HANNAH ELIZABETH SCHLEY

Mrs. Hannah Elizabeth Schley, age 83, expired at her home here last Saturday evening after an illness of several weeks.

The deceased was born in McLennan county and spent her childhood in and around South Bosque. In early childhood she was left an orphan and made her home with her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. I. N. Smith, of Kimble. On June 3, 1874 she was joined in marriage with John Schley and came to Coryell county. She united with the Baptist Church here in 1885.

Mrs. Schley was a granddaughter of General James Smith of Revolutionary fame and for whom Smith county is named. General Smith came to Texas in 1832 and during the Texas Revolution was an aide to General Sam Houston.

The deceased is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Alice Barnes Taylor of Lampasas; two grandchildren, John Franklin Barnes of Waco and Mrs. Myrtle Barnes Vaughan of Port Arthur; one great-granddaughter, Miss Elizabeth Vaughan of Port Arthur and many friends and other relatives who mourn her departure.

Funeral services were held at the family residence on Saunders Street at 10 o'clock Monday morning with Rev. C. A. Morton officiating. Inrment followed in the City Cemetery.

Mountain Team Sets Scoring Record With 62-0 Win at Tourney

Perhaps the most interesting feature of last Friday's events at the Flat tournament was a playground ball game between Mountain and Hubbard schools. The Mountain team composed of J. C. Barton, Molton Pollard, Chester Franks, Allen Barton, and Delma Lee Hubble and coached by Mrs. John Milner, played a three inning game against the Hubbard team winning by the overwhelming score of 62 to 0. J. C. Barton made eight home runs. The team was not eligible to place for honors because there were only five members of the team when seven to ten are required. Mrs. Milner stated that these five were the only boys in her school except first and second grade pupils.

Following is a schedule of the results of the tournament:

WORLD FOREIGN COMMENT

IT LOOKS as of the Japanese have put over a fast one in Manchuria. Their action two years ago in establishing the puppet state of Manchukuo was condemned by all the great powers, including the United States, but now the commercial advantages are beginning to pop up the powers are forgetting their bad words about the new state.

The Japanese, by waving trade advantages under the eyes of European diplomats, are about to secure recognition of Pu-li's de facto government. France has agreed to sell the South Manchurian Railway, which controls the government of Manchukuo, large quantities of rolling stock. Of course, such an agreement will have to be accompanied by recognition, for it would be impossible to deal with government while refusing to recognize its existence. Poland and Germany have sent representatives to Manchuria to study "commercial possibilities." The Japanese will naturally encourage them in the belief that great advantages for trade actually exist in Manchuria in order to secure their recognition of the puppet government. Thus European greed for trade has overcome all reasoning as to the right or wrong of the situation in Manchuria.

Meanwhile the Japanese are anxiously watching the large number of American pilots and American planes arriving in China. They fear a Chino-American alliance. This is extremely bad reasoning on the part of the little yellow men across the Pacific. America has never made an alliance with any country, and most certainly President Roosevelt, just leading us out of the throes of the depression, is not going to send our boys to fight China's battles against anyone.

THERE HAS been quite a bit of speculation in European capitals and indeed in Washington, as to why Herr Hitler suddenly released the three Communists who were acquitted for the burning of the Reichstag building last year. The truth of the matter is that the Russian secret service found seven German citizens guilty of espionage in Russia, and Hitler was only too glad to exchange the Communists for his German brethren.

HENRY PU-YI, newly crowned Emperor of Manchukuo, was only too glad to cast aside his royal robes after the coronation ceremony March 1, and don a comfortable American-made tweed suit. After smoking a large number of cigarettes, one of his so-called "hobbies," he sat down to a simple dinner of sharks' fins, "Budda's ears" mushrooms, dove's eggs, octopus tentacles and fly roots. But was it so simple?

Josephine Farber, 4-H club girl of Victoria county produced 3021 pounds of seed cotton last year on 3 acres, and made a net profit of $81.93.

Jr. and son, Bobbie, spent Tuesday with Mrs. Eugene Touchstone.

Mrs. Lillie Williams spent Monday with Mrs. Ollie Nichols.

Economic Highlights

Happenings That Affect the Dinner Pails, Dividend Checks and Tax Bills of every individual. National and International Affairs Inseparable From Local Welfare.

Two potential courses of action must have occurred to the President when the Senate disclosures concerning the air mail contracts were brought before him. One was to ferret out the guilty and punish them. The other was to cancel all contracts, good and bad, and turn the carrying of the mail over to the army. The President took the latter course—and started the hottest battle of his Administration.

As usual there are two sides to every matter. The Senate disclosures are sensational. Fraud and collusion are charged along with terrific profits through speculation and promotion. In one case it is alleged that a few hundred dollars was run up to a paper total of some twenty million—while the government was paying heavy subsidies on the grounds that they were essential to the development of commercial aviation.

But it has not yet been proven that all the operators are crooked. To cancel every contract, lumping the good with the bad, is punishment of an unprecedented sort. That was what the Lindbergh telegram complained about. It threw a bombshell into the proceedings—and it created a highly dramatic situation in which the most famous private citizens and the head of the government clashed violently. The Colonel laid himself open to criticism on the grounds that the giving of the telegram to the press before it reached the White House was a breach of ethics and that in being associated with an interested company he was a biased party. Opinion seems to be about evenly divided—half lining up with the President, the other half with the Colonel. The belief is expressed that the president's action was certainly drastic on innocent stockholders—but that Spartan means to get graft out of government are essential.

At this writing, the fight is moving in the courts. Government won the first victory, when a plea of Transcontinental Western Air reattain the order was refused.

A determining factor in arriving at a basis for future air mail contacts will be the efficiency of the army in handling the mail. Its ships are slower than those of private operators, though it is nipped that this will be offset by shorter stops due to elimination of passenger service. The first schedules are pretty sketchy in view of past private service—many points will be left off the map, at least to begin with, and flights will be fewer in number. Army air heads are worried by the fact that their pilots are young and inexperienced for the most part when it comes to this kind of flying and are starting at a bad time of year. Three were immediately killed enroute to posts in Idaho and Utah.

The cancellation order was vaguely worded, left room for new private contracts if they are demanded and are necessary. It seems certain, in that case, that the subsidy system is to be discarded, that the fixed price basis will prevail, that smaller concerns will be given a break in obtaining contracts.

Yes, business is better. And the curve is holding stubbornly to its upward trend. Mainstay of the jump is still the automobile industry's spectacular recovery—and spectacular is the word. Every fresh report coming from the motor centers is more encouraging than the last. Unfilled orders for both trucks and cars are zooming. Ford and General Motors alone are reported to be at least a quarter of a million orders behind. And other industries are racing along with the auto makers. In the department stores, according to the last announcement, the cash registers are ringing merrily, with an average national gain of 25 per cent in dollar volume over last year. The chemical industries, which survived 1933 in good shape, are continuing their advance now, with glass, textiles, paper, etc., finding good markets and stable prices. The most recent Department of Commerce survey shows steel output higher, business activity better, commodity prices on the rise, stock and bond prices up and general betterment all along the line.

Discontinuance of CWA, which has employed 4,000,000 people—including teachers, artists, street cleaners, insect eliminators, a poet or two and about every possible classification of workers—is beginning and will naturally react unfavorably on business. But leaders hope for the best—and, what more, seem really to expect it.

There will be no Nobel peace prize for 1933. Reason: In many parts of the world war is Germany is the center of European troubles. The way the wind blows was shown by the note the great powers sent her recently, saying "hands off Austria." It looks as if, in case Hitler starts trouble, everyone will gang up on Germany and bring war to a quick and definite ending. U. S. stand will doubtless be strict neutrality. Wilson's brave, tragic and futile effort to save a world bent on self-destruction is still too fresh in the American mind to bear repetition now.

THE MORE, THE MERRIER — BUT WORSE

Recent news bulletins indicate the enlargement of four of the world powers' naval units.

The French Chamber of Deputies naval committee approved a project to build a 26,000 ton man of war, sister ship to the Dunkerque, now under construction. At about the same time two new submarines and a torpedo destroyed were ordered built.

The admiralty of Great Britain has called for the building of four cruisers and twenty other vessels in that empire's 1934 program.

It is predicted Italy might also enter the international ship-building program with the construction of a 25,000 ton battleship in order to keep up with France's sea-going spree.

The United States Senate has already passed a naval construction bill and has sent same back to the House, calling for more ships.

The popularity of naval enlargement is unlimited. If the present trend continues there is little doubt that a stopping place must develop sometime. Whatever might be the nature of this final outcome is highly prophesy but the termination might be very bad.

Mr. J. F. Gross of City View Home Demonstration Club in Wichita county cans for her own family and for her doctor's family. He is a skilled physician, she is a skilled canner. They exchange work.

Sam Rubenstein is a Washington county farmer who never knew what terracing was until he was induced by a neighbor to let the county agent help him terrace one of his farms in 1933. Now he has his entire tract of 400 acres terraced.

Vaccinating lambs against sore mouth using the vaccine developed by the Sonora Experiment Sub-Station is fast becoming a common practice in Tom Green county, the county agent reports. A total of 12,5000 doses was ordered in January by ranchers.

Curing 55 gallons of pickles from cucumbers grown on a terrace top in the cotton patch. Mrs. W. T. Lewis of Hearon Demonstration Club in Lamar county has sweet and sour pickles, cucumber rings and relish for home use, and a ready sale for all the surplus.

Sherman—"The canning of 892 containers of vegetables, fruits and meats reduced our 1933 food purchases to sugar, coffee, teas, spices and fresh fruits," says Mrs. V. P. Gilliam, 4-H pantry demonstrator of Hebron Home Demonstration Club. Included in the canned products are snap beans, English peas, kraut, green pepper, corn, lima beans, tomatoes, squash, carrots, relishes, fried chicken, boned chicken, barbecued chicken, roast, steak, stew, chili, pork roast, ribs, and sausage, well as a variety of preserves, jellies, fruits, and fruit juices, according to the report of Miss Mattie Wilroy, home demonstration agent of Grayson county.

The canned products are valued at $204.10. In addition Mrs. Gilliam has 750 pounds of cured meat, lard, Irish potatoes and pumpkins stored.

She built in her cellar 60 feet of shelving on which to store her products. During the year she has assisted, or passed on information to 7 women in cooperation with the Grayson County Home Demonstration Council Expansion program. The Hebron Club was organized in the spring of 1932 and ten steam pressure cookers and four sealers have been bought in that vicinity since then.

Terracing will proceed in Navarro county in as big a way as ever this year, the county agent pointing out that he has trained farmers to help others run the lines.

Amarillo—According to Mrs. E. G. Atkinson's sales tickets from the home demonstration club market, which is open two and one-half hours at the City Auditorium at Amarillo every Saturday morning, she has sold $29.72 worth of her products during the past three months.

Mrs. Atkinson is a member of the River Road Home Demonstration Club in Potter county and has become vitally interested in the club market. One day she remarked that she had worked for a salary most all of her life and she missed that salary check coming every month, and that she was going to do her best to build up a market trade. She received $13.75 from cakes, $7.45 from yeast rolls, $1.15 from cinnamon rolls and $6.67 from eggs.

Since Mrs. Atkinson started selling her products on the market, she has received standardization papers from the A and M College Extension Service on plum preserves and yeast rolls ready for baking.

Gollad—Having to dig up old cotton production records has been turned to good advantage by Gollad county farmers who tell the county agent they are learning more about the business side of their operations than they ever knew before. They have found out that their past guesses on arrearage and production have been wide of the mark many times, and that estimates may be 10 per cent to 15 per cent wrong. Small well-worked fields have been discovered to be the best paying ones. By popular reputation the river bottom farms have been the best cotton producers, but many comparatively infertile upland cotton fields well manured and cultivated and planted to good seed are showing even better yields. The best single cotton field in the county is not in the river bottom but in the north part of the black upland section. Its average yield of lint is easily 100 pounds per acre better than the river section land, says K. J. Edwards, county agent. The cotton campaign will lead to more farm accounting by farmers, he predicts.

THUMBS DOWN ON THE OIL BOOTLEGGER

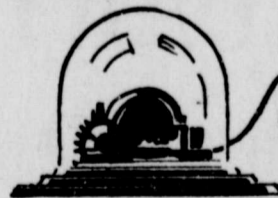

Sinclair Dealers Are Driving Out Oil Bootleggers With the New Tamper-Proof Can

Do you want some other motorist's crank case drainage poured into your engine when you've ordered a reputable brand of motor oil? Are you satisfied with an inferior oil when you've paid good money for a high quality product?

Authorities estimate that as much as 25 per cent of all motor oil sold today is "bootleg"---cheap, shoddy stuff masquerading as some famous brand.

Sinclair dealers have adopted a device for fighting this oil bootlegging---the new Sinclair Tamper-Proof Motor Oil can.

These cans are sealed at the refinery. In serving you the Sinclair dealers open them before your very eyes. This oil is positively Sinclair Oil, free from all contamination. This extra service costs YOU absolutely nothing.

"Who was the woman here that day, Fletcher?" It was Cardigan questioning now.
"The woman?" The servant stared blankly. "What woman? I don't recall any woman visitor."
"Perhaps it was Choo Choo Train," Peter continued, ignoring the man's reply. "She came here often, didn't she?"
Fletcher hesitated, apparently searching his mind. "I can't be sure," he said. "She may have been here that day. She did come here every once in a while."
Kilday snorted. "Every once in a while! Why she was here nearly every day, wasn't she?"
"No, sir." The man glanced first at the detective, then at Cardigan, uncertainly. "That is the truth," he volunteered. "Of course I know

"Then What Are You Trying to Hide?"

you gentlemen are aware of Mr. Franklin's ah—" he groped for a word—"ah—connection, with the actress, but just the same, she did not come here as often as you might expect. They maintained separate apartments, and I believe Mr. Franklin visited her there."

"Did she have a key to this place?" Peter asked next.

The man nodded.
"Then perhaps she could have come here yesterday, or the day before, without your knowledge."

"Possibly," Fletcher shrugged. "But it doesn't sound plausible, sir. I was here all the time. I think I should have known it, if she had been here."

Peter sat astride of a chair, facing the man. His lean brown fingers drummed a tattoo against his knee, in time to his racing thoughts. For the moment he seemed to have forgotten the man he was questioning. "Who else had a key to this place, Fletcher?" he demanded.

"I—I beg your pardon, sir?" The question evidently had caught the servant off balance. But he had heard the question, clearly enough, for after a long interval of hesitation, he answered. "If there are any other keys, sir, I don't know who has them."

"There have been a number of other women in Franklin's life," Peter continued evenly. "A great many, before Choo Choo, and probably some since. How long has it been since one of these women visited your master here, Fletcher?"

"I think," the servant replied slowly, "that Mr. Franklin was very much in love with Miss Train, sir. I don't believe there have been any other women he has cared for, recently, except," he added apologetically, "Miss Carmody, of course."

The novelist puffed thoughtfully on his cigarette and studied the man before him through the pale cloud of expelled smoke. "You're very careful how you word it, Fletcher," he observed. "I notice you say nothing about any women who may have been in love with Mr. Franklin, regardless of how he felt in the matter. It isn't always easy to break off a love affair with a woman, even for a person of Jim Franklin's accomplishments along that line. Perhaps there has been a woman answering this description who has called here recently?"

"Not—not that I can recall, Mr. Cardigan."

"How about phone calls? Has any woman been calling here repeatedly, in the past few days?"

"There have been many calls, of course," Fletcher faltered. "But I couldn't tell you who they were from. Miss Train, yes, and Miss Carmody. If there have been others, I couldn't say who they were."

"But there were others."
"Possibly. I really couldn't answer yes or no." The man's manner had grown less reluctant now.

"Have you ever seen this before, Fletcher?" In his palm Cardigan extended the revolver found in the rectory garden.

The servant made no move to touch it. "No, sir. I don't know much about guns."

"But this one belonged to Mr. Franklin! Surely you've seen it before."

"I didn't know he had a gun, sir. I had never seen it. I think there must be some mistake."

"He probably kept it in a drawer in the bedroom, or in his desk," Peter suggested.

"If he had, I should have known it, Mr. Cardigan," the man insisted.

WEDDING MARCH MURDER—

 "I've never seen it before. I'm sure there's been some mistake."

Peter rose abruptly. "That's all, I think," he said. But he paused with one hand on the door, for a final question. "Who has been here since yesterday evening? Anyone?"
 "No, sir. Not since you left last night."

"He's not telling us all he knows," growled Kilday after the door had closed behind them.

"I'm sure of that," the novelist agreed. "But why? I don't think Fletcher had anything to do with Franklin's murder. After all, he's only a servant. Where would the motive be?"

"I couldn't see a motive for Webster Spears at first," declared the sergeant. Then he shook his shoulders wearily. "This case is giving me the willies," he complained. "I'll be suspecting you, next. Well, what do you think now? There were no new leads there, and I've got to see the district attorney right after lunch. If I don't have something, it'll be just too bad."

"And yet," the novelist answered slowly, "we know that the murderer carried Franklin's revolver to the church yesterday afternoon. That is certain. The simplest sort of logic convinces us that it must have been one of his intimate friends. No one else could have had access to it. The gun must have been taken within the past few days—preferably yesterday. If the crime had been planned far in advance, I find it hard to believe that the murderer would have chosen the church as the scene for his crime. It seems clear that no one could have taken it without Fletcher's knowledge, and we find him reluctant to talk. He had no motive, so it must have been some one for whom he has a feeling of sympathy or regard—some one he is willing to take some risk to shield. Who could that be?"

"Another woman, eh?" Kilday paused on the steps. "A former mistress, that the servant liked better than he did Choo Choo."

"That sounds reasonable," Peter agreed. "Or else it was a new mistress. Franklin never had the reputation of being exceptionally constant in his loves."

"Getting back to your woman in blue," muttered the sergeant. "Everything leads back to her. But then, what about young Spears? What do you think of my theory concerning him now?"

"It's your question, you answer it," Peter declared wearily. "I'll admit you've built up a very convincing case against him. It has just one flaw. What could he have been doing with Jim Franklin's revolver? They weren't intimate friends. How could he have obtained possession of it?"

"That isn't so hard as you seem to think. Callis Shipley probably obtained it and passed it on to him. I agree with you on one point. I don't think the blow that killed Franklin could have been delivered by a woman. But that doesn't let this girl out—nor the woman in blue, either, if they were two different persons. If we can only prove this girl passed that gun on to Spears, we'll have a case pinned on him that will convince any jury. "But the only man who can help us find her is Fletcher, and he won't talk," added the sergeant grimly.

"There's one other chance," Cardigan disagreed with him. "The fellow was positive he'd never seen the revolver before. If he was telling us the truth, perhaps Franklin kept it at his office. Let's go and see."

Milo Dunbar admitted them to his private office without delay. "I hope you gentlemen have some progress to report," he began, after seating them. "According to the papers, it's beginning to look like a political crime. If Jim was killed over this magistrate investigation, then the governor—"

"He wasn't," Sergeant Kilday interrupted him bluntly. "I don't think Dan Bullis had anything to do with it, except, possibly, to shield the woman in the case. He probably has to do that, because that woman overheard his conversation with Franklin. If he identifies her, she can tell what she knows, and it's probably plenty. But we think maybe we can find the woman without any help from Bullis."

"Good. As I told you yesterday, if there's any way I can help you—"

"There is, Mr. Dunbar. We want you to identify the revolver that Mr. Franklin kept in his desk drawer."

Milo Dunbar took the weapon Kilday extended, and examined it carefully. "I'm afraid I can't be of much help on that score, Sergeant. I didn't even know Jim had a gun."

"He bought that two years ago," Kilday pointed to the serial number stamped on the weapon. "We keep the registration of all guns sold. There can't be any doubt about that being his. We're anxious to find out where he kept it."

"Of course," Dunbar agreed. "Jim could have kept a dozen guns in his office without my knowledge. Perhaps his secretary could help us. I'll see."

Before he could touch the button on his desk, Peter interrupted him. "Not yet," he cautioned. "I want to know something about his secretary, first. Is she young—attractive?"

The attorney shrugged. "Passably so. I hadn't noticed. I'll call her, and let you judge for yourself."

"Don't tell her who we are," the novelist cautioned. "Make some excuse to talk to her, without mentioning the revolver. It is barely possible she may be the lady in blue we are looking for. She certainly would have had an excellent opportunity to remove the weapon if it was kept in his desk."

The girl was called.

"I wish you'd get me Mr. Franklin's file of unanswered mail, Miss Wilson," said Dunbar. "I shall need it, in straightening out his affairs."

"Not the girl in blue, obviously," declared Cardigan, after she had left. Miss Wilson was attractive, and in her early twenties, but was decidedly a brunette. "Call her back, Mr. Dunbar. Let's ask her about the revolver."

But the girl could not remember ever having seen the gun, although she was familiar with Franklin's affairs, and had frequent access to his desk. "When he is out of the city," she explained, "it is often necessary for me to find papers in his desk. I'm sure I would have noticed it, if the gun had been there. It wasn't."

"How about the safe?"
 "Only Mr. Franklin and Mr. Dunbar had access to the private section of the safe. It might have been there, without my knowledge, of course," she admitted.

"He might have kept it in his private drawer there," Dunbar volunteered. "The one you examined last night. But he was the only person who could have taken it from there, and your point is that some one else procured the gun without his knowledge. That being true, it couldn't have been there. He must have kept it at his apartment, Cardigan."

That seemed to be the logical answer. Then Fletcher must have seen the gun before, must have recognized it, but refused to admit it. Who was he protecting? How was the servant involved in the murder of his master? The more he revolved the question in his mind, the more certain Peter became that the woman in blue was the key to the crime, and that Fletcher, if he could be made to talk, could reveal her identity. He could not share Kilday's conviction that the case against Webster Spears lacked only substantiating proof.

"Just like every other trail we've hit," Kilday complained, as they headed back to his office. "A blind alley. Dan Bullis and Fletcher are the only two who can identify that woman for us, but neither one of them will talk."

"We'll find her," Peter reassured him. "We've got to find her. It seems to me that, one way or another, she supplied the motive for this crime."

Kilday stopped and laughed aloud. "Why didn't I think of that before?" he asked, and then, not waiting for the question on Peter's lips, continued. "That sedan parked in front of Spears' last night was a Cadillac and it belonged to Callis Shipley. Did you notice its color? Was it green?"

"No good," declared Peter. "I had thought of that, but unless Bullis was deliberately trying to throw us off the track, the woman in blue could not have been Callis Shipley. You forget she never left the church at that time. She returned to the front. She was one of the bridesmaids and was in the church when the crime was discovered, only a few minutes later."

The sergeant meditated on this. "That's right, of course. But did Bullis tell us the truth? Was there a green Cadillac at all? That may be a detail out of his own imagination, simply to throw us off the track."
