberg, BSSH director.

Annually, about 450 individuals and family members are served through the Mental Health Center on the first floor, said Shannon Nabors, center director.

The satellite system serves the needs of more than 3,000 people in an area equivalent to about 1/3 of the state, Von Rosenberg said.

"Since 1990, we've had a 30-percent increase in the number of individuals served," Nabors said of the program. Thus far, it appears that the new downtown center will increase this percentage, at least locally, she said. "It's been a really productive move for us."

Abortion protest drew people nationwide

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

A nationwide protest against abortion drew thousands of participants who joined hands, sang and waved signs, and in some cases disrupted traffic and argued with counter-pickers backing abortion rights.

The demonstrations Sunday, in which participants held hands to form long lines, were organized by the group Life Chain of Yuba City, Calif. Its founder, Royce Dunn, said more than 850,000 people participated nationwide.

"It's a visible way to show that you respect life. It's taking action," Noreen Chamberland, 43, of Stayton, Ore., said as she stood in line in Salem, Ore., next to her mother, Ann Nikodem.

In Oregon, about 3,200 people from 70 churches turned out in Salem, while smaller groups demonstrated in Woodburn, Lebanon and Dallas, Ore.

Demonstrators in West Virginia formed a "life chain" along a 20-mile stretch of U.S. Route 60, said the Rev. David DeCook of the Open Bible Church in St. Albans, near Charleston.

"Standing along a road, not blocking traffic or breaking laws, appealed to a lot of church people," DeCook said.

In Tulsa, Okla., thousands of anti-abortion protesters waved

More than 260 local abortion protesters joined in a demonstration known as Life Chain Sunday afternoon. The protesters, bearing signs, lined F.M. 700 east of the Goliad Street intersection. The local protesters were part of a 800,000 participant demonstration nationwide.

signs and disrupted traffic, but were countered by 25 University of Tulsa students, who also carried signs and hired an airplane to fly overhead with a "Support Legal Abortion" banner.

Life Chain participants carried such signs as "Jesus Heals and Forgives," "Abortion Kills Children" and "Adoption the Loving Option." Others along the 6 1/2-mile route displayed graphic representations of aborted fetuses.

Many passers-by honked horns, waved and gave thumbs-up in support. But others yelled obscenities. "We could not let the pro-choice majority not be seen out here," said Eric Stafford, director of the University of Tulsa Students for Choice.

In Boston, Cardinal Bernard Law, the city's Roman Catholic archbishop, joined anti-abortion protesters in a march through the city in an apparently separate fundraising demonstration sponsored by Massachusetts Citizens for Life. Coordinator Leslie Bond Diggins said she did not immediately know how much this year's march raised. Last year's raised $80,000 for anti-abortion groups that help unwed mothers, Diggins said. "Standing out in public waving signs proves nothing," said Judy Maggio Fisher, a spokesperson for Rockford's Coalition for Reproductive Choice.

Briefs

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A Congress born on the eve of war and battered by scandal is closing with a bang: votes on major tax and energy bills and a veto fight with President Bush over re-regulating cable TV rates.

Congressional leaders hoped to send lawmakers home for the year by early Tuesday so they could devote a month to their re-election campaigns. Knowing today would be long and contentious, House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., warned, "I would suggest that members bring their sleeping bags."

When the final gavel sounds, it will end a 102nd Congress that commenced in 1991 as the nation was preparing for war with Iraq. In ensuing months, scandals at the House bank and post office drove lawmakers' reputations downward and contributed to near-record retirements.

In an unusual Sunday session the House cleared several lesser bills, including approval, 253-143, of a $2.3 billion measure financing Congress' own operations for the new fiscal year, just below last year's budget. The compromise bill, which now moves to the Senate, ignores a Senate-approved measure hacking 15 percent out of congressional coffers over the next three years.

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Bill Clinton and Al Gore targeted Florida today as the Democrats opened the presidential campaign's final month showing surprising resilience in this and other traditional Republican strongholds across the South.

Clinton and running mate Gore teamed up late Sunday in Daytona Beach and were setting out today on one of their trademark bus tours, this one across northern Florida just two days after President Bush visited a state he must win to hold the White House.

The visits alone are evidence of this year's dramatically changed political map: Bush had such a huge lead in Florida four years ago that neither he nor Democrat Michael Dukakis visited after Labor Day.

With 21 electoral votes, Florida is a major prize. Clinton campaign polls show the state is a tossup, and Clinton and Gore were hoping to gain an edge by targeting areas in north and central Florida culturally akin to their native South.

dumped jet fuel in a lake before crashing, airline officials said.

The Dutch Civil Aviation Authority said it was too early to know what tore off the two engines.

The pilot and the three other people aboard the plane were killed but it was not immediately clear if they were among the 12 bodies found.

At least 19 people were hospitalized.

Officials of both countries said the crash did not appear to be the result of sabotage, but El Al spokesman Nachman Klieman said it was too soon to rule out any possible causes for the engine failures.

Two Israeli inquiry teams left for the Netherlands today to help investigate the crash, the Netherlands' worst air disaster and the first crash in El Al's 44-year history.

Investigation teams were also expected from Boeing and from Pratt and Whitney, which built its engines.

"The sound of the crash and explosion could be heard up to 12 miles away."

"It looked like a huge fireball. I saw it shooting right over my head," said Martin Feland, who lives on the top floor of a neighboring building.

"It crashed right into the building. It exploded into one huge sea of fire," said another neighbor, Mark van der Linden.

Working under helicopter floodlights, rescue workers began to dig for survivors Sunday night but made little progress because the stricken buildings were on the verge of collapse.

Even after the fire was brought under control, chemical blazes continued rising to the surface from under the rubble heap.

The pilot reported breakdowns in engines No. 3 and 4 on the right wing after takeoff. Rafi Harlev, El Al's executive director, told a Jerusalem news conference. The 747 has four engines.

Harlev said the plane, built in 1979, was "in very good condition" and had had no recent problems.

Klieman said the plane was carrying 114 tons of goods ranging from electronics to textiles, some of it originating in Amsterdam, some in New York.

More Americans can't afford lawyers

BOSTON — Not poor enough to receive free legal aid but too poor to afford a lawyer, a growing number of Americans are forced to fend for themselves in everything from divorce cases to landlord disputes.

"This means we can't have a system of equal justice and access to justice by everyone equally," said Phyllis Goldfarb, a professor at Boston College Law School.

"There is a correlation between money and justice, and that's troubling."

Under the Constitution, everyone is entitled to a lawyer in criminal cases.

The annual budget for the boys club is $58,000 with $34,000 of this being provided through United Way donations, he said.

A partially completed railroad was donated to the club by a local minister, Andries said. Computer games available at the club tend to stress learning, he said.

Activities at the club include computer games, half-court indoor basketball and full-court basketball outside, weight lifting, trampoline exercises, woodshop, billiards, ping-pong, bumper pool, and even H.O. scale model railroad building.

Harley rider Carson debunks negative image

By CONNIE SWINNEY
Staff Writer

Cindy Carson was born to ride a "hog." This mother of three honor students gets out on the road every day to take a cruise on her Harley-Davidson motorcycle.

Carson's "hog" weighs 800 pounds — almost 700 more than the 5-foot-3-inch Carson. Its charcoal-gray tank proudly displays the H-D emblem along with the United States eagle under the seat indicating an American-made vehicle.

"I've seen my friends lose everything like their home and their family because of drugs. Bikers do know how to have fun without drugs or alcohol. It's a natural high — riding a Harley."

States eagle under the seat indicating an American-made vehicle.

"I get looks because people see this small woman on this huge motorcycle," she said. "Riding a Harley gives me a sense of freedom — like America."

Carson, a native of Sweetwater who has lived in Big Spring since she was 10, breaks all the stereotypes of so-called "biker women."

She spends most of her time working two jobs, a video store clerk and housecleaner, and caring for her school-aged children, Rusty, 10, Rinnie, 9, and Randi Jo, 6.

"I wanted a permanent home for my kids. I own my home, my car and my motorcycle, and I've worked hard to get those things," she said. "I tell my kids to be honest and believe in God — he never gives you more than you can handle."

She lives by her belief in her philanthropic efforts. During the local Christmas parade, she rides with other bikers to collect toys for disadvantaged children.

Riding motorcycles has been a way of life for Carson, who rode dirt bikes at age 10 with her family.

"My kids have been riding since they were a few months old," she said. Her former in-laws were also Harley riders with whom she had the opportunity to ride across the state.

Her main reason for travelling has been to attend motorcycle festivals featuring reunions, dances, barbecues and motorcycle shows.

"You meet these people from all over the world," she said. "These people have a sense of independence — a rebelliousness. It's a way of life."

Carson said although the rebellion attracts her, the image along with it is not one she welcomes.

"They probably think I'm wild, but I'm not," she said. "The only time I go out is to hear the local group, Wild Texas, play some rock 'n roll."

"My children are my top priority." Carson said she is troubled by the community in which her children are growing and learning.

"Since the (Webb Air Force) Base closed the economy has never been the same. You see drugs everywhere," she said. "Everybody has this image that all bikers do drugs, but it's not true. I don't associate with any."

"In my younger years, I tried drugs. I've seen my friends lose everything like their home and their family because of drugs," she said. "Bikers do know how to have fun without drugs or alcohol. It's a natural high — riding a Harley."

Cindy Carson doesn't use drugs, she works for worthy causes and she puts her family first. She says riding her motorcycle gives her a feeling of freedom.

Symphony offers Fort Worth trip

HERALD STAFF REPORT

Big Spring music lovers will have an opportunity to travel to Fort Worth to see award-winning composer-pianist-humorist Marvin Hamlisch appear in person in a "pops" concert with the Fort Worth Symphony Orchestra.

A chartered bus is being sponsored by the Big Spring Symphony Association in cooperation with Big Spring Skipper Travel for the event the weekend of Jan. 30-31.

Deadline for reservations is Nov. 1. The price of $120 per person includes bus fare, a ticket to the concert and overnight accommodations at the renovated, historic Radisson Hotel in Fort Worth.

Hamlisch is one of the most honored of present-day American composers, according to Big Spring Symphony officials. His work includes the musical score for "A Chorus Line," the longest-running Broadway show in history.

His movie scores include the theme music from "Three Men and a Cradle," "The Way We Were," and "Ice Castles" among others.

Mail reservations to Suzanne Haney, 2801 Crestline Rd., Big Spring, Texas 79720, or phone 263-7147 for more information. A check for $60 (one-half the cost of the event) must accompany reservations.

Proceeds from the trip will benefit the Big Spring Symphony.

To cuss or not Researcher explores why people use swear words

By BARBARA DIOBILDA
Scripps Howard News Service

Rhett Butler's famous exit line in the movie "Gone With the Wind," "Frankly, my dear, I don't give a damn," cost the producer a $5,000 fine. It was 1939 and the film's censors were not amused.

By the time "Scarface," starring Al Pacino, hit the silver screen 44 years later, censorship had obviously taken a holiday — the film contained 299 swear words.

Timothy Jay counted them. Jay, a Ph.D. who teaches psychology at North Adams State College in North Adams, Mass., recently published "Cursing in America" (John Benjamins Publishing Company, 1992), a 300-page book that outlines swear words and sheds light on who uses them and why.

The book is the result of Jay's doctoral thesis from Miami University in Ohio, so don't expect to snicker or chortle at its contents — his findings are reported in a strictly academic manner.

"We were really surprised at how the book took off with the general public," says Jay. "My aim was that it be used as a tool for sociologists, psychologists and others who study communication as a way of learning about a person."

"Now, though, I understand that the book is showing up on people's coffee tables."

That could be because people believe there's a bit of titillation behind the words. Where there's smoke, they figure, there must be fire.

And they may not be totally off base — Jay contends that uttering curse words is culture's way of dealing with taboo subjects.

Like sex. "Americans are preoccupied by and fearful of sex at the same time," he says. "Since we're a fairly conservative country, and not often able to talk about sex openly, we make jokes about it."

"The user of bad language often sees the words as power," says psychologist Domenic Zacheo. "Bad language is not often used in mixed company, so when it is you can be sure your listeners are going to sit up and take notice ..."

"You'll find much more swearing going on in locker rooms, sporting events and auto racing tracks than you would in church, or in museums or auditoriums," says Zacheo.

"Cussing is definitely situation appropriate. People usually know when to use it and when not to. It's like telling off-color jokes. There are some who wouldn't hesitate to tell your friends, but that you'd never tell your mother."

Allergies, Texas tales: New library books are a mixed bag

New books at the Howard County Library this week include the following:

The Allergy Self-Help Book — By Sharon Faillon. Self help can do more for allergies than for any other form of disease. This comprehensive guide helps to track down the specific food or environmental substance that's the cause of your discomfort or your child's — and tells you what to do about it.

Included are tips about how to stay symptom-free on diets that avoid food allergens; how to escape pollen, dust and mold; how to recognize allergies to cleaning products and how to find hypoallergenic cosmetics. Most exciting of all, however, is the encyclopedic survey of allergic reactions that can mimic any of over 50 different health complaints, including arthritis, depression, digestive problems, fatigue, headaches and many more.

The Golden Tulip By Rosalind Laker. From a richly hued palette of history, romance and political intrigue, comes a novel of 17th-century Holland. At a time when Amsterdam is the jewel of Europe, young and beautiful Francesca Visser has only one dream — to become a Master Painter.

Francesca discovers that his ominous schemes threaten not only her but the foundation of her beloved Netherlands as well.

The Kind of Light That Shines On Texas — Stories By Regiland McKnight. In voices that are hip and raunchy, bemused and sardonic, award-winning writer Regiland McKnight conjures a chorus of narratives that reveal the African-American middle class to be a crucible of human experience.

A military "brat," in the title story, stalked by a menacing bull in a small Texas town, discovers a greater threat within himself. A writer encounters the devouring power of his own creation in "The Homunculus." Winner of the O.

Siddonie, the sorceress queen who had long ago sworn to bring all of the Netherland under her control. To succeed, she must reclaim the child who had vanished from her.

Megatrends For Women by Patricia Aburdene. Drawing on a wealth of data on social change, the author feels that the woman's movement has reached "critical mass" — the point at which a trend becomes a megatrend.

Chapter by chapter, the book documents the sweeping changes women need to be aware of to be empowered now and in the future.

Murder In The Red Room By Elliott Roosevelt. Amidst all the historic events that occur in 1937, in America, a murder poses this country's greatest threat and presents Eleanor Roosevelt with what may be her most challenging case.

The First Lady's efforts to investigate are sparked by a strange note delivered to her during a White House dinner for the judiciary, which says "Do not let any guests go into the Red Room."

Naturally, the intrepid Eleanor cannot let the mysterious command go unnoticed thus the story begins.

Humans By Donald E. Westlake. The world stinks! God is fed up and ready to take action! One of His very best angels has been given the "contract" and is sent to round up a disparate crew of humans beings from around the world and to gently manipulate them into a rendezvous to set the wheels rolling to bring about the end of the world as we know it!

But there is someone who thinks the human race has done well with their planet and our angel finds himself challenged by a very holy Demon.

A Reading World

NIE promoting desire to read

By CONNIE SWINNEY
Staff Writer

The Newspaper in Education (NIE) program joins the battle against illiteracy by promoting the desire in youths to read while providing innovative teaching tools for educators, said Patricia Barr, Big Spring Herald NIE coordinator.

"If there's a desire to read, it promotes their reading skills," she said. "They do it more often."

The program supports activities such as making free newspapers available to classrooms, paid for by sponsors in the business community; printing yearly curriculum guides for educators with tips on fighting illiteracy and publishing a weekly Mini Page in the Herald with activities targeting youth readers.

NIE kicks off its second year adding four more schools in the Big Spring Independent School District as well as Stanton, Forsan, Grady, Greenwood and Glasscock schools bringing the total circulation to 4,800 papers a week.

"These teachers are using the newspapers as a textbook. It provides current and historical information," she said. "Teachers can also solicit opinions from students. A teaching element is to teach the difference between fact and opinion."

And, teachers are seeing results, she said. "One teacher told me using the newspapers helps in using a 'whole language' approach to teaching."

Whole language is a teaching method which attempts to integrate the language arts into all subject areas with the intent of improving communication skills. "Last year, a teacher at Bauer Magnet brought out information about a movie that generated much interest among her students," she said. "(Using newspapers) opens their horizons to the world outside — to their city, state and national governments."

"We hope (students) develop a daily reading habit, so they can discern the news and read it for themselves," he said. "It's an innovative way for educators to teach."

Other activities in which NIE has been responsible included:

- Creating a one-time school newspaper with Coahoma Elementary School's third-graders allowing them to be involved in every aspect of newspaper production.
- Publishing student essays and stories in the weekly Mini Page section, printed each Thursday, in the local newspaper.
- Printing advertisements designed by student, sold and published in the newspaper.
- Making available newspaper employees to visit classrooms and discuss every aspect of newspaper publication.
- Providing information sessions for teachers and students demonstrating tips for promoting consistent reading habits.
- Providing a monthly calendar to educators with innovative ideas in using the newspaper as a teaching tool.

"We hope we will give the students awareness of different career options," Barr said. "Teachers can accomplish a full range of literacy by using the newspaper as an outlet for developing reading and writing skills."

Future plans for NIE involves expanding the number of schools

Learn to Read program helps cure illiteracy

HERALD STAFF REPORT

Howard County Learn to Read program is helping decrease the illiteracy rate in the community.

The program coordinated by the Howard County Library has been in existence since 1983. It offers county residents the opportunity to increase their reading level in order to obtain their graduation equivalency degree.

The functional illiteracy rate in the county is estimated at 44 percent. Those falling in this category read at or slightly below the third grade level.

Those participating in the program are assigned a tutor. Each tutor and student meet twice a week for about an hour. The program curriculum consists of four books.

"The student paces himself," said Rose Von Hassell, program director. "We do not have any timetable for when the student should complete the program."

Currently, the program has 22 students, including a class at the Federal Correctional Institution of Big Spring. The program has 12 tutors at this time. The number of students and tutors fluctuates, Von Hassell said.

"Sometimes we are crying for students and sometimes we are crying for teachers," she said.

The 22 participants in the most the program has had enrolled at one time. Most of the students are between the age of 30-40 years old. The class has about the same number of white students as well as Hispanic students, but there are no black students.

After the students complete the program, they are referred to Howard College to take their GED.

The program is funded by Howard County, West Texas Library Systems and private donations.

A workshop for those interested in tutoring will take place in October.

For more information about the program contact Von Hassell at 264-2260.

Reading group promotes global literacy

MARIE CLAY (right), president of the International Reading Association, lives in New Zealand but spends a lot of time in London and the United States. Here, she visits a school in Columbus, Ohio.

Reading can be habit-forming. And that's the way it should be, as far as the International Reading Association is concerned.

In nearly 100 countries from the United States to Bangladesh, the IRA and its 93,000 members are trying to promote literacy and get people to make reading a beloved personal habit.

While most of the professional organization's members are in North America, the Newark, Delaware-based IRA has affiliates in such far-flung spots as China, the Middle East and Africa. New groups are forming in Estonia and Brunei.

"While recognizing the issues in technologically advanced countries we have to work in quite different ways in developing countries," said IRA President Marie Clay of New Zealand in a speech to the United Kingdom's Newspaper Society earlier this year. A pioneer in the literacy movement, Clay is IRA's first president from outside North America.

In the United States, more than 1,200 local IRA councils form the core of the non-profit organization. And every March, IRA joins the American Newspaper Publishers Association in co-sponsoring Newspapers in Education Week.

While IRA promotes effective reading instruction, "it is also equally and vitally concerned with fostering the reading habit." Regardless of how well an individual reads, there is no value in mastering this skill if it is not used. The newspaper can be the ideal means by which skills and content learned in the classroom can easily and economically be transferred to a student's everyday life," according to Newspapers in Education, an American organization promoting the use of newspapers in classrooms.

IRA (not to be confused with the other IRAs, the Irish Republican Army and Individual Retirement Accounts) publishes a variety of professional publications for its members, including what it says is the only reading journal edited, produced and distributed in Latin America, "Lectura Y Vida."

Among IRA's goals: enhancing the professional development of literacy educators; promoting universal literacy and access to primary education; establishing partnerships with other groups interested in literacy; fostering professional opportunities for teachers.

For membership information, contact IRA at 1-800-628-8508, extension 249, or write to: 800 Barksdale Rd., P.O. Box 8139, Newark, Del. 19714-8139.

Interest in children led to literacy career

Marie Clay says she was not an avid reader as a child, although her parents did read to her.

Today, the president of the International Reading Association is a renowned figure in the international literacy movement, involved with several reading organizations.

The native of Wellington, New Zealand, took a long and wide road to life as a literacy advocate. It was Clay's years of work in child development — her accomplishments include a book on quadruplets — that eventually led her to the literacy movement.

"I'm a trained classroom teacher. I became an educational psychologist. I taught developmental psychology in the university, and children having difficulty with learning became a focus of mine," said Clay in a telephone interview from Auckland.

In the latter part of her career, Clay, 67, became interested in literacy problems, although she said that's not her sole focus. "My primary area is still child development. It always has been," she said.

Clay retired in January 1991 from her job as an education professor at "My election as the first president from outside of North America reflects the intent of all members to address literacy issues internationally," Clay said.

the University of Auckland in New Zealand.

She said she spends about half her time in London, where she's working on a reading program for low-achieving children as a visiting professor at the University of London, and the other half in the United States on IRA business.

As the 1992-93 IRA president, Clay said her goals are those of the non-profit organization — global literacy, professional development, literacy advocacy, partnerships with other groups such as Newspapers in Education, and forming a research database.

And as the group's first non-North American president, Clay said, "I am very interested in the international side of our efforts."

IRA wants to encourage its North American members to make connections with local IRA councils and educators in other countries. For instance, Clay said, the group wants North Americans to sponsor members from Third World countries, where "it might take a year's salary to pay for an IRA subscription."

IRA also would like to see its members in North America host visiting members from overseas, she said.

She told the Newspaper Society in London earlier this year that IRA's representation is unbalanced, with most of its members in North America. "We are working very hard on developments in other countries, and on changing the older policies of the association to allow for a more realistic service to international members," she said. "My election as the first president from outside of North America reflects the intent of all members to address literacy issues internationally," she said.

The president-elect of IRA, Doris Roettger, recently led a group of educators to a reading conference in Moscow, where a new reading association (not connected to IRA) has been formed, according to Clay.

"There is just a wealth of interest from the Eastern European countries," she said.

Clay attended IRA's biannual World Congress in Maui this year, along with 1,200 educators from around the world.

The majority of IRA members are teachers, but the organization also includes parents, librarians, researchers, academics and others interested in pre-school through adult literacy, Clay said.

"The local IRA council becomes a focus for these various professionals (and parents) to come together on literacy matters," she said.

Interview conducted by Dinah Wisenberg Brin of the Altoona (Pa.) Mirror.

Clay divides her time between a London university post and her IRA duties.

Parents: Do not threaten kids with cops

DEAR ABBY: I sympathize with the gentleman in the Atlanta airport waiting to board his flight when a young mother pointed her finger at him and said to her small child, "If you don't sit down and be quiet, that man is going to grab you and throw you in the river!" Of course the child became terrified and began to scream, and everyone wondered what he had done to the child. Here's my story:

I am a uniformed police officer with the Indianapolis Police Department, and you would be amazed at the number of people who threaten their children with what a policeman will do to them if they don't behave.

On one occasion I was having lunch at a snack bar when a young mother pointed her finger at me and loudly told her child, "If you don't eat your vegetables, I'm going to have that policeman arrest you and take you to jail!"

Abby, I am sick and tired of that line. Just the other day, I was at a firehouse when the firemen were showing off a fire truck to a small boy. I asked the boy's mother if perhaps her son would like to see a police car. I was rewarded with a tongue-lashing about how intimidated children were of the police. She ended her tirade with,

"I don't want my son to have anything to do with the police!" I walked away with a lump in my throat. -- OFFICER BILL WEBER, INDIANAPOLIS

DEAR OFFICER BILL: Perhaps the young mother had a bad experience with a police officer. However, most people know that the majority of police officers are "good guys." They daily risk life and limb protecting law-abiding citizens.

when he blows, it's a real honker! He honks that way whether we are at a restaurant or in someone's home. I find this very unappetizing.

I mentioned this to his wife once, and she said she would speak to him about it. Well, he is still honking, so I doubt that she mentioned it to him. Otherwise, they are a charming couple and we enjoy their company.

Is there some way I can get my point across to this otherwise considerate gentleman? While his "honking" is rather unsettling, I wouldn't want it to spoil our friendship. -- HONKER'S FRIEND

DEAR FRIEND: Since you have been friends with this couple for many years, wait until the honker honks again, then tell him good-humoredly, but in all sincerity, that his honking at the table is somewhat unappetizing, so would he kindly put a mute on it.

FOR TUESDAY, OCT. 6, 1992

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You need to work with the unexpected, as an associate balks at the last minute. Be ready to rush in and put the pieces back together. Realize where the problems are and empower yourself with this knowledge. Tonight: Accept a late invitation.

Taurus (April 20-May 20): The pressure may be on you and those around you. Sudden changes are part of the scenario, and you can expect associates to contest an already-made decision. Let go of controls and focus on your responsibilities. Tonight: Work as late as you need to.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your fatigue might play a large role in what occurs today. You might not be up to handling others' issues and problems. Use extreme caution with finances and a partnership. Tonight: Pick up the phone and make inquiries that help resolve a problem.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Partners talk at a change that may be inevitable. Stop demanding that others respond in a certain way. Others let off steam and tell it as it is. Check out what looks like a brilliant idea. Tonight: Prepare to be surprised.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Problems are likely to besiege you at work. Perhaps you are taking too much stress with you to the job. Take a walk at lunchtime. Ask for support from a loved one or family member. You get what you need once you are willing to ask. Tonight: Ask and you shall receive.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Another's actions weigh on you heavily, and discussions could lead to further uproar. Concentrate on work. You receive a stunning confession that puts a smile on your face. Tonight: Take care of yourself.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be willing to be more creative. You might be pushed to cough up extra cash to settle a domestic matter. The unexpected occurs. Be willing to grab a special opportunity that drops in your lap most unexpectedly. Tonight: Dance your stress away.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You have tremendous input into a situation. Be willing to pay a compliment to one you deal with on a daily basis. Refuse to be pushed too far. Make a point gently to a family member. You know when enough is enough. Tonight: Chill out.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You are prone to wild mood swings today. Your intuition could have you working overtime. Test out an idea on a trusted friend, before you launch into action. Be careful about sabotaging a good deal. Make an important phone call at lunch time. Tonight: Watch spending.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not go overboard with spending. Sudden, unexpected news from a friend may delight you. Be ready to get to work on doing something you really don't want to do. Reveal your multifaceted personality. Tonight: Treat another to dinner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You have the wherewithal to handle a work-related challenge. Where your career is concerned, be ready to go with your gut. Count on your magnetism and charisma to carry you through the day's ups and downs. Tonight: Whatever makes you happiest.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Another's input might stun you. Work with the unexpected and move into a more dynamic realm of activity and energy. Be willing to express your higher self and get tuned in to what can be. Tonight: Vanish.
