SATURDAY marks the opening day of the Fat Stock Show at Fort Worth. It is referred to by a more dignified name but I don't know what it is. It will always be the Fat Stock Show to me, even though I have never attended the annual event. I think I shall break a record and go up Saturday. That day is Press Day and since the officials are handing out a lot of complimentary passes to members of the press at that time I will flatter myself by getting in on the gravy. I don't know much about the Stock part but the Show phase appeals to me.

COME people have been worrying about the premiscous transportation of liquor into Texas from wet states. Predictions have been made concerning the method of border patrol. According to a recent news story hijacking will take the place of border police.

Two Austin men who went to Shreveport recently to purchase $400 worth of liquor were relieved of their cargo just after crossing the state line. It so happened that only a week ago another party underwent the same pillaging at about this same spot.

Whoever the band of hijackers are perhaps it would be wise to put them on the state patrol force in order to keep down inter-state liquor transportation.

ADVERTISING for bids for work on the proposed city auditorium in Gatesville has been done. Bids were received Wednesday. The city council was in secret session most of the day Thursday. As soon as some of the rough spots on the process of construction are smoothed the contract will probably be let and work begun. Local residents who are at all interested in the new structure are beginning to become anxious, looking forward to seeing construction begin.

CHARLIE FELRATH

Charlie Felrath, age 62, expired at Fort Worth on last Monday and was brought to Gatesville for burial. Services were held at the City Cemetery Tuesday afternoon with Rev. M. M. Chunn officiating.

Mr. Felrath was born in Gatesville but moved to Fort Worth about ten years ago. While a resident of Gatesville the deceased was an employee at the George Miller Produce.

The deceased is survived by a cousin, John Felrath, of Belton.

Snow in West Part of County Indicates Old Man Winter Yet Alive

Old man Winter took one last final fling (it is hoped) in the western part of the county Thursday afternoon by spreading a blanket of real snow and sleet over the ground in the vicinity of Purmela and Evant, extending westward across the county line. According to reports, the snow began to fall around noon and continued until early afternoon, falling fast enough on the cold dry ground to cover the fields and roads.

With the quick cold that came up during the night Wednesday local people failed to take seriously the indication that Winter had not resigned for the Spring of 1934.

Probably Mr. Winter has decided to postpone his departure until a later date.

J. A. Fletcher suffered an attack of nose bleeding last Tuesday afternoon but no ill consequences resulted other than weakness.

End of Perfect Day Portrayed by Chalk Talk Artist for P-T. A.

The March meeting of the Gatesville Parent-Teacher Association held at the high school building Tuesday evening was attended by an unusually large number of patrons and friends of the schools. Mrs. George Miller of Waco who is a very talented chalk talk artist gave a very interesting presentation in her chosen line of work. She drew a number of pictures with Miss Orpa Mayo, local music teacher, assisting her with piano selections. Mrs. Miller's remarks were very appropriate for the pictures she chose to draw and she quoted a number of poems of her own composition. All of her pictures and talks were particularly applicable to the group to which she spoke. As a climax to her program, Mrs. Miller concluded by drawing a picture depicting her conception of "The End of a Perfect Day".

A Playlet, "What the New Year Brings" was well rendered by pupils of the third grade under the direction of Mrs. Cotchett. A musical selection was rendered by Twiford Schloeman who is also a third grade pupil.

The next meeting of the organization will be held on April 6 with Dr. H. L. Pritchett of Dallas as the principal speaker.

'round the square

By
The Snooper

My, how facial expressions have changed since Wednesday, which has made it hard on the Snooper. Wednesday everyone seemed to leave the square for the fishing streams and Thursday they were all hibernating. Wednesday everybody seemed to radiate that Spring feeling, but Thursday brought back red noses and strained expressions. Mrs. A. D. Chesnut was good enough to stop and give a News reported a bit of information. Mrs. Eleanor Dubes coming around the square looking pleasantly pleased with the new norther. Jim Martin drinking a cup of coffee and giving me a sales talk, almost convincing. Bob Arnold and Bill Ament all "het" up over the prospects of getting a lighted baseball diamond. Sid Gregory was right when he warned me about shedding my coat; the norther did come. Mrs. Roger Miller and her attractive young son spending some time among friends that get their first introduction to young Mr. Miller.

Mrs. Frank Battle and J. R. Saunders motored to Waco Thursday to meet Frank Battle Jr. who is returning from school at Fort Worth.

Bids on $32,000 City Hall Building Project Received Here March 7

On Wednesday of this week there were something like twenty-five men here in connection with the bidding on the Municipal Building project. Only five bids were submitted for consideration. These bids were opened in the presence of a representative of the Federal Government. Three of the bids were returned and the two lowest bids were forwarded to the P. W. A. headquarters at Fort Worth.

The city council also took an option on chairs for the seating of the auditorium.

It is believed that action will be had on the matter within the next month and that construction will be underway within the next six-weeks.

One of the most challenging appeals of Christ is in the fact. He led His movement by man power. Real red blooded men follow the leadership of the gallant manhood of Jesus, yesterday, today and forever. The church is the biggest business in the world for absolutely millions march under the banner of our Lord, in fact the church is the foundation of all that is permanent and is of value to the daily needs of the inner call of men.

I am a pastor who has a message from one of the greatest men who ever lived on this earth and His appeal is my appeal.

The Bible is a man's book, men wrote it and men believe it and support it. When you think Christianity is a soft nonaggressive movement you are not aware of truth.

We, the students, realize that the close of this school term is only two and one-half months off and we are putting forth every effort to make this the best year in the history of the school. Better grades and fewer failures, we hope, will go on school records.

An Interesting Fact

During the past few years, mail has been coming through the Coryell Postoffice addressed to J. Balwin High School. There has been discussions over the fact but no one seemed to know why. Recently all this was explained by an out-of-town friend of the school.

About forty-five years ago the legislature gave to the high school this particular name and the name has never been changed since. Isn't it strange that we didn't know that before. We haven't solved the fact, though, that we get mail addressed to the colored school.

Music Class

Mrs. A. D. Byrd will present her piano pupils in a recital at Osage on Friday night, March 9. Coryell people are glad to have Mrs. Byrd in our community and appreciate the work she is doing.

Improvement Club

The improvement club in the sixth and seventh grades met one day this week and had a business meeting and program. We are grateful to the club for the work it has done toward keeping the grounds clean and hope it will keep the good work going.

Sports

Everyone has been enjoying the volley ball and play ground ball games between the boys and girls. Both the boys and girls offer competition and some times a miniature war almost results, but in the end we are always friends again.

Third and Fourth Grades

We are looking forward to Easter.

The Fourth Grade is making an attractive poster of Dutch children. They are studying about Holland in English now.

Harold Lina's playmates were glad to see him back in school after an illness of two weeks.

We Wonder Why

Marvin Dreyer has a black eye. Mae Florence Culp and Selma Bohne are always carrying a kodak with them.

Spring is so slow about coming.

The high school girls quit wearing tennis shoes.

Herbert Landfried doesn't put in phone calls until midnight.

Earl Bietendorf thinks illiteracy means literature and art.

Prather Lee and David McBroom stay in Waco.

Elizabeth Lindenberg is so anxious to win a volley ball game at the District Meet.

The English class 10 has to study short stories.

Loran Haferkamp teases Jean Johnson.

Gerald Lina is on such affectionate terms with Miss Hoff.

SHOPPERS SEEK CONVENIENCE

Highway enthusiasts from Copperas Cove, Lampasas, Kempner, Killeen, Nolanville, Belton and Temple met in Killeen last Wednesday evening organized and discussed a plan of concentration to get the building of Highway 53 from Lampasas to Temple.

Copperas Cove is in Coryell County. It is the only incorporated town in the county with the exception of Gatesville. Heretofore much of the trade from that section has gone to Killeen and Lampasas. The reason for this is that better roads lead from Copperas Cove to Killeen and Lampasas than to Gatesville.

The people of the southwest part of the county are interested in shopping where convince counts most. If roads were better elsewhere that's where the trade would naturally go. Gatesville has enjoyed a small patronage comparatively from the people in the vicinity of Copperas Cove despite the bad condition of the roads to Gatesville.

Those people are not particularly interested in Temple or Lampasas either, but by linking up with the association for the promotion of Highway 53 they see an opportunity of getting a good highway that will put them in position to benefit by the markets of those two municipalities.

THE FIRST ANNIVERSARY

There are manifold reasons for the statewide observations this week of the first anniversary of the Roosevelt-Garner reign.

First, as an united people, both Jew and Gentile, We are glad that our Bible is not being mutilated or re-written and the trend of or civilization altered and changed.

Second, we are thankful that riot and bloodshed does not prevail among us.

Third, we are thankful that the hungry are being fed.

Fourth, we are happy that the spirit of honor, integrity and fair dealing among our people in the business world is being taught by precept and example from the need of our great nation.

Fifth, that our financial relationships are improving; that agriculture, the basic industry, is responding to the attention it is receiving, and that we are at peace with the nations of the earth.—Waco News-Tribune

TOM J. CARROLL

Tom J. Carroll, age 53, expired at the family home here early Wednesday morning after an illness of several months.

Mr. Carroll was born in Coryell county October 22, 1881 and in 1903 was united in marriage with Miss Ora Bland. To this union two children V. G. Carroll and Mrs. Jack Crawford were born. Both of the children together with the wife survive.

Mr. Carroll made a profession of religion in 1909 but never united with any church.

The deceased was for several years one of the county commissioners of this county and later was employed as county supervisor for the State Highway Department.

Funeral services were held at the City Cemetery here with Rev. C. A. Morton officiating.

Survivors beside his wife and children are: his mother, Mrs. W. D. Carroll of Union; three brothers, Joe Carroll of Purnela, Drury Carroll of Gatesville and Bud Carroll of Union; three sisters, Mrs. Laura White of Union, Mrs. J. J. Estes of Union and Mrs. Will Fowler of White Hall.

FRED SALYER

Fred Salyer, age 44, expired at Abilene on Monday and was brought to Pearl for Burial at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon.

The deceased was born in Kentucky but moved to Coryell county about thirty years ago settling at Pearl where he resided until 1918 when the family moved to Port Arthur.

Mr. Salyer is survived by his mother, Mrs. Laura Salyer; two brothers Jim and Edgar Salyer and one half-brother, Raymond Keeton all of whom reside in Port Arthur.

METHODIST WOMEN IN STUDY COURSE

For the last four Tuesdays the members of the Missionary Society have been working on a course of study, based on the book, "Eastern Women Today and Tomorrow." The lessons have been presented by various groups of our church women, and have been highly inspirational as well as instructive.

There are only two more lessons in this course. On Tuesday three young ladies, Mary Jane Colgin, Dessie Lee Hare, and Dollie Farmer will bring an interesting lesson on health in the form of a dialogue.

In addition to this Ayres Compton will speak to us. Mr. Compton spent some time in the East a few years ago. He was on a cruise with the looting University students headed by a promoter of universal study from New York. The group was made up students from all parts of the United States. We are sure that what he may tell us will not be "booky" for it will be real first-hand information from his observation in the Orient.

You are cordially invited, and even urged, to come to the Methodist Church Tuesday afternoon Mrs. J. H. Hamilton, Supt. of Study

WEDDING MARCH

Kilday puffed thoughtfully, his attention apparently centered on the blue clouds that encircled him. "Two sets still unidentified," he mused aloud. "One of them apparently belonging to a woman, but neither Callis Shipley's nor Choo Choo Train's. That would be our woman in blue.

"The other set matches the print on the gun, and that doesn't fit any of our previous notions of the crime. Who else was there, whose specimens we haven't got? Why did the murderer go there with a revolver, then change his mind and use Doctor Abernathy's dagger? How does it happen that the mur-derer left a thumb-print on the revolver although he wiped the dagger clean of prints? This doesn't make sense.

"And," he continued, "why is Callis Shipley trying to protect Webster Spears? By all the laws of reason, that should be his thumb-print on the revolver."

Peter was equally puzzled. Did the fact that this print on the revolver remained unidentified absolve all those whose finger-prints did not match it from suspicion? How about Callis Shipley? Reluctantly, he was forced to admit that Kilday had ample grounds for his mistrust of her. But if both Ryle Carmody and Webster Spears were cleared of suspicion, what was the girl trying to conceal? And if that print on the gun was a clue (as it certainly seemed to be) who else should they suspect? What other finger-prints could they match against it? The woman in blue? Who was she? How could they obtain a specimen of her finger-prints? Daniel Bullis was the only person who could identify her, and it seemed certain that they could expect little help from him along that line. Was there anyone else? Fletcher, Franklin's servant? That was absurd. He hadn't been near the church. There was Milo Dunbar, too. He had been there, but he had been the dead man's partner. What motive could be manufactured from that? Besides, there was no evidence that he had been in the sacristy at any time, other than the doubtful testimony of Nick Royce that he had been unable to find the man in the church, a short time before the wedding. As Kilday had pointed out, this was not important evidence, inasmuch as it would have been almost surprising if Royce had been able to pick him out of all that throng which had crowded the church.

All these and many other doubts assailed the novelist. He could not shake his skepticism concerning finger-prints, either. If there were none on the knife with which the crime had been committed, why should they have expected the murderer to have left any elsewhere? If that were true, how account for the thumb-print on the gun? He was irritated by the manner in which his reasoning led him in circles. Nowhere could he find a tangible fact to which he might cling or from which he might argue.

He almost wished that he might share Kilday's confidence in that thumb-print.

The door behind them was flung open by an excited subordinate.

"We've found it, Sergeant!" the man exclaimed. "We have discovered who registered that revolver when it was purchased."

Kilday made no attempt to conceal his excitement. "Who was it, man? Don't stand there like an idiot," he urged impatiently.

"It belonged to Jim Franklin himself," declared the man. "The registration shows that he bought it two years ago."

CHAPTER VII

Kilday's Case.

"BUT that's impossible, man," exclaimed Sergeant Kilday impatiently. "The gun belonged to the murderer."

Peter picked the revolver from the desk and examined it critically. Would this, like every other trail they had discovered in this curious case end in a blind alley? He whistled, tunelessly. How could Jim Franklin, stabbed through the heart, have concealed the weapon in the rectory garden, before returning to the study to die? Obviously, that was impossible. The revolver had been concealed by the murderer, certainly. Peter revolved the question in his mind methodically. Had Franklin carried the weapon to his wedding, fearing trouble? If so, why had he not used it, when attacked?

Or again, granting that he had tried to use his gun and had been too slow, why had the slayer taken such precautions to conceal it? What story did the weapon have to tell that the slayer wished to hide? It was Franklin's own gun. His possession of it could scarcely reveal the identity of the assailant. He thought of the thumb-print, but dismissed it with a shrug. The murderer had had no difficulty in wiping the prints of his fingers from the hilt of the knife. No, that was not the answer. "What do you make of it, Sergeant?" the novelist inquired. "Why should the guilty person have taken the precaution to hide his victim's gun?"

"Doesn't make sense," growled Kilday, chewing savagely on his cigar. "If I had killed a man who was carrying a gun, I'd have left the gun alone. Then, if I ever

Two Kinds of Starter Manufactured by Mill Owned by L. A. Preston

According to L. A. Preston, proprietor of Preston's Feed Mill, he is devoting his major attention at this time of the year to the manufacture of chick-starter.

Preston's Mill manufactures two kinds of feed for chicks, using the A & M College formula. One is the butter-milk starter without cotton-seed meal and the other is a laying mash without cotton-seed meal. The Mill carries all kinds of poultry and stock feeds.

Preston states that he has everything to make any kind of feed wanted. The Mill is located on Leon Street across from the jail.

High Regard Held for Local Produce Raisers By Poultry & Egg Firm

"It has been our aim to give the people of this marketing territory the highest prices possible for their produce together with service and fair dealings", stated C. D. Blackburn in a recent interview relative to his business.

Blackburn will soon finish his first year as manager of the Gatesville Poultry & Egg Company, and one which he feels has been highly successful, not from a selfish standpoint but from a standpoint of business.

This company employs only local people, thus providing a payroll to be spent in this vicinity. The firm is backed by a nationally known concern.

E. Routh Celebrates Thirteenth Year in Ice Business Here

E. Routh, manager and co-owner of Young & Routh Ice Company of Gatesville will celebrate his thirteenth anniversary in business here this month. Mr. Routh came to Gatesville in March, 1921. He has acquired the friendship of many local and county residents during that time.

It has been pointed out by Mr. Routh concerning the ice manufacturing business that ice means even, circulating cold for keeping foods safe and good to eat. As the open window is to the bedroom, so the drain is to the ice-refrigerator. Perishable foods need fresh air, even as human beings.

WEDDING MARCH MURDER—

was caught, I could plead self-defense."

"How is this for a theory?" Peter volunteered. "If Jim Franklin had had the gun in his possession, he certainly would have defended himself with it, wouldn't he? He wouldn't have carried a weapon to his wedding if he hadn't expected danger. That being true, why didn't he shoot his assailant the minute he was attacked?"

"If we grant that he was armed, then we admit he was expecting trouble. But Royce heard nothing—apparently Franklin never even cried out. My idea is that he never had that revolver."

"But hang it, man, it was Franklin's own gun!" expostulated the detective.

"There's no doubt of that," Cardigan agreed, "but people have been known to borrow guns before. Obviously, the guilty person was taking every precaution to conceal his identity. It seems that he first planned to borrow his victim's gun for the occasion. After his arrival in the study, however, he saw Doctor Abernathy's dagger hanging among his trophies on the wall. The knife was the more silent method of the two, so he determined to use it, instead of the revolver. This presented only one difficulty. For some reason, not yet apparent to us, he did not want to leave the revolver beside the body. And certainly, it was a dangerous thing to carry around, as its discovery would connect him with the slain man, should the ownership of the weapon be traced. Therefore, he concealed the gun in the garden."

"Then how about the thumb-print? Do you think we'll still be able to trace him by that?"

"I have my doubts," Peter declared. "Why should he have left a thumb-print on the revolver, when he took the precaution to wipe off the knife, unless," and the novelist sat suddenly forward in his chair, "by George, Sergeant, that's it! Unless he wanted us to find that thumb-print. Have you taken the finger-prints of the dead man?"

"We always take them, during the medical examination," replied the detective.

"Go get them, quick." Peter sprang to his feet and began a restless pacing of the floor. "I'm beginning to get it, now. That thumb-print belongs to Jim Franklin, and it was made after his death. The murderer, taking every precaution to conceal his own identity, pressed his victim's thumb against the barrel after the crime, so that if we ever found the weapon, it could lead us only to the dead man. Very clever, too, and if it wasn't for your practice of finger-printing dead men, we might have searched all our lives for the possessor of that print."

Sergeant Kilday hastened in search of the photographic records which included the finger-prints of the slain man. The novelist had been correct. The thumb-print found on the revolver barrel tallied exactly with that of Jim Franklin.

"That also identifies another set of finger-prints in the study," declared Kilday. "They had already been matched with this thumb-print. It leaves only one set unidentified—the small prints, which I think were made by a woman, probably the woman in blue."

"The woman in blue," agreed the novelist. "Just because we don't know who she is, we can't overlook her. It's quite possible this fifth set of prints was made by her."

Kilday chuckled softly. "Now it doesn't look so bad," he said. "When Spears' prints didn't match the one on the revolver, I'll admit I began to feel the ground slipping out from under me. But now—well, it fits better than ever. That was a lucky hunch, Peter. I never would have thought of looking for Franklin's print on the gun. It seemed so obvious that he couldn't have hidden it in the garden after he was murdered."

Peter took a turn around the room, hands clasped behind his back, his brow knitted in thought. "At any rate," he began slowly, "this gives us another place to start. If we find the man or woman who had the opportunity to remove Franklin's revolver from his room, it should help."

"Sounds like Choo Choo," mused Kilday. "She had access to his rooms. Or, if we can prove there was anything between him and the Shipley girl, she might have done it. That may be what she's trying to hide."

"She tried to protect Rylie Carmody first," Peter pointed out. "Now she seems to be protecting Webster Spears. How does that connect up with the gun?"

"Suppose," the detective ventured, "that she gave Rylie the gun. Rylie would be the one she'd try to protect. But later, if she discovered that he had passed it on to young Spears, wouldn't that cause her to change her story? Whatever the reason was, she did change her story. Our best bet now is to discover who procured that revolver."

Kilday puffed his stogy thoughtfully. "How about Nick Royce? He was intimate with Franklin, and probably in his apartment often. He met Franklin there, before they went to the church. What was to prevent him from slipping the revolver in his pocket then?"

"Or the woman in blue?" Peter returned to the subject of the mysterious woman whose identity continued to baffle them. "According to Dan Bullis, she was in love with Franklin, and he had been indiscreet where she was concerned, to say the least. It isn't unreasonable to assume that she had access to his apartment. And we know that she was in the study a short time before his death. Perhaps she is the one who took the revolver from his rooms after learning his determination to marry another woman." He reached for his hat. "Bring the gun, Sergeant. Let's have a talk with Fletcher. We'll never find out how that gun got into the rectory garden, sitting here."

Pending settlement of Franklin's affairs, his apartment was being kept open, and they found the servant there. "Were you wanting to have another look around, sir?" he inquired.

"We want to ask you a few more questions Fletcher." Peter tried without success to penetrate the man's suave mask. He only looked politely interested.

"I believe you told us that Nick Royce and Dan Bullis were Mr. Franklin's only visitors here yesterday," the novelist continued. "You are sure that's right?"

"No, sir, that isn't right," Fletcher sidestepped the trap. "Mr. Royce came, after lunch, and accompanied Mr. Franklin to the church. Mr. Bullis telephoned, repeatedly, but he never came here. The young Mr. Carmody was the other caller. You misunderstood me, sir, about that."

Peter nodded. "My mistake, Fletcher. So Mr. Royce and Mr. Carmody were the only visitors yesterday. Think carefully, I must be sure."

"I'm quite sure that is correct, sir. If there had been any other visitors, I should have known it. I was here all the time."

The novelist was apparently engrossed in the lighting of a cigarette, but his eyes never wavered from the man's face. "How about the day before?" he shot at him suddenly. "Do you recall what visitors Franklin had that day?"

The man hesitated. "There have been so many things happening, Mr. Cardigan. I don't recall anything unusual about that day, if that's what you mean."

"But there was nothing unusual about visitors calling here to see Mr. Franklin, was there?"

"Oh, no, sir. But unless there were something unusual about it, I couldn't say exactly who called on any certain day."

"Come, come, Fletcher," Kilday interrupted impatiently. "That's only two days ago. You wouldn't have to have the memory of an elephant to remember that."

"No, sir. Of course not." But still the servant faltered.

"Then what are you trying to hide?" demanded the detective brusquely.

"I'm not trying to hide anything, sir. I have done nothing—"

Peter interrupted him. "Perhaps it's nothing that you have done, but something concerning Mr. Franklin, that you think had best remain unknown." His tone was kindly. "Now I was Franklin's friend, too, Fletcher. If there is some incident that should remain a secret, I can promise you that neither of us is anxious to make it known, provided, of course, that it has nothing to do with his death. But you must let us be the judge of that."

Fletcher shrugged. "I'm sorry, you misunderstood me, sir. There's nothing to conceal. It's only that I don't recall just who came here that day."

"Was Bullis here?" Kilday demanded.

"No, sir. I'm sure of that. I've never seen Mr. Bullis, although I've often talked to him, on the phone."

"The State Fair" With Will Rogers Showing
Sun. Mon. Tue., Regal

Composed to accompany the introduction of Hollywood's new star love team, Janet Gaynor and Lew Ayres, an original song, "When Love Comes," will be heard as the theme melody of Fox Film's "State Fair," when it comes to the Regal Theatre on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday.

The theme song will be a part of the elaborate musical scoring for the big all-star production, it was announced at the Fox Hollywood studios. Louis De Francesco, noted conductor and composer, wrote the melody. The lyrics are by Val Burton, author of numerous song hits, among which were the popular numbers of the Nine o'Clock Revue.

"When Love Comes" is introduced in the picture in such a way as to identify it with the romance of Miss Gaynor and Ayres. After that introduction it is effectively employed to heighten the romantic mood of the love scenes. On one occasion, Miss Gaynor hums the melody and sings snatches of the lyrics.

The balance of the musical score for the production, which has as its other stars Will Rogers, Sally Eilers, Norman Foster, Louise Dresser, Frank Craven and Victor Jory, is symbolic of the fair backgrounds.

District Meet

Final plans have been made for the district meet to be held here Friday and Saturday. Flat welcomes the visiting schools and hopes that they will enjoy their stay in Flat. Volley ball and play ground ball contest are scheduled for Friday afternoon; declamation, choral singing, and rhythm band will be held Friday evening; and basket ball games will be played Saturday. "The Red Headed Stepchild" will be presented Saturday night and everyone is urged to come prepared to remain for the play.

Pupils and teachers alike are working hard on entries for the district meet. Special stress is being placed on the rhythm band and choral singing. Flat is proud of her entries.

Texas Week

The sixth and seventh grades of the school have observed "Texas Week" during the past week. They wrote the history of Texas in booklet form and added the topography of Texas, collecting the kinds of trees, soil, flowers, and pictures for the bulletin board. The work proved very interesting.

THUMBS DOWN ON THE OIL BOOTLEGGER

Sinclair Dealers Are Driving Out Oil Bootleggers With the New Tamper-Proof Can

Do you want some other motorist's crank case drainage poured into your engine when you've ordered a reputable brand of motor oil? Are you satisfied with an inferior oil when you've paid good money for a high quality product?

Authorities estimate that as much as 25 per cent of all motor oil sold today is "bootleg"---cheap, shoddy stuff masquerading as some famous brand.

Sinclair dealers have adopted a device for fighting this oil bootlegging---the new Sinclair Tamper-Proof Motor Oil can.

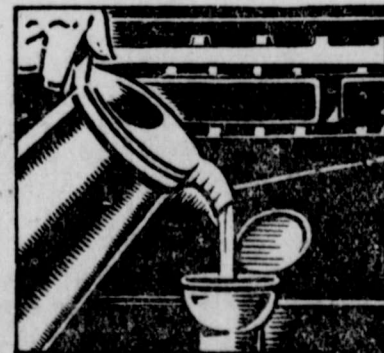

These cans are sealed at the refinery. In serving you the Sinclair dealers open them before your very eyes. This oil is positively Sinclair Oil, free from all contamination. This extra service costs YOU absolutely nothing.

Why gamble?
