FSA matching hay surpluses with shortages

Howard County Farm Service Agency is making an effort to match farmers and ranchers suffering from hay shortages with producers having hay surpluses.

"The reason this has come up is because of the drought," said Rick Liles, FSZ county executive director. "A lot of the hay crop dried up or burned up."

Farmers and ranchers are encouraged to sign up and register their hay situation at the FSA office. FSA will use its nationwide computer network to share the information. Producers in need of hay will be provided with lists of the closest producers with hay to spare, and vice versa, allowing them to contact each other and make arrangements.

Grant allows police to have more manpower on road for holiday

By T.E. JENKINS
Staff Writer

Big Spring Police Department (BSPD) will begin the final wave of the Safe and Sober Traffic Enforcement grant this weekend, increasing overall manpower in an attempt to cut down on the number of traffic fatalities associated with Labor Day weekend.

"This is the third year that we have been involved with the grant," said BSPD Lt. Terry Chamness. "We started out covering just two holidays each year, and now we are participating in three."

According to Chamness, the grant will provide off-duty officers who participate in the program with overtime pay for their efforts.

"The grant pays for the hours these guys put in," said Chamness. "There is no cost to the city for the added manpower."

Chamness said the increase in manpower will be maintained from today through next Thursday.

"These officers will be looking specifically for occupant safety and speeding violations," said Chamness. "We have had a real good response from the citizens on the seat belt laws, and we are shooting for 85 percent compliance before the end of 1999."

According to the lieutenant, safety belt compliance was an estimated 72 percent when they began the program three years ago.

He attributes the rise to the current rate of 88 percent in participation to continued education of the public on the necessity of the seat belts.

Although the city has accomplished a great deal with the increase of compliance, Chamness said the department is still short of its overall goal.

"We would like to see a 95 percent compliance rate by the year 2000," said Chamness.

"We are already ahead of where we should be at this time, and we're real happy about that."

Chamness encourages motorists to be careful on the roadways this holiday, as the traffic is expected to increase tremendously.

"Always remember to buckle up," said Chamness. "That is always the safest way to travel. Slow down and drive safe. When you speed, you really don't save much time, and just a few miles per hour may be the difference between being able to stop and finding yourself in an accident."

"Also, if you are going to be drinking, have a designated driver."

"Don't take chances when it comes to getting behind the wheel."

Retirement doesn't slow Richardson

When speaking about a "regular fixture" at the Howard County Fair, anyone can name Don Richardson, who was agricultural extension agent for this county for 18 years.

He was at the fair because he was in charge of the livestock shows. When he retired last year, one might have thought that he would make a point of going on vacation during fair week. On the contrary, Richardson, still a member of the Board of Directors, is right there at the fairgrounds just as before. He does, however, have a different position and a new outlook about the fair.

Richardson, still a member of the Board of Directors, is right there at the fairgrounds just as before. He does, however, have a different position and a new outlook about the fair.

Don Richardson uses his chuckwagon to cater for weddings and parties.

sometimes western singers and musicians, cowboy poets, and even "saloon gal" servers. He also has a portable barbecue pit, which he recently put to good use providing hamburgers for the Friends of the Fair supper. Don is not planning to feed the children, but he is bringing his chuckwagon to the fair Thursday and Friday to show the hundreds of school kids during their morning visit.

A county agent of 32 years can hardly divorce himself completely from the Texas Agriculture Service, and Richardson has not. He stays quite busy January through March traveling around Texas serving as State Coordinator of the 4-H and FFA Steer Validation Program. His experience with the program and knowledge of people and procedures make him an asset doing a job that a working county agent would not have time to perform.

With just those two activities the man would be busy enough, but he also is raising horses and he tries to get to see his children fairly regularly, one in Amarillo, the other in California.

"It seems like I'm busier now than when I was working. One thing about it though, nowadays I can say, 'No'."

He noted that he sees the county fair in a different perspective these days and finds a different kind of pleasure in being there.

"There's a lot less stress to being at the fair for me; I can just be one of the board members now."

Cong. Stenholm fields tough questions from students during high school tour

By MARSHA STURDIVANT
Staff Writer

U.S. Congressman Charlie Stenholm of the 17th Congressional District fielded tough questions from Big Spring High School seniors Thursday during his tour of the building facilities.

In Kathie Bowermon's government class, student Esthela Ornelas asked the Congressman about the scandal involving President Bill Clinton, comparing Clinton and his admitted actions with a hypothetical situation involving a student and teacher.

"What the president has admitted to is repugnant and repulsive in every sense of the word to me," Stenholm said.

"But as a prospective juror, if there is to be an impeachment and that is on the table, these are very serious allegations to be proven or disproven, and I want the facts," Stenholm said.

He said independent council Ken Starr's $60 million report needs to be concluded so that all the facts will be known.

Stenholm said he awaits the outcome of the report before making any judgment.

"In this country we are innocent until proven guilty. Do all of you feel the same as I do? Is there any one who feels differently?" he asked the students.

Ornelas, and her classmates, said they agreed that the president cannot be found guilty without the proper legal process.

"The president has admitted this, but he has not apologized," Ornelas said.

Stenholm also talked with students in the new CISCO program at the high school.

In this certification program, students may take a two-year prescribed course of study, in cooperation with CISCO, a computer training company. High school graduates who pass the certification test have an earning potential as a computer network technician in excess of $30,000.

Junior Ashley Rains, who has two personal Web site addresses, said she is enthused about the new CISCO program.

"I have always thought schools should have their curriculum in lap top computers instead of in books. Now I'm in a class that does that," Rains said.

Stenholm toured the computer laboratories in the high school and also met with reading teachers in the Title I classrooms.

He talked about the need for students to learn English and asked about the number of students enrolled in the remedial reading courses.

Stenholm also asked for the teachers' opinions on English education.

"I believe parental involvement is the key to learning English," said Mary Loveless, a reading teacher.

Stenholm toured the school library and talked with students about the new Internet access program. His aide Bill Thinner gave students the Congressman's Web site address in Washington D.C.

Loren Spencer, high school technology director, conducted the tour.

Rural housing

Re-designation should assist families hoping to build homes in Big Spring, officials contend

By T.E. JENKINS
Staff Writer

State and local officials say the re-designation of Big Spring as a rural area will open new doors for low and moderate income families who dream of owning their own homes.

U.S. Cong-

C h a r l e s

Stenholm and

Steve Carriker, Director of the

U.S. Department of Agriculture

Rural Development office, held an information session

Thursday at the Big Spring

Chamber of Commerce to discuss legislation that was recently passed in Congress that will re-designate Big Spring as a rural area.

"This re-designation will open

Big Spring up to programs that aren't available to non-rural communities," said Carriker. "These programs include funds for community facilities, business and industrial programs, and infrastructure support."

According to Carriker, the re-designation will have a positive impact on the often forgotten middle-class citizens of West Texas.

"People often complain that the government is willing to help low income families, and offers tax breaks to high income residents, and virtually nothing for the middle-class man," said Carriker. "That is not the case with these rural programs, where the middle-class will not only benefit, but will be faced with better opportunities in the future."

"There are a lot of families that can make the home payments on their current income, but have trouble coming up with that initial lump sum to

Firefighters want to boot disease with citizens' help

By MARSHA STURDIVANT

Normally, firefighters wear their flame retardant rubber boots. But Saturday they will be carried in the hands of the firemen as the Fill the Boot Campaign for Muscular Dystrophy begins.

"We're the only fire department in the Permian Basin who does the Fill the Boot Campaign," said Mitch Gill, firefighter association secretary.

Gill said about 40 firemen will join together to promote donations for Jerry's Kids. The Jerry Lewis Telethon for the Muscular Dystrophy Association begins Sunday.

"The folks in Big Spring are just great. Last year we reached our goal, and this year we've set our goal at $2,500," Gill said.

The firemen will be positioned at the Gregg Street and FM 700 intersection, near the VA Medical Center, he said. When the traffic lights turn red, firemen will ask for donations from motorists stopped at the intersection, he said.

YOUR VIEWS

TO THE EDITOR:
Sunday, Aug. 16, I attended a meeting in Snyder call F.A.C.T. (Fast Action for the Children of Texas) along with a handful of custodial parents having problems with the Texas Attorney General's Office Child Support Division.

There are many custodial parents having problems with the Attorney General's office.

Most of the complaints are the same, the phone system, unanswered letters, no results on collections.

One parent attending reported that her ex-husband was in arrears of some $75,000, her case dating back to 1986.

Christie Robbins, the founder of F.A.C.T. explained to the group that now is the time for custodial parents having difficulty with the Attorney General's office to "come out of the closet."

She asks the group "how long do you think it would be before she would be charged with child neglect and thrown in jail, if she did not provide for her children?"

Christie addressed many questions during this question and answer session of the first meeting here in Snyder.

The next meeting will be held Sunday, Sept. 13, 3 p.m. at the Snyder Savings and Loan.

This group is open to anyone. If you or someone you know, have questions concerning this, you may contact me at (915) 573-1473 after 6 p.m., anytime on weekends or F.A.C.T.'s hotline (915) 677-5521.

Come on Texas residents, stand up and be heard! You can't fix something that nobody knows about.

I'm tired of paying taxes for services that are not being rendered, aren't you?

OTHER VIEWS

Law enforcement officers have a kind of unofficial understanding.

It is that there is no such thing as a "routine traffic stop." The vast majority of them conclude that way, but all too often something goes terribly wrong.

Take the case of Tucumcari, N.M., Police Cpl. Darrick Shaw, who THOUGHT he was stopping someone this past Wednesday for a speeding violation. Instead, he ended up in a 100-plus-mph chase over hither and yon before arresting a suspect in connection with robbery and kidnapping at a Tucumcari motel.

Police booked the suspect into jail, thankfully after an incident that resulted in no injury.

"Sure, we call them a routine stop," said Amarillo Police Chief Jerry Neal, "but as a police officer, you shouldn't ever consider such a stop routine while it is in progress." Police officers who do often "get into a routine," said Neal, adding that such a routine might lull officers into complacency. The consequences of failing to be as alert as possible can be deadly, as so many widowed officers' spouses can attest.

We note this incident as a way of honoring the officers who put their lives on the line every day — even during those "routine traffic stops."

Need for new crash-test dummies

The Transportation Department wants new crash-test dummies that will represent small women. There's a blonde joke in there somewhere, but I'll pass it by.

The reason for the interest in smaller dummies stems from the airbag controversy, of course. Most of the individuals killed by airbags in crashes have been children and smaller women. It just makes sense that test dummies should represent those most at risk in a car wreck.

It's about time. According to reports, it was the Air Force which first came up with test dummies in the late 1940s. The Associated Press says General Motors invented the "modern" test dummy. I put "modern" in quotes because it was the early 1970s when GM put the new dummies inside a vehicle and sent them rolling toward a wall. That's been 20 to 25 years ago, and trust me, nothing that old is modern any more.

GM's dummies were innovative though, in the sense that they had sensors attached to them, to calculate exactly what happens to the human dummy, or body, during a crash. Before this, the Air Force generally ran something into a wall, and if the dummy went through the windshield and slid down the bricks, pretty much decided that wasn't very safe.

The Transportation Department's decision to use new test dummies is a good one, though rather obvious and a bit late. After all, you'd have hoped that since women and children make up a sizeable portion of the population, someone would have considered test dummies for them a while back.

Suddenly, transportation officials call it "critical" that new dummies represent women and children.

I say it is about time. But I say also that the Transportation Department is still missing a large segment of the population.

It's obvious that test dummies are needed to represent other drivers.

Certainly there is an urgent need for one-legged test dummies. These would represent a growing number of the population, who through some misfortune I am unaware of, have lost their left leg, the one which would normally press down the brake pedal at an intersection.

Another test dummy is needed for those blind-as-a-bat drivers, who have trouble seeing anyone else on the road.

Test dummies are also needed for those who insist on chatting on the cell phone, putting on makeup or reading a road map at 75 miles an hour.

Where does a tube of lipstick end up, for instance, if a woman running late for work has a collision with a college student cramming for a math test? We need to know this.

And with new, sophisticated test dummies, we would know.

According to the Transportation Department, these test dummies included a computerized instrumentation package, which measures forces, loads and impacts. The dummies have multi-segmented necks, like those drivers who spend more time looking sideways than forward. The sensors also measure "chest compression, spinal injury and seat belt effectiveness."

Unfortunately, all the computers and technology can't prevent accidents, only tell us what might happen once the wreck actually begins.

It can't measure the number one cause of accidents — stupidity.

But even if it could, it might not matter. Because the last I heard, there still was no cure for that.

They made up the best two-man trio ever

It was 98 degrees in the shade, and there was precious little of that. Most people at the weekend charity softball tournament were too busy swatting and sliding and spitting to listen to some excellent free music, but Darien Bryant, 16, and Marcus Waller, 18, didn't care.

Rheta Grimsley Johnson

They sang their hearts out. They sang until sweat glistened on their red and green jerseys. They were the best two-man trio you ever heard.

The third "tree" of the trio called Prominence was missing; Derek Caver had taken ill.

But Darien and Marcus went on with the show, and for those of us who had never heard the act, nothing seemed missing at all. The young crooners sang a cappella, everything from "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot" to rhythm and blues. The sound of pop flies was the only accompaniment.

I chased the youngsters down after they finished the set, mostly just to shake their hands. It's hard enough to perform in ideal conditions. They were short an audience and a singer, not to mention dealing with sweltering heat.

The kids were modest, even apologetic. I'd not heard them at their best, they insisted. I should catch them with a full deck.

"The best we ever did was the NAACP convention in Atlanta," Marcus said. "We didn't have a part on the program or anything, but we set up on a street corner and sang. We drew a real crowd.

The boys are students at nearby Opelika High School. They got together last homecoming for an impromptu performance and decided it sounded all right, that it might, with practice, sound good. They've been rehearsing ever since.

Marcus' mother, Rhonda, is the group's manager.

"Kids our age get into drugs or some kind of trouble, Marcus offered. "We sing, we practice all the time, and it keeps us out of trouble. Well, maybe not all trouble.

Maybe they just said what they thought some old lady at a softball tournament would want to hear, but I bought it. Singing can be a positive distraction, that's for sure.

It can soothe a fussy baby or catapult a country boy from Tupelo to international fame. You don't have to have Schwarzenegger muscles or Bill Gates' bank account to try it, either.

I sang shaky alto in a high school trio effort. It was one of my proudest affiliations. Judy Land sang second soprano, Cindy Wells sang the high part. Margaret Adams played the piano for us. We performed at church and school events. Our grandest night was at a country club meeting of some civic club or other.

I'll never forget it, staring out at the indifferent faces of strangers, beginning our song over the clatter of silverware — and the guffaws of red-faced men. We did "What a Wonderful World," waved a vocal wand over the room and made it quiet. Nobody asked for an encore, but we were happy.

It was an incredible feeling to finish and rush, limp with relief, into darkness and the parking lot.

We never did a paying gig. Never came close. None of us had much interest in practicing the summer before we all packed off to college. There was too much infighting and too little desire. Our trio without a name had no future.

Darien and Marcus both got a check for their ballpark efforts. They were ecstatic about that, you could tell. They tucked them into the pockets beneath their Christmas-colored jerseys and headed toward the parking lot.

Lionel Richie grew up just down the road from this ballpark, in little Tuskegee.

I imagine he sang for events like this, for audiences too busy to listen and in weather you'd just as soon stay out of. I imagine he tucked a small check into his jeans and sang to himself on the long ride home.

Street rods

Car enthusiasts plan activities this weekend

By DEBBIE L. JENSEN
Features Editor

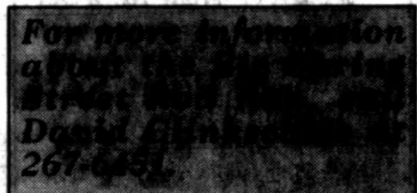

Local street rod clubs are getting together this weekend for a show, games and family fun.

David Clinkscales, of Big Spring Rod and Custom, said the club and Early Cars of Big Spring have combined their efforts. Beginning Saturday at 10 a.m. outside Dora Roberts Community Center, they will sponsor activities for car enthusiasts of all ages.

"We're going to have games for kids and adults," he said. "They can win trophies and prizes."

Between 5-7 p.m., there will be a "poker run," in which car owners drive to seven locations throughout Big Spring, where they get a playing card at each. The run ends at Sonic, where the best hand wins.

Then a street dance is planned to continue until midnight, on the street between that specialized in cars made before 1949. When the two clubs combined their efforts, Clinkscales said it broadened the definition of "street rod" to include later models. But still, the cars are all custom, with modified motors, transmissions, wheels and paint jobs.

Clinkscales said owners often spend thousands of dollars on their cars — topping out at $100,000 in some cases.

"They do it because they have a love of cars," he said. "And they don't make cars like they used to. This is a way they can personalize the vehicle and make it their own."

Entering a car in the weekend event costs $20 in advance, or $25 at the community center Saturday morning. Spectators are welcome to come out and see the cars at the community center, and are sure to see them around town during the weekend.

Mother Theresa was reflection of perfect grace

It is Monday again as I sit with keyboard in lap trying to put together my very first column for the "Big Spring Herald" and guess what— I HAVE HAD IT!

I have decided not to listen or watch another minute, second, or millisecond of the one-year melodrama called "Princess Diana!"

During the past 72 hours, just about every major television network, with the exception of the Weather Channel, has besieged the viewing public with a seemingly limitless number of programs examining the first anniversary of Princess Di's tragic death.

News correspondent after correspondent has examined from every possible angle what happened, how it happened, and who it happened to!

Mother Theresa's life can be recalled in terms of the hungry masses fed, children housed and loved, and in selfless acts and words of a woman with a vision greater than any media-defined personality.

What really is saddening about this death anniversary isn't who is remembered, but who has been forgotten. Remember, it is also the anniversary of the death of a beautiful lady who went by the name of Mother Teresa.

Unlike the beloved Princess Diana, Mother Theresa's death involved no questionable deeds or scandal. Her life cannot be recounted in terms of appearances, or personal disappointments, or even in two beautiful young sons.

Mother Theresa's life can be recalled in terms of the hungry masses fed, children housed and loved, and in selfless acts and words of a woman with a vision greater than any media-defined personality.

The irony of the death of two of God's most precious creations reflects one who was running from her world and another one was running "to" her God's world.

There is a sadness in remembering what Princess Diana was running away from in the tragedy of her death. She was running from an imperfect world that defines perfection in the eyes of man.

In remembering the life of Mother Theresa, one must recognize that her life was spent giving to the same world through perfect grace as defined by Jesus Christ.

Only Princess Diana and God know whose perfect grace she pursued in her last minutes. The thousands of lives changed for eternity reflect exactly whose perfect grace Mother Theresa had always pursued.

113-year-old preacher devotes young life to God

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Minister Charles Robinson paces. He raises a hand and warns sinners to turn from Satan. Damnation awaits men who abandon their families, women who disobey their husbands and ministers who fail to live what they preach, he says.

"How many children are suffering right now for your moments of lust and passion?" he shouts. "What are you going to do about your remaining time on this earth?"

If the sermon is typical for an evangelical church, the preacher is not.

Charles Robinson is only 13. While other boys think about sports, video games and girls, Charles contemplates hell. He quotes Scripture from memory and has led services at tent revivals and on street corners, traveling to seven states to deliver his message.

"I felt the Holy Spirit through him," says Inez Keys of Chattanooga, a 43-year-old recovering alcoholic and cocaine addict who asked Robinson to pray for her. "God done told him what to say."

The young minister's training in the Bible began when he was about 6, according to Sandra Freeman, who became his legal guardian after his mother left Charles with her to pursue plans to join the Navy. He was 2 months old then.

"I would challenge him," says Ms. Freeman, a born-again Christian. "I said, 'Well, if you could learn that Scripture, you can learn the whole chapter.'"

At 8, Charles offered his first public prayer at a Thanksgiving service. Soon after, while he was speaking about the Bible to men at a Chattanooga homeless shelter, Bishop A.D. Ringer of the New Anointing Pure Holiness Church of God heard him.

"I think it's just a gift from God," says Ringer, who calls Robinson a "miracle child."

"He knows more about the Bible than I do. He knows more

Donations to Bible class still coming in

Although the contributions to the High School Bible Class have slowed somewhat, another $635.00 has been received since the last report two weeks ago.

This brings the total amount received to $9,345.10 or 62 percent of the goal of $15,000.00.

Three classes of Old Testament Bible are being taught at Big Spring High School this semester by Rev. Lee Rushing. If sufficient funding is not received by the Howard County Ministers Fellowship the classes will have to be reduced to two classes the second semester.

Two coaches suspended by UIL

AUSTIN (AP) — The University Interscholastic League executive committee imposed suspensions on two high school coaches Thursday. Carl Wieburg, boys basketball coach at Christoval High School, was suspended for the first five games of next season and put on two years' probation for taking three students to Oklahoma for a summer basketball camp, according to the UIL. Bruce Bush, head football coach at San Marcos High School, was suspended for one game and put on one year of probation.

The league's executive committee found that the San Marcos athletic department violated off-season regulations by publishing a booklet outlining specific workout schedules.
