Two hurt in 'Rollercoaster' mishap

By GARY SHANKS

Another joy ride along Chaparral Road, also known as "Rollercoaster Hills," in the Silver Heels Addition has left one Big Spring woman hospitalized since early Sunday morning.

A passenger in the car, Amy Garcia, 18, is in stable condition at Scenic Mountain Medical Center. Another passenger, Miguel Perez, 22, of Big Spring, was treated and released from the facility.

A series of steep dips and inclines, the road has drawn young drivers to experience the "rollercoaster" effect for generations, according to Sheriff A.N. The driver of the vehicle, Michael Anthony Hi-

Troopers measured 665 feet of pre-impact skid marks from Hilario's vehicle.

Although patrolled by sheriff's deputies and DPS officers, the area offers a number steep grades, from which young drivers can derive thrills, Standard said. But these thrills often claim lives, he said. "It's extremely dangerous and has been proven fatal," Standard said.

The department continues to patrol the area and write citations to those speeding along the hills. Hilario was cited for failure to control speed in the accident.

requests rate hike By GARY SHANKS Staff Writer

Cap Rock

Cap Rock Electric Cooperative has unveiled its plan to request a five percent rate hike following three meetings of a rate advisory committee compiled of selected Cap Rock customers.

The committee discussed fiscal information with Cap Rock staff, bankers and rate consultants in formulating its rate request plan.

The request, not yet filed with the Texas Public Utilities Commission, comes on the heels of a 15.3 percent rate hike request by Texas Utilities.

Because of its status as a customer-owned cooperative, Cap Rock can request consideration for quick approval of its request. The TU request faces an extensive process of fact-finding and hearings before a final decision in 1994, according to a PUC official in Austin

Five percent is the largest increase that can be considered under this "streamlined" approval process, a PUC official said.

A second rate hike could be requested as early as 1995, committee member Rocky King of Midkiff

In the co-op's latest newsletter, committee member Perry McMillan of Big Spring was quoted as saying, "When your biggest competitor (TU) asks for over three times what you request, while it costs you much more to serve your customers because they are rural — I think Cap Rock has less than a tenth as many meters (customers) per mile of line than TU has — I think that says a lot about the operation of Cap Rock.

In its most recent rate hike (1990), Cap Rock received a 5-percent increase without the bureaucratic process TU is undergoing. This saved the com-Please see CO-OP, Page 6A

Prison jobs presentation

By PATRICK DRISCOLL

Staff Writer

Big Spring missed getting a state prison last year but local residents may get some of the 325 full-time jobs to be available at the 1,000-bed prison awarded to Mitchell County.

A presentation on jobs to be filled and career opportunities will be given by the Texas Department of Criminal Justice today at 7 p.m. in the Colorado City High School auditorium.

As many people as possible will be hired from Mitchell County and surrounding areas, said Nancy Sullivan, director of the Mitchell County Board of Economic Development. The bulk are guard positions, paying $19,000 to $24,000 and requiring at least a high school education or GED. Half will be filled by those with experience. They want to try to get as much of that half from the local area as possible," Sullivan said. "They're going to talk to people about possibly applying now and working somewhere else for now and then transferring in."

Similar hiring patterns were used in recent years with the two 1,000-bed prisons built in Snyder and Construction on the Mitchell County prison is expected to begin next month and be completed by lune 1994. Construction bids were opened last week and the Board of Criminal Justice is expected to award the bid at a Friday meeting in Austin.

Working for the prison system is a good stable ob, Sullivan said, adding that most top officials she has talked to began their careers as guards.

"For a young person it's got a good career ladder," she said

Information presented tonight will include qualifications and how and where to apply. Besides guard jobs, there will be a wide range of noncorrectional jobs as well.

The auditorium is at 1500 Lone Wolf Blvd. Exit 217 from Interstate 20, take Texas 208 going toward San Angelo and exit on Lone Wolf Blvd.

Textbook committee submitting choices to board

By CONNIE SWINNEY Staff Writer

Big Spring textbook committee officials selected readers using new guidelines, chose books to be used into the next century and sifted through different textbooks to find only minor errors.

The new 1993-94 textbooks for courses like English, chemistry and computer science are scheduled to be approved by Big Spring Independent School District trustees Thursday.

The texts, adopted for the next six to eight years, approved by textbook committee members on Feb. 18, were almost error free, according to local educators, administrators and reading specialists who comprise the committee.

There were no controversial textbooks (regarding errors) and the process of selection went well," said Superintendent Bill McQueary. "The committee spent a lot of time reviewing the textbooks and made the best choices."

The most notable errors were discovered in 11thand 12th-grade U.S. government texts

"The errors were things like wrong page numbers and a mislabeled chapter, but not grammatical or historical errors," said Kathie Bowermon, the textbook committee member evaluating government texts. "The publishers were much more careful this year because of the chance of being fined if mistakes are found in the final printing.

Overall, the textbook was 99 percent accurate, comparing the four texts from which she had to

Other committee members reported few or no errors in their selections.

The three-year process was especially important this year since the committee adopted the reading series (basal) textbooks, impacting students in the first through eighth grades for the next six years. The approval process for new reading texts began in May 1990, when Commissioner of Education Lionel "Skip" Meno drafted State Board of Educa-

The proclamation mandated literature-based reading guidelines, allowing educators to incorporate the new approach with current teaching techniques like phonics.

Each year, school districts across the state undergo the process of textbook selection for a variety of subjects, along with accompanying workbooks, computer programs and video presentations.

After reviewing each publishing company's textbooks at a series of public hearings, State Board of Education members evaluate the proposed texthooks for each grade and approve five textbooks.

WACO, Texas - Lawyers batcult members say they want to help end the standoff, but federal agents are using new tactics and say they have no immediate plans for outsiders to negotiate.

As the stalemate entered its 17th day today, negotiators said they were trying to veer away from "continuous, biblical" conversations with cult leader David Koresh and other Branch Davidian members.

'Frankly, we're not here to be converted. We're here to try and get this thing resolved peacefully," Bl special agent Richard Swensen said Monday.

Federal agents have had the Mount Carmel compound sur rounded since a shootout between law officers and cult members Feb. 28 that left four federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agents dead and 16 wounded. At least two cult members died.

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina - New talks between the U.N. commander for Bosnia and Serb generals may finally open the way for aid to desperate residents and refugees in Srebrenica, a relief official said

Reports from the eastern Bosnian town, overflowing with an estimated 50,000 people, said thousands were living on the streets.

But U.N. officials there said Serb shelling seemed to have subsided since the U.N. commander for Bosnia, Gen. Philippe Morillon of France, set up operations there in a show of support.

Morillon has said he will not leave until the town receives aid, a cease-fire is established and civilians are able to evacuate.

Morillon met with Bosnian Serb commanders near Srebrenica on Monday to negotiate those demands.

U.N. spokesman Maj. Pepe Gallegos in Sarajevo said this morning that Morillon would meet with the Serb generals again, but he What's a child's life worth?

The Texas Senate has unanimously passed a bill making the murder of a child under the age of 6 a capital offense. Now, the House of Representatives gets into the act.

There have been several versions of this bill come into the Legislator before which have never passed because many legislator feared women who had abortions would be brought up on charges. This bill takes care of that exigency and Gov. Ann Richards has promised to sign it into law if it

But, Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Author, makes a good point. Texans need to do more to take care of their children instead of raising the punishment level for hurting or killing

Department of Public Safety records show 100 children under the age of 5 were killed between January 1991 and June 1992. That is a lot of children who have lost their lives. Parker's problem with the bill is it does not provide more money for child protective services.

The question the Texas Legislator needs to ask itself is what is the price of a child's life after it has been born?

Rubbing the wrong way

Well, just call me Eddie Chiles.

That's right, I'm mad. There's no foam around the mouth and the folks at Big Spring State Hospital aren't preparing a room just yet. But give me time.

OK, let's just say I'm peeved ... really peeved.

What's worse, is that by the time this is read — newspaper deadlines being what they are much of what's rubbed me wrong in the last couple of days may be remedied.

Don't bet on it. I probably wouldn't be shooting my mouth off in print if it weren't for the combination of a couple of things that really have rubbed me wrong.

The first, in and of itself, probably wouldn't have set me off. So Lanny Lambert and our city fathers will just have to accept that I've reached the point of frustration overload.

Let me just say that at one time, Lambert's announcement that city crews would handle replacement of water lines in the Capehart Addition seemed like a wonderful idea. Especially when one considered all that money we as taxpayers would be Howsomeever, that was before a load of once white clothes emerged from my washer with the hue of burnt orange — that's right the same color as University of Texas Longhorns' home football jerseys.

Now, I'm dyed-in-the-wool Longhorn fan, but I have to draw the line somewhere before you get to my skivvies.

The water at my place isn't quite so murky any more, I think. I'll know for sure once there's enough water pressure for my shower to work.

Believe me, Mr. Lambert, my co-workers here at the Herald are counting the minutes.

One day without water pressure is one thing. A week is quite another, and we're headed dead into a second week of this

Now, as I said, normally water quality and pressure alone wouldn't be enough to get my dander up, but then along came that gaggle of lawyers demanding access to the Branch Davidians holed up at Mount Carmel.

Before you get the idea that this is going to turn into a lawyer-bashing piece, let me say that I have several friends that are lawyers. Some of them, I'd even trust with the women and children, but I'd never let them pet my dog. Seriously, lawyers have and important place in our society. That's particularly true when one considers that nobody's ever devised a better system of justice

than that we enjoy in this

So, at their very worst, lawyers are a necessary evil.

That's why there are so many lawyer bashers around. They've made sure that we know sharks don't attack attorneys in the surf because they refuse to dine on members of the same species.

They've also explained that rattlesnakes don't bite lawyers out of professional courtesy.

But it would appear that the ambulance-chasing worst of the breed has seen fit to raise its ugly head down in Waco, demanding that the FBI and ATF agents encircling the Branch Davidian compound allow them inside to inform the religious fringe of its constitutional rights

To hear these so-called legal eagles tell it, there's some dark conspiracy involving the FBI, ATF and U.S. attorney's office.

They question why so much of the operation has been conducted in secrecy. Why, they ask, were the indictments and warrants sealed?

Heck, I though you had to go to college to become a lawyer! It would seem to me that the reception the law enforcers m t at the Davidians' front door someone tipped them about the raid about 15 minutes before ATF agents arrived — is a pretty good indication that more, not less secrecy was needed. If memory serves me correctly, my dad always taught me that folks who killed police officers in such situations deserved some rights. Not the least of them was to quit breathing our air as soon as possible.

But Kirk Lyons, an attorney from Houston who's been retained by David Koresh's mother, wants federal authorities to allow him and his brethren to join independent negotiators in having contact with the Branch Davidians.

The guy's got to be kidding himself. We're talking about 100 or so folks who've pledged themselves, apparently body and soul, to some kook who believes he's the reincarnated Christ.

All I can think of when Lyons is brought to mind is the old question that was once asked in a Dallas Morning News column.

It went something like this: "If two lawyers were drowning and you could only save one, which would you do? Go to lunch, or take a nap?' Nuff said

Airdrop Express says U.S. cares

There's just no pleasing some people. Your heart can be in the right place but they still complain.

An example is President Clinton's decision to airdrop food and medical supplies for trapped Bosnian Muslims who are being ethnically cleansed by the Serbs.

Can anyone deny that it's a nice thing to do? Of course not. Even those who don't number any Bosnian Muslims among their best friends think we should do it.

But what do the critics say? That it is almost a complete waste of time, an empty gesture.

They say that most of the stuff we drop for the Bosnian Muslims is landing where the Serbs can get it instead. Well, even if that's true, would they prefer that it just lie there until the squirrels eat it? As the old saying goes: 'Waste not, want not.

And they complain that even when the Bosnian Muslims manage to find some of the packages, Serbian snipers shoot them. While that seems harsh, it's all part of the ethnic cleansing process. Is it our fault that there's such a shortage of regular dry cleaning establishments

Finally, the critics moan, even if every relief bundle landed smack in a Bosnian Muslim's parlor, there still wouldn't be enough supplies to help more than a fraction of the unfortunates. That may be true, but you can say the same thing about the

All the criticism is probably true, but the gripers are missing the whole point. It is the sentiment that counts.

What we're doing, in effect, is sending a greeting card, as considerate people do when someone has fallen upon hard times.

The airdrops are our way of saying: "Get well quick." Well, maybe that isn't the message. It could be, "Hope you're feeling better." No, that isn't it either. Not with the enthusiasm for ethnic cleanliness that the Serbs have been showing.

I've got it. What we're saying to the Bosnian Muslims is: "We're thinking of you." Yes, that's it, and a fine sentiment it and protocol was not. Only nine months into his term, he launched what would become known as Gramm-Rudman.

Party disloyalty was behind him. But disregard for seniority

The scheme of deficit targets and automatic spending cuts never came close to its goal of balancing the budget. But Gramm-Rudman was renewed in 1987 and 1990 and is credited by many experts with keeping the federal deficit from spiraling further out of control.

Now, with Clinton's budget. Gramm is elbowing his way back to the front.

Relentlessly, he digs up data and uses news conferences. speeches and television appearances to keep himself and his antitax conservative message before the public.

He blends the self-deprecating with the inflammatory

His personal finances also have

Despite the critics, his home popularity seems secure. Texas reelected Gramm in 1990 with 60 percent of the vote, a state record.

What Gramm has failed to do is establish himself as a kingmaker for other Republicans.

In 1985, Gramm turned a special election for an East Texas House seat into a referendum on whether the rural South had shifted to the GOP. He lost, then lost again when his hand-picked candidate lost a special election to replace Speaker Jim Wright.

As campaign chairman for Senate Republicans, Gramm's fundraising has been prodigious. But last year, with more Democratic seats at risk than Republicans'. Critics note his fight against the Democrats kept their 57-43

Police discounted the accusation, but "that was just a turning point for him," said Diane Derzis, director of the Summit Medical Center in Birmingham.

A week later, on the anniversary of the U.S. Supreme Court's landmark Roe vs. Wade abortion ruling, Gunn drove his compact car into the Beacon Women's Center in Montgomery as usual, recalled Kohls.

He abruptly stopped in mid-lot, pulled out a megaphone and told the protesters he was going to sing for them. "Happy Birthday Roe vs. Wade," he sang. Then, he pulled out a boombox and began blaring what he introduced as "my new theme song" — rocker Tom Petty's "I Won't Back Down."

'I won't back down; No, I won't back down. You can stand me up at the gates of hell, but I won't back down ... gonna stand my ground," Gunn sang.

Then, smiling at the nearhysterical reaction from some protesters, he parked his car and walked into the clinic to begin performing abortions.

Gunn later repeated his act outside The Ladies Center, another Pensacola clinic, and "did a little jig," said Debbie Myers, a National Organization for Women activist.

Students work, learn about health care fields

By CONNIE SWINNEY Staff Writer

Local high school students are finding out about the world of work as they assist health care providers at the VA Medical

Big Spring High School brought the VA into the Co-op education circle two years ago, graduating the first five participants in May two nursing asssistants and one assistant each in physical therapy, pharmacy and dental.

"We got the initial funding from the standpoint that we're having difficulty in recruiting into some of the health care professions," said Ken Sincleair, the VA chief of personnel. "We may be able to pick (the students) up in positions for other programs (upon high school graduation) like the Accelerated Nursing program; they work (for the VA) while they're going to nursing school."

In the high school's Industrial Cooperative Training (ICT) program, high school students attend school in the mornings and report to work in the afternoons.

Students are placed in positions across the city, with regular progress reports from employers which are evaluated by educators.

VA officials saw a way to fit into the program and improve their chances of permanently recruiting quality health care providers.

Cheater cheater

Why faking the grade is not as good as making it

By SUSAN FRITH

Some students make the grade through hard work - others rely on wandering eyes, recycled term papers, crib notes and furtive hand or foot signals.

According to several studies, there's plenty of the latter in to day's high schools and colleges:

--In an Emporia, Kan., State University psychology professor's survey of 6,000 anonymous college students across the country, more than 40 percent surveyed at each school admitted to cheating on an exam at least once during college. More than 70 percent cheated during high school.

A follow-up survey concluded that half of all college cheaters and 80 percent of all high school cheaters are "repeat offenders.

By contrast, research has turned up polls from the 1940s in which only 20 percent of surveyed students admitted cheating. -- A survey done by the psychology department at Lafayette College in Easton, Pa., asked 240 students whether they had engaged in any form of cheating in school Only 2 percent of those surveyed answered "no."

-- In a Rutgers University survey of 31 selective schools, 67 percent of college students admitted cheating.

Terry Curran, associate dean of student life at Lehigh University in Bethlehem, Pa.,, said he thinks the survey results are disturbingly accurate

"I have noticed myself on this college campus — with the attitudes about academic dishonesty, the rumors and particularly the cases coming before me - that academic dishonesty has been on the increase," he said.

"Unfortunately there's an attimatter how you get there, you get each year, he said.

Stephen Davis, an Emporia State University psychology professor who conducted nationwide studies on student cheating, said he's heard of every method of academic chicanery in the book. "If only we could just harness these into creative activities," the professor from the Emporia, Kan., school lamented.

One of the most memorable cheating anecdotes provided by

-- According to one Lafayette College sophomore, a Yale University professor wrote a paper for his son who was having trouble in a high school English class. When the teacher returned the paper with a grade of C, the insulted professor stormed into the school to complain.

According to Gregory Anrig, Educational Testing Service president, teachers can use some of these measures to reduce cheating:

-- Make sure tests are stored

-- Avoid using the same test -- Assign seats, and separate test takers from each other. -- Use several versions of a test and/or scramble the order of test questions. Collect all test copies before students leave the test site.

The shadowing program is an eighth-grade perk open only to students carrying A or B grades in life-skills class. Each student has to agree to send his sponsor a thank-you note, fill out a report and give an oral presentation on the experience.

Students or any other civilians riding along on patrol with Council Bluffs police are not likely to get into any serious situations. But if something were to happen, they would be taken out of the cruiser, Police Chief Mark E. Moline said.

Pedersen said only about onethird of Kirn's 391 eighth-grade students get to participate in the shadowing program.

While Stockinger thinks riding with police at night is fun, Patrolman Terry LeMaster, 31, has a different view. LeMaster was the officer Stockinger shadowed during the day.

Volunteer work can be valuable

Whether it's cleaning up beaches, feeding the homeless, or planting trees in a national forest, working as a volunteer or intern can provide valuable experience for high school students.

Such activities allow teens to explore career options and improve work skills; establish contacts and get acquainted with professionals; learn how to work as part of a team; and acquire letters of recommendation, according to Careers & Colleges magazine.

Community service is considered such a worthwhile activity that a number of public and private high schools across the country have implemented it as a requirement for graduation.

"For high school students who want to donate their time and energy to a cause, there are scores of opportunities available," said June Rogoznica, the magazine's editor-in-chief.

Rogoznica said nonprofit organizations and environmental groups need teens' help and are leadership skills, on-the-job experience and much more.

The magazine cites statistics break their legs from Independent Sector, a national coalition dedicated to philanthropy and volunteerism. These statistics indicate that 61 percent of teens, ages 12 to 17, performed volunteer work in 1991, up from 58 percent in 1989.

Day at work designed to boost girls' self esteem

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Ms. Foundation for Women has a simple idea to help instill confidence in girls between the ages of 9 and 15. On April 28, mothers, fathers, aunts, uncles and friends are encouraged to take girls to work and show them what goes on.

"Girls will be going to factories, hospitals, restaurants and offices," predicts Marlo Thomas, the actress and co-chairwoman of the project with soprano Jessye Norman; Joyce Dinkins, wife of New York City mayor David Dinkins; and author Gloria Steinem.

Taiwan is a small island very far away, in Asia. The Mini Page visited there to find out about Taiwan's kids and schools.

Education is very important to children and their families. Parents are willing to make many sacrifices to help their children. Scholars are greatly respected by everyone.

If children want to honor their parents, they will do well in school.

When the students get to the ninth grade, they will take a test that will decide if they are to go on to high school and which one they will attend. Competition to be accepted into the best schools is very strong.

Getting off to a good start in the early grades matters a great deal. Many students go to tutors after school.
