Nation mourns Reagan

By JEFF WILSON

Associated Press Writer

SANTA MONICA, Calif. Ronald Reagan was remembered with jelly beans, flowers Amrican flags on Sunday at memorials in his hometown and outside the mortuary where the former president's body

"Thank you for changing the world," said a hand-written note among the tokens of remembrance left in Santa Monica for the nation's 40th president, who was 93 when he died Saturday of pneumonia, as a complication of Alzheimer's.

The family's spokeswoman said Nancy Reagan was thankful for thousands of expressions of sympathy over the death of her husband, adn despite her sadness was relieved he was no longer suffering.

"I can tell yu most certainly that while it is an extremely sad time for Mrs. Reagan, there is definitely a sense of relief that he is no longer suffering, and that he has gone to a better place," Joanne Drake told a press conference ouside the mortuary where Reagan's body lay.

"It's been a really hard 10 years for her," Drake said of Nancy Reagan, as Chamness said the frequencies for the police department, as well as the fire department and other municipal entities, won't really be changing, but their "size" will.

"The frequency will really be staying the same. It's our bandwidth that's being changed. It will be cut in half," explained Chamness. "We had a band width of 25 kilohertz and all bandwidths are being cut to 12.5 kilohertz. So the radios that we're using now won't be any good. It's called 'Project 25,' and we're getting ready to spend money on new radio systems.

Every government entity whether it's the police department, fire department or public works — will be turning over to the 12.5 kilohertz system.

"The new system is also digital. That means you'll get perfect reception and transmission until you're out of range, at which time it will simply cut out completely. That's compared to the analog system we have now, which slowly depletes the further you get away from your base station."

The change in bandwidth was to the former president was detailed.

In a piece written for Time magazine before Reagan's death, Nancy Reagan remembered her husband as "a man of strong prinicples and integrity" who felt his greatest accomplishment was finding a safe end to the Cold War.

"I think they broke the mold when they made Ronnie," she wrote in the article that appeared today. "He had absolutely no ego, and he was very comfortable in his own skin; therefore, he didn't feel he ever had to prove anything to anyone.

Former President jimmy Carter said Sunday that the death of Regan, who defeated him in the 1980 presidential election, was "a sad day for our country."

"I probably know as well as anybody what a formidable communicator and campaigner that President Reagan was. It was because of him that I was retired from my last job," Carter said before teaching Sunday school in his hometown of Plains, Ga.

Carter added: "He presented some very concise, very clear messages that appealed to the American people. I think throughout his term in office he was very worthy of the moniker that was put on him as the 'Great Communicator."

Today, the Reagan family is expected to travel in a motorcade with the body to the presidential library in Smi Valley, northwest of Los Angeles. After a private ceremony, the body is to lie in repose for public visitation through Tuesday.

"The mandates came about because we're out of radio frequencies," said Chamness. "We have too many people wanting radio frequencies and not enough to go around. So they took our bandwidth and cut it in half, which allows more people to be on frequencies without overlapping. Going digital is also supposed to help with the bleed over. Right now we have bleed over Abilene and Lubbock on our frequencies at times, and this will stop that."

While the $38,903 afforded the city will help with the transition. Chamness said it's still a far cry from the overall cost.

"At the police department alone, we have 122 pieces of equipment we're

Summer reading program a plus for community

eading is fundamental. While that may seem trite to some, nothing is more true. And it also the reason we wholeheartedly support the Howard County Library summer reading program.

That program began last week with the hope of coloring every child's world with the power of reading.

That's the program's theme this year, "Color Your World...Read."

And Children's Librarian Karen McIntyre plans to have a variety of activities this summer and they're not all just about reading.

Guest speakers will be visiting during the program to bring out the creative side of participants — everything from a symphony conductor to a rodeo clown, and author to Miss Rodeo Texas will make the five-week program eximing as a ADDRESSES

The program is held from 10 a.m. to 11 a.m., Monday through Thursday, in the children's room to promote reading. It is especially for school-age children.

"It they are not reading during the summer, they start losing those skills," McIntyre said. "This is a fun way to reinforce reading."

While registration for the program has now closed, we want to applaud the library staff and volunteers for their vision in putting together such a worthwhile effort.

And we want to remind those who have registered their children or grandchildren for the program to be sure and follow through.

You'll not only be enrich your children's lives today, but for a lifetime. And in so doing, you'll be impacting the future and ultimately enriching all our lives.

How To Contact Us

A call to repudiate or resign

group of students at the University of California at Berkeley's Boalt Hall School of Law circulated a petition last week calling on law professor John Yoo to "repudiate" a 2002 memo he wrote when he worked for the Bush Justice Department or "resign" his academic post. The memo advised that the Geneva Conventions did not apply to al Qaeda and Taliban fighters in Afghanistan. Oddly, the petition writers claimed that their attempt to drive Yoo from academia did not "constitute an attack on academic freedom."

"The choice is up to (Yoo). He is free to do what he wants,' explained petition circulator Michael Anderson, age 35. Besides, he said, the petition concerned what Yoo did as a government official, not what he said in class.

Bunk: The only reason the petition is not an attack on academic freedom is because it didn't work a testament to Boalt Hall's commitment to the free exchange of ideas, I might add. There are no faculty committees considering pressuring Yoo to resign, noted acting dean Robert Berring Jr. Yoo himself has no such plans.

If the students had gotten what they wanted, however, the petition most certainly would send a chill through the halls of academia.

As one professor told me, the students really were looking for "a platform to vent their outrage" against abuses of Iraqi prisoners. That's academ-ese for witch hunt. The students couldn't castigate a U.S. soldier, so they targeted the closest body they could inflict their angry views on.

Citing a story in Newsweek, the petition charged that Yoo effectively opened "the door to acts of outright torture, rape and murder" of Iraqi prisoners. Someone even posted flyers of prisoners being mistreated at Abu Ghraib prison — with Yoo's head superimposed on a U.S. soldier's head.

The law students who signed the petition apparently can't fathom that the Justice Department memo made some reasonable legal arguments. To wit: Al Qaeda operatives don't qualify for Geneva Conventions prisoner-of-war status because they don't fight for a nation, there's no clear chain of command in their organization, they don't wear uniforms, and they do not obey the laws of war toward civilians. As one Boalt Hall alumnus with expertise in this area said of the Yoo memo, "I think it's a legitimate legal argument. I don't agree with his conclusion." The same person also strongly disagreed with Yoo's argument that the Taliban don't fall under the Geneva Conventions. He believed the memo failed to explore the repercussions of determining that the international law is not binding. Too bad such meaty criticism was not found in the petition.

Anderson, who just graduated from Boalt Hall, dismissed any legitimacy in the Justice Department argument, instead charging that Yoo "assisted his client in perpetuating illegal acts" and is guilty of "aiding and abetting."

So if someone writes an opinion you don't like, that person is breaking the law?

'We're not trying to make his opinion-espousing illegal. What he did is illegal," Anderson

Now I see why Anderson says the petition doesn't limit academic thought. After all, if he had his way, Yoo would be free to think what he wants — from a jail cell.

"What do the students want?" Yoo asked. "Do they want to be taught by teachers who spoon-feed them what the students (already) believe?"

"A more responsible petition," a Yoo critic told me, "would be one that said we think that your legal opinion led to what happened at Abu Ghraib. We would like to have a forum." That forum would allow a discussion on the policy and legal arguments concerning detainee status, the critic said.

But the law students preferred the petition-and-anonymous-poster route — which denied Yoo a platform to respond.

Consider the petition's call for Yoo to repudiate what he wrote in 2002. If Yoo were to repudiate the memo, he would have no ethics. Yet only then would Yoo demonstrate the sort of ethics the students considered worthy of a law professor — no ethics, but he would agree with them.

Yoo decided not to attend Boalt Hall's graduation, as more than a quarter of the graduates wore armbands protesting Yoo's "aiding and abetting war crimes." He told me he didn't want to interfere with the commencement celebration.

Democratic Rep. Tom Lantos of San Francisco declined to attend City College of San Francisco's graduation after protesters warned they would picket his presence in light of his vote to go to war in Iraq. A spokesman explained that Lantos didn't want to tread on the festivities.

"To call for the resignation of a professor shows a desire to exclude people from the intellectual community because of what they think," said Yoo. In a small way, it is working.

They are the Veterans of America. They are not all angels; neither are they all culprits. As veterans of a large and great nation, they have had, and continue to have a number of misguided and irresponsible people within their ranks; but the ideals and principals of the majority continue to sustain the upright and inspire the youth of our nation.

Throughout the past weekend, a small portion of the Permian Basin community stepped back from the rituals of barbecues, lakeside pleasures and personal pleasures, giving their time to walk the vast rows of Permian Basin cemeteries, carefully placing flags on the graves of those who had defended the freedom of this nation.

Annie's Mailbox : Advice for those in need

Dear Annie: I'm 20 years old and live at home with my parents and my 17-year-old brother, "Joe." This past year, Joe admitted trying drugs and skipping school. His grades have dropped, and he lies about everything.

Joe is incredibly smart and has a great deal of potential as an athlete. We've always been so proud of him, but lately, his entire attitude has changed. I used to be able to talk to him, but now, he's rude and doesn't want to have anything to do with the rest of the family.

I know that high school can be difficult and confusing, but I'm worried that Joe could get hurt or possibly mess up his future. My parents and I would do anything for Joe, but he's getting out of control. We are constantly arguing with him and one another. Is there anything I can do to help? I don't want to see him throw his life away. -Frustrated Big Sister in Virginia

Dear Frustrated: You sound like a caring and loving sister, but Joe has to be willing to help himself. There are some good organizations for families of teens who are taking drugs. Please contact: Because I Love You (B.I.L.Y.), P.O. Box 2062, Winnetka, CA 91396-2062 (becauseiloveyou.org); and

Dear Annie: I was wondering about a possible college relationship situation. There is this girl in one of my classes, and I have gotten to know her a bit. I'd like to ask her out. The only thing is, I am not sure if she has a boyfriend or not.

Dear Confused: Go ahead and ask her out. If you were aware of her relationship and asked her out anyway, it would be poor form. However, since you don't know her situation, it is perfectly OK to inquire. If she already is committed to someone else, she will let you know, but she will most likely be flattered by your interest. (And if her current relationship should break up, she will undoubtedly remember that you asked.) Good

Dear Annie: I recently became engaged, and the wedding is scheduled for the fall. This is a truly exciting time for me.

Dear Counsel: Since you dislike Jan anyway, you don't have much to lose here. Simply give her a polite version of the truth. Say, "Thank you so much for your card. I hope you won't be terribly offended, but as you know, we've become rather distant these past few years, and I've decided that my bridesmaids should be only close friends and relatives. ## Choking threats, rescue breathing hoking on a foreign object is a terrifying and possibly deadly experience. EMS crews are trained in a number of advanced airway techniques to help a choking victim but no matter how quickly they respond, the patient may no longer be breathing by the time they arrive. The best treatment for a choking patient is immediate intervention. Even

a nontrained bystander can be the difference between life and death by following some simple instructions.

1. Call 911, don't wait until the situation becomes worse.

2. Don't interfere as long as the person is coughing. Their own attempts to clear the object are better than anything you can do.

3. If they can no longer cough or speak, use the Heimlich Maneuver.

a. Stand behind the person and put your arms around their waist.

b. Lock your hands together and place them just above their bellybutton.

c. Pull your hands inwards and upwards sharply against their abdomen.
d. This should make them cough. Continue this until they are able to spit out the object or lose consciousness.

4. If a person loses consciousness, lower them easily to the floor and lie them on their back.

5. Look in their mouth for any foreign substance and remove it.

6. Tilt the chin forward and the forehead back to open the mouth and airway.

7. Listen carefully and look for the chest to rise for signs of breathing.

8. If they aren't breathing initiate Rescue Breathing.

a. Pinch their nose shut with one hand and hold their chin forward with the other.

b. Press your mouth over theirs and blow into their mouth. You should see their chest rise when you do this.

c. Stop and let them exhale, the air coming back out of their mouth.

A special tour for a special event.

d. Repeat until help arrives.

9. If you are unable to blow air into their lungs try repositioning the head. If still no air will go in, the obstacle may still be present.

10. Initiate Abdominal Thrusts.

 a. Straddle the patient by kneeling over their legs.

b. Place one of your hands over the other, palm to back, and intertwine the fingers.

c. Place the palm of the first hand just above their belly button and push sharply up and inward on their abdomen.

d. Your weight on their legs will keep them from moving upward from the force of your thrusts. This should force an artificial cough.

e. Repeat this 5 times then return and check the mouth again for any objects and for breathing as before.

f. Continue this until help arrives.

11. Infants are handled similarly with a few differences.

a. When providing rescue breathing cover both the mouth and nose with your mouth and blow only enough to make their abdomenrise.

b. To try and dislodge a foreign object hold the child face down along your lower arm (use your knee for support). With the head hanging downward, sharply slap the child's back, between the shoulder blades 5 times.

c. If this doesn't release the object, turn the child over on their back and with the head again hanging downward, press the breast-bone inward 5 times.

d. Check the mouth for any objects and if the child is breathing. If not, try a rescue breath. If you cant get air to go in, continue attempting to dislodge the object.

These procedures may well free the foreign object. Make sure the person is breathing and if not continue to provide rescuer breaths until EMS arrives.

These steps can save the life of a choking victim and offer valuable time to the victim to allow advanced measures by EMS to take affect. Don't be hesitant to offer assistance; for several minutes, you may be all the help they have.

Richard A. Grove is Big Spring Fire/EMS deputy chief, training. This is the fourth in a five-part series on the EMS and what the public can and should do in case of an emergency.

Sunday.

Bernie Williams, batting leadoff for the first time in eight years because captain Derek Jeter sat out for the second straight day with a pulled right groin, homered on the first pitch of the fourth inning from Ryan Drese to help the Yankees win for the 11th

New York Yankees over

time in 13 games.

Mussina (7-4) had the Rangers fooled all day, mixing his fastball with a tricky knuckle curve to win his sixth straight decision. He struck out a season-high 10.

The right-hander never went to a three-ball count and didn't let a runner reach second until Laynce Nix hit a ground-rule double to left-center with one out in the eighth.

Mussina gave up a single to Eric Young with one out in the third, then retired his next 12 batters before giving up a single to ex-Yankees second baseman Alfonso Soriano with two outs in the seventh.

Mussina left after allowing a triple to Rod Barajas leading off the ninth. Mariano Rivera relieved and gave up an RBI groundout to Michael Young.

After striking out Hank Blalock, Rivera gave up a single to Soriano. When Soriano ran on Rivera's pitch, shortstop Miguel Cairo broke to cover second and Brad Fullmer singled through the hole at shortstop, sending Soriano to third.

Rivera then got Mark Teixeira on a chopper to the pitcher for his 23rd save in 24 chances.

Drese (2-3) had his second strong outing against the Yankees, this time against a lineup missing Gary Sheffield and Jeter. Sheffield was used as the designated hitter the last three games because of sore knees and a stomach virus, but his symptoms worsened Saturday night and he missed his first game since joining the Yankees as a free agent in the offseason.

Giambi, sidelined since spraining his right ankle May 21, hit his 10th homer in the eighth to make it 2-0.

On May 22, Drese retired the first 14 Yankees he faced until he gave up consecutive homers to Williams and Tony Clark. On Saturday, Drese allowed seven hits and two runs in eight innings.

Drese worked out of trouble in the sixth. Williams led off with a single and, one out later, Alex Rodriguez got his second infield hit of the game. Drese then got Giambi to ground out to third, moving the runners up, and induced Jorge Posada to bounce back to the mound and end the threat.

Unlikely stars lead Astros to win over surging Cardinals

By R.B. FALLSTROM AP Sports Writer

ST. LOUIS - Roy Oswalt worked six solid innings and Raul Chavez hit an RBI double that broke a sixthinning tie, helping the Houston Astros beat the St. Louis Cardinals, 3-2, Sunday and avoid a three-game sweep.

St. Louis finished the game without Albert Pujols, who strained his left hamstring running the bases in the sixth.

Pujols, who has 17 homers, 40 RBI and a .325 average, has started all 56 games for the Cardinals and has never been on the disabled list.

Chavez, the Astros' backup catcher, and Cody McKay, the Cardinals' backup catcher, each had big days at the plate. Chavez was 2-for-3 with his sixth RBI. and McKay was 2-for-4 with a two-run single that gave him three RBI this

Despite the loss St. Louis has won nine of its last 11 and is 7-5 this year against the Astros. St. Louis won the first in the dugout, their sixgame winning streak came to an end.

Jeff Kent extended his hitting streak to 21 games with a brokenbat infield RBI single in the first.

Oswalt (4-4) allowed two runs and six hits with six strikeouts and no walks. He had lost three of his previous four outings.

Octavio Dotel worked the ninth for his ninth save in 11 chances.

Jeff Suppan (5-5), who had won his previous two starts, gave up three runs and eight hits in seven innings.

McKay helped the Astros score in the first when he turned the wrong way and couldn't catch an easy pop foul on Adam Everett's sacrifice attempt.

Everett ended up sacrificing to advance Craig Biggio, who had drawn a leadoff walk, and Biggio went to third on a groundout before Kent's hit.

Houston made it 2-0 in the second on consecutive singles by Jose Vizcaino, Jason Lane and Chavez, plus Oswalt's run-scoring groundout.

McKay's two-run single tied it in the fifth. McKay, batting .. 149 at the time, flared a 1-2 pitch to left to score Jim Edmonds

Gaudio upsets Coria at French Open, wins first-ever major championship

By HOWARD FENDRICH

AP Tennis Writer

PARIS - Even one point from defeat, Gaston Gaudio just kept telling himself to enjoy the moment, to cherish the chance to play in a French Open final.

If he could get through years of struggle, of borrowing money to travel to tournaments, of losing more big matches than he won, then certainly he could conquer this obstacle, too. At least that's what his psychologist had said.

The unseeded Gaudio provided an apt ending to two wild weeks at Roland Garros by winning his first Grand Slam title, coming from way down to upset a cramping Guillermo Coria 0-6, 3-6, 6-4, 6-1, 8-6 Sunday in a back-and-forth thriller.

Gaudio is the first man in 70 years to win a French Open final after facing match point, saving two when Coria served for the championship at 6-5 in the last set.

"I don't know how, but I won," said Gaudio, who's ranked No. 44, the fourthlowest for a major champion. "Until now, I never believed that I can win a Grand Slam. Until the last point, I was not even thinking that I'm going to win this tournament."

The first all-Argentine major final was guaranteed to produce the country's first Slam champion since Guillermo Vilas in 1979, but that was about the only given in a 3 1/2-hour match that veered in that moment, I started to champion's trophy. "I didso many directions.

Here's how close it was: Gaudio had one more unforced error (55-54) and two fewer winners (36-38); each player was broken 11 times.

But it didn't start that way. Through 2 1/2 sets, the third-seeded Coria played superbly, Gaudio terribly, and 15,639 spectators were fed up.

Fans began applauding Coria's mistakes, a breach of tennis etiquette but perfectly understandable, given the lackluster play over the previous few days, including Anastasia Myskina's 6-1, 6-2 victory over Elena Dementieva in an all-Russian women's final Saturday.

And during changeover with Coria ahead 4-3 in the third set, just two games from victory, the crowd did the wave, trying to will Gaudio to play better.

The players trotted out, ready to resume, but the fans wouldn't quit, delaying action more than a minute. Soaking it all in, Gaudio set the ball and his racket on the court and clapped. The fans gave Gaudio exactly what he needed: escape.

"They support me so hard when I was playing so bad. With that, maybe I start to move on," said Gaudio, who enlisted a psychologist about a year ago when he was particularly down on himself after a Davis Cup loss.

"I was almost done. I was too nervous. From enjoy the match more and be relaxed and play my tennis."

After winning points, which he suddenly did with frequency, Gaudio would turn to the crowd and raise his arms in a V, or gesture for more cheering. He closed that set in three straight games.

The match's complexion changed yet again at 1-1 in the fourth, when Coria needed his cramping left calf massaged. He struggled to get out of his chair and he simply couldn't move on the court.

For the next 20 minutes, no one knew how to behave.

Not Coria, who just tried to hang in, gingerly stepping around as if barefoot on a beach's hot

Not Gaudio, who went back into a shell and managed to lose points against an opponent unable to run.

Not the fans, who sat in silence for long stretches.

"I've never seen anything like that in a tennis sat in the second row of n't move from my seat once."

In the fifth set, Coria's fighting spirit returned and, helped by two double-faults, he broke Gaudio in the first game. At breaks, Coria stood, chomping on bananas and guzzling water. After the match, he teared up while talking about not using dietary supplements (which can help avoid cramping) because he served a seventh-month drug suspension in 2001-

When Gaudio pushed a forehand wide to let Coria break to 5-4, chants of "Gow-dee-o!" and "Cohree-ah!" echoed through the stadium like an operatic fugue. Fans, it seemed, didn't know who to sympathize with more: Coria for his physical problems or Gaudio for his mental blocks.

At 6-5, Coria wasted his match points by missing a backhand, then a forehand. A long backhand made it 6-all.

When Gaudio held for 7match," said Vilas, who 6, he jogged to his chair laughing, perhaps incredthe VIP section and pre- ulous he was four points sented Gaudio with the from a Grand Slam title.

Yellow Jackets end Texas Tech's season at regionals

By KEITH PARSONS

AP Sports Writer ATLANTA - Andrew Kown pitched seven solid innings and Georgia Tech banged two more homers to beat Texas Tech, 5-3, Sunday in the final of the NCAA regional in Atlanta. The victory put the Yellow Jackets (44-19) in the Super Regional for the second time in three years, and they host a best-of-3 series next weekend against the winner of the Athens regional.

Brandon Boggs and Tyler Greene each had solo home runs against the Red Raiders (40-21), giving Georgia Tech eight in its three games.

Those were hit by seven different players, with Whit Robbins the only one with two.

Greene finished 3-for-5 with two RBI and Clifton Remole was 3-for-5 with a triple for the Yellow · Jackets, who won for the 23rd time in 25 games. Most Regional Outstanding Player Eric Cody Fuller.

Patterson was 1-for-4 with a walk.

Kown (10-1) won his ninth straight decision by allowing one run on seven hits.

He struck out seven, including five over the first two innings. He threw 113 pitches and hasn't lost since Feb. 29 against Oklahoma.

His performance left Georgia Tech's starters 3-0 in the regional with a 1.96 ERA in 23 innings. Brian Burks went the final two innings.

Michael Mask hit a tworun homer with two outs in the ninth off Brian Burks, who ended the game by getting Haney on a flyout to center.

Josh Brady and Josh Haney had two hits apiece for Texas Tech, which returned to the NCAA tournament for the ninth time in 10 seasons after missing out in 2003.

The Red Raiders stranded 11 runners, and their lone run until the ninth came on a groundout by

Don't you wish your advertising could stop consumers that effectively? Let's face it, most of the time it gets lost in the shuffle.

It takes a certain ingenuity to stand out in a crowd. You've got to be provocative. Unpredictible. A little smarter than the next guy. And you've got to have a real feel for the medium you're working in.

We put those talents to work for our advertisers everyday...and at no extra cost. It works for them. And, you'll have to admit, it just worked for you!

Dear Prudence says...

an ethical dilemma that felines are haughty and has plagued me for years but has recently become acute. Ten years ago, I adopted a cute kitten (whom I perhaps named, unfortunately, Prudence), and now, I own a cat I hate. Over the years, she has proven to unbearably ___ needy, a trait I find repellent. Her faults are myriad: a screaming meow that awakens me in the early hours of the morning, an apparent inability to learn the basics of litter-box usage or grooming, a tendency to drool when receiving her scant portion of affection, as well as dandruff. I know these things aren't her fault, but they do make me avoid her. And now that I have a baby on the way, I have even less patience for her. Yet the thought of her in a cage at the local SPCA, possibly to be abandoned by new owners (in the unlikely event that someone actually took her), leaves me with contorted guilt.

colitis, arthritis and feeling This is compounded by presence of my other cat, a beloved pet I plan to keep. Prudie, can you offer me advice — or perhaps absolution? -Imprudent Adopter

Dear Imp: It is interesting that Prudence the Cat is needy. Most

Dear Prudence: I have cat owners say the slinky aloof . . . bundles of attitude in fur coats, if you will. Perhaps this idiosyncrasy, along with the other unfortunate you mention, just underlines that you wound up with the bad seed of cats.

MARGO Not being a cat HOWARD psychiatrist (for the record, Prudie is not people psychiatrist, either), it would seem that the annoyance on four legs is neurotic, if not disturbed.

However, there are some people who love any kind of cat . . . even one with colitis, arthritis and dandruff. Check with your vet about a "readoption." Try placing an ad www.craigslist.org, which has many cities listed. (Go to Pets, which is under Community.) Should this not work, find a no-kill shelter. In the situation you describe, you should not keep the cat, but bless you for wishing to leave no kitty behind. -

Prudie, obligingly Dear Prudence: I have been with a wonderful, loving man for about three years now. Up until three weeks ago, we lived : in different apartments. However, we visited each other often and even stayed the night many times. He recently moved in with me. It was something we discussed and decided would be great.

Not to say that it isn't, but trivial things are starting to annoy me. I've been with him long enough to know his little idiosyncrasies, but they never bothered me until now (like how he wrinkles the sheets when he sleeps, for example). I've realized that I sometimes snap at him for no reason at all.

I'm in my last semester of college, so I am wondering if his moving in is just an additional stressor that's getting me all bent out of shape. By no means do I want to end the relationship, as I love him dearly, but do you think I will eventually adjust before I nag him to death? -Crabby Girlfriend

Dear Crab: Prudie is reasonably certain that your wonderful, loving man is not wrinkling the sheets any differently now than he did Your previously. observation about trivial things annoying you is the crux of the matter. Nitpicky complaints are most likely a stand-in for your general angst about graduating.

Because you value the relationship, cut him some slack, make an effort not to verbalize whatever zinger you might otherwise let fly, and offer an inclusive apology-in-advance for any criticisms that might slip out. Recognize that what's going on is likely the bachelor of arts version of PMS. Prudie, temporarily
