HERE and THERE

By

A RECENT trip carried your humble servant into the homeland of that one time highly tooted Louisianan, Huey P. Long, known more prominently today as the great "Kingfish", but to the people of New Orleans as the "Crayfish".

I was highly impressed with the ungrateful appreciation the majority of New Orleans people have for their former governor and present Senator. It is surprising to note how such an unpopular individual can maintain his existence, let alone a high political position.

It is no uncommon occurrence to pick up a morning paper and turn to the editorial page to find a roasting editorial on the "Crayfish" with a most appropriate cartoon accompanying the editorial.

Abe Shushan, was at one time one of Long's leading henchmen. He rose from obscurity as a shoe store clerk to head standard bearer for the political boss and likewise to political obesity. Shushan recently erected his own monument, in the form of a most exquisite and impressive air-port, one of the finest on the continent, no doubt. The beautiful structure is completely fitted throughout with modernistic furnishings, mural decorations in oils adorn the spacious lobby.

Abe Shushan did one unusually smart thing when he ordered the construction of the New Orleans air-port for which he should be credited with a great deal of forethought. He stamped his name on every conceivable part of the buildings and premises from letters in electric lights above the hangers to letters in inlaid tile on the floors of the buildings. His name even found its way to the almost innumerable lamp posts that surround the airway depot. The Shushan air-port cost some $3,000,000 and it is estimated that it would take a quarter of a million dollars to remove the name Shushan from the spots where the name is now found.

The name of Long and Long's political cohorts will live "long" in the minds of New Orleans and Louisiana people.

Whether Texans know much about Senator Long or not, they may be assured of one thing, that southern Louisiana is blessed with the finest highways any tourist should like to travel. On the other hand this fact alone is partially responsible for the heavy bonded indebtedness hanging over Texas neighboring state.

Georgia's bright leaf tobacco crop this year brought farmers more than $5,000,000 in cash.

Local CWA Force to Remain Idle Sixteen Days Effective Yesterday By Order of Federal Government

A telegram received by County Administrator Fred G. Prewitt on Thursday reads as follows: "All work under C. W. A. will be stopped at midnight tonight. Relief work previously announced to be started on April 2 will not be started on that date. No relief work program will be started earlier than April 16. Inform public officials and applicants that any future program will be strictly a relief program and not an employment program. You are instructed to investigate the eligibility of every person on your rolls for direct relief. You will extend direct relief to those of proven need."

Commenting on the program which will be started later in this month Mr. Prewitt explained that the basis of future work will be absolute need. For example if the needs of a man are $18.00 per month and he is a common laborer he will be allowed to work only the number of hours necessary to earn $18.00. Only those who are proven to need relief will be allowed to work. Those who have already signed up need not sign up again as all those on the roll are now being investigated.

All work will be paid for in groceries supplies and cash. Two-thirds in groceries and supplies and one-third in cash.

Ireland Oil Well Will Be Spudded In Sunday With Special Program

Pugh and Pace Doyle No. 1, oil well, located two and one half miles northwest of Ireland, will be spudded in at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon April 1 in an elaborate christening ceremony.

D. D. Grubb, mayor of Ireland, will act as master of ceremonies. Dr. M. W. Lowrey, mayor of Gatesville and Bill Lemons, mayor of Hamilton, will speak briefly. Hon. Arthur Eidson of Hamilton and Hon. R. B. Cross of Gatesville will be the principal speakers.

Miss Phillis Pugh of Oklahoma City, assisted by Miss Beverley Chamlee of Gatesville and Miss Maurine Register of Hamilton, will christen the well.

Much interest has been shown in Gatesville and Hamilton as a producing well will mean much to the two cities.

Fifty-cents Sale Will Extend a Week Longer For Benefit of Payday

Due to numerous requests, coming chiefly from the salaried people of this vicinity, the Half-Price Subscription Sale, inaugurated by the Coryell County News will be extended one week longer to close definitely on April 7. This step is being made for the reason that many of the laboring and salaried people in and around Gatesville will have the opportunity of participating in the sale whereas these same people could not do so until after April 1, the customary pay-day in this section.

The definite closing date of the subscription offer is April 7 and present subscribers are reminded that renewal subscriptions may be made at the fifty-cents price prior to that date but later the regular $1.00 price will be in effect.

J. A. Fletcher has been having a bit of hard luck, having been confined to his home on account of illness, but he's out again now just in time to enjoy this beautiful spring weather. Mrs. Frank Kelso is one of the busiest women I ever saw, and a lot of people should be grateful to her for those "eatables" she provides them. Mrs. Archie Gartmen and Jerry Bob seem to enjoy the company of each other, and why not, they are not only mother and son but also enjoyable folk for anyone to be around. Miss Ora Saunders surely should get an artistic inspiration out of Spring 1934; it won't be long until she will be spending much of her time with her paints and brushes in the fields of blue bonnets. Joe Pugh and son, from Ireland, are real oil-enthusiasts, so much so that it should make a lot of us want to get the fever. Mrs. Reed Powell and James Reed, two big "cronies", always having a big time together.

Elwood Young Wins First Prize; Elizabeth Lindenburg Second in News' Letter - Writing Contest

The many manuscripts have been carefully read and analyzed by the three judges in the All-School Letter Writing Contest which was opened by the Coryell County News February 22 and closed March 17. Much time was taken by the judges before rendering their individual decisions and the general report was that the letters were indicative of much study and thought on the part of the writers.

The News found the response to the contest very gratifying; letters have been received from all parts of the county, and feels it an opportunity to announce in this issue winners in the contest, as follows:

First Prize
Elwood Young, Gatesville High School.

Second Prize
Elizabeth Lindenburg, Coryell City.

Honorable Mention
Bonnie Mae Upton, Izona.
Alma Louise Murray, Gatesville.
Geneva Barr, Flat.
Inez Rogers, Gatesville.
Joe Holcomb, The Grove.
Millie Summers, Jonesboro.

The silver loving-cup will be presented to the Gatesville High School, by virtue of the first prize letter being contributed by Elwood Young, student of that school.

The first prize of $10.00 goes to Elwood Young; second prize of $5.00 to Miss Elizabeth Lindenburg, and ten prizes of $1.00 each will go to each of the persons named above receiving honorable mention.

The prize winners are requested to come in person to the Coryell County News office to receive their respective awards, now awaiting them.

Contest Judges

Mesdames J. P. Kendrick and J. O. Brown and Mr. C. E. Alvis Jr. were the three contest judges chosen by the News to pass on the letters, all of whom were highly faithful to this duty and not only rendered a great assistance to the newspaper and its enterprise but fulfilled this responsibility in every fair and impartial manner.

Thomson Grocery Site Of Robbery on Monday Night; Vandal Escapes

The Thomson Wholesale Grocery Company building was the site of a burglary here on Monday night of this week.

The robber attempted to enter two doors on the west side and finally made entry through a door on the north side of the building.

Thomsons had just received a carload of soap and had stacked it against the door through which the robber made entry thus he was not able to work through the soap to any other merchandise. Evidently the burglar had no use for soap because none was taken.

After the robber had piled thirty cases of granulated soap outside the building, nightwatchman Oley Beard surprised the vandal and drove him away.

It is estimated that the damage done amounted to about $50.

THE WEDDING MARCH MURDER

by Monte Barrett

Copyright, 1933, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co. WNU Service.

Somehow his hold had been broken. For the first time a feeling of hopelessness engulfed Peter. He was very tired, almost at the end of his strength. His opponent must be tired, too. With the energy of despair he flung himself into a new attack. His arms seemed light, like cushions that he was pushing forward with tremendous effort. Of what use were blows like that? He must hit harder! Harder! Harder!

Still his blows seemed only to float through space. From somewhere, far off, something was beating at him, steadily. Was it the throb in his head? Or were they blows? They no longer seemed to hurt. He seemed to be sinking, sinking—now he could just drift away, comfortably, into forgetfulness. He tried to remember dazedly, why he should keep on struggling. There was some reason for it, but it kept eluding him. Then a blow in the abdomen hurt.

Once more he remembered. He was fighting—fighting for his life with Jim Franklin's murderer. They were on their feet again. He could not remember getting up. But here they were. That blurred weaving shadow was the man he had come here to get. He knew he must end it soon, or he would lack the strength to end it, ever.

Once more Peter dove at his opponent, putting all his ebbing power into the tackle. Together they tottered backward, but the wall broke their fall. Dimly Peter heard the crash of breaking glass. It seemed far away. A rush of cooler air cleared the mists from his mind. His enemy's shoulder had shattered the window pane.

One last effort now. Peter lunged again, almost missed. His fingers clutched at the fellow's coat. But he was falling. He tried to catch himself, but his fingers lacked strength to grip the rough wool of his antagonist's clothing. Falling—falling! The air was crisp and cool.

Then he remembered the broken window. In his last desperate effort to tackle the murderer, he had missed, and lunged through the window. If only he could have clung to the fellow's coat, he might have saved himself.

Rough wool. Tweed. Curious how the texture of the garment should have impressed itself on his mind in that last instant.

Then he was struck one last terrific blow.

Even then, right at the end, he was thinking of tweed.

CHAPTER XII

Another Arrest.

SERGEANT KILDAY discovered that both Callis Shipley and Rylie Carmody were missing, at about the time Peter was struggling in Franklin's darkened office with his unknown assailant. Rylie's disappearance was reported by the angry detective whom he had given the slip, in the country.

The disappearance of the girl was discovered when Kilday sent for her in the hope that Daniel Bullis might identify her as the woman in blue he had seen in the rector's study with Franklin.

"Has she gone with young Carmody or is she afraid that Bullis might identify her?" pondered the detective. He quickly abandoned the latter theory, as he realized she had not known he intended confronting her with the politician. He was more than ever anxious to find the missing couple when he learned what had happened to Peter Cardigan. The novelist had been found unconscious, on the sidewalk in front of the Greer building. Nevertheless, it was the following morning before Rylie Carmody was located at his home, to which he had returned during the night. Kilday was resolved to place the young man under arrest, convinced that his flight had had some connection with Cardigan's injury.

Of course, this meant that Spears was innocent. How else account for what obviously had occurred at Franklin's office? Who but the murderer would have hurled Cardigan through the window? Certainly that was not Webster Spears, who had been under arrest at the time. Callis Shipley lacked the strength for such a feat. But Rylie Carmody—He had not been entirely wrong in his surmises, then. If Rylie Carmody had not given his shadow the slip, things would have worked out differently, surely.

The sergeant was a determined man when he presented himself at the Carmody residence after being informed that his quarry had returned.

"I'm sorry," the butler declared.

"Mr. Carmody is ill. He can see no one."

"He'll see me," declared Kilday dourly. In his extended palm he exhibited his badge. "Take me to his room."

Rylie was sitting up in bed, several pillows propped behind his back. His left eye was discolored and swollen. One arm was bandaged above the wrist and the knuckles of the other hand were taped.

"Good morning, Sergeant. What brings you here so early in the morning?"

"I guess you know," was the laconic rejoinder. "You look as though you'd run into a buzz-saw."

Rylie raised his arm, the better to exhibit the bandage. "Had an accident," he explained.

"Oh, yeah?" The sergeant grinned mirthlessly. "An accident, eh? Automobile, I suppose?"

"Yes, I skidded on some loose gravel, and—"

"This was while you were trying to give my man the slip yesterday afternoon?"

The young man pretended not to understand.

The sergeant settled himself in a comfortable chair beside the bed and lighted a cigar. "So you gave us the slip, did you?" He puffed a time or two. "Well, I won't deny you kept half a dozen men busy last night, trying to find you. Caused us a lot of trouble. But I won't complain. You've helped us a lot in the solution of the murder."

"Helped you? Do you mean to say you've caught the murderer?"

"I can lay my hands on him, any time I please," the day asserted. "I know who he is, where he is and what he did last night. It isn't a mystery any more."

Young Carmody relaxed against the pillows.

"I suppose it's time to cheer," he said. "But what has last night got to do with it?"

"You ought to know." Kilday's eyes never left the young man's face.

"Me?"

"You killed Jim Franklin."

At first Rylie smiled. "You have a queer idea of humor," he said. Then he sat up straight. "Say, are you serious? Do you think I—why, man, you're out of your head!"

"You think so?" The sergeant

FEDERAL HIGHWAY WORK

(From the Fort Worth Star-Telegram)

Texas good roads enthusiasts are cheered by the news from Washington over the favorable report by the House Roads Committee on the Cartwright bill which continues the federal highway activities under PWA, with $400,000,000 authorized for highway construction next year. Strong representations were made on behalf of the Texas Good Roads Association when it was discovered, a few weeks ago, that although highways were included as an integral part of the public works recovery program last year, this object apparently was not included in the plans for next year. Col. Ike Ashburn of Houston, executive manager of the association, found sentiment among members of Congress strong enough at Washington to justify the prediction that, regardless of what legislative action may be taken, a workable appropriation for highway construction will be provided in the allocation of the more than one billion dollars which the President has asked for public works next year.

Highway construction is almost the ideal instrument of public works for promoting recovery. It is by far the largest class of projects in which labor, which means wages and employment, represents the major part of cost. Moreover, it produces an asset which is peculiarly adaptable to public service. In a great part of the country, highway building has an outstanding claim on the public works effort. This is especially true of Texas, and of the Southwest generally, where the need for roads is matched by the opportunity for building them at low cost with most of the expenditure going directly to providing employment.

From the Texas viewpoint, it would be a major calamity if highways should not be continued in the public works recovery program, or if the appropriation for this object should be materially curtailed. Highway building has contributed more to recovery in this State than any other measure of the New Deal with the sole exception of the cotton reduction plan. And the State and the Nation will have something to show for the road expenditures in future years.

All Federal Land Bank Loans to Be Settled in Bonds That are Salable

Houston, March 27—Albert C. Williams, General Agent of the Farm Credit Administration and President of the Federal Land Bank of Houston, announced Monday that, in accordance with the plan announced by Governor Wm. I. Myers of the Farm Credit Administration at Washington, D. C., the Federal Land Bank for itself and as Agent of the Land Bank Commissioner will now close loans in bonds of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, instead of in cash. The Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation was expressly organized to provide for the continuance of the farm debt refinancing activities initiated by the Farm Credit Administration last Spring, and the corporation may issue $2,000,000,000 of its bonds for that purpose.

Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation bonds are unconditionally guaranteed by the United States Government both as to principal and interest, and are "exempt from all Federal, State, municipal and local taxation, except surtaxes and estate, inheritance and gift taxes." In addition to the guarantee of the government, these bonds will have back of them the capital of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation which amounts to about $200,000,000, consolidated bonds of the Federal Land Banks issued in exchange for the bonds of the Corporation, and the mortgages accepted by the Land Bank Commissioner as security for loans. These bonds are lawful security for fifteen-day borrowing by member banks of the Federal Reserve system. They are also lawful investments for all trust, public and fiduciary funds of which the deposit or investment is under the authority or control of the Government. Bonds of the first issue are dated March 15, 1934, and bear interest at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum.

"The Federal Land Bank of Houston will continue to make every effort to expedite the consideration of applications and the closing of eligible loans of Texas farmers and stockmen," said Mr. Williams. "Land Bank loans and Commissioner's loans will be closed in the same manner as heretofore except the applicants and creditors must accept bonds instead of cash. The bonds will be issued in denominations of $100, $500, and $1000; however, amounts less than $100.00 will be disbursed in cash. In addition to provide for debts such as taxes which cannot be paid in bonds, cash covering the required amounts will be provided."

Applications which have been approved for loans by the Federal Land Bank and for the Land Bank Commissioner, but on which cash has not been paid out, as well as those loans approved by the bank in the future, will be financed on this basis. This arrangement in no way disturbs or alters the other provisions of the loans.

Mr. Williams stated that the bonds of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation are an attractive investment. It is expected that they will be quoted in all of the principal markets and will be as readily marketable as bonds of the United States Government. Holders who find it necessary to dispose of these bonds should not sell them without ascertaining their real market value.

Superintendent Woods Outlines Qualifications Of State Aid Teachers

The following is the ruling of the State Board concerning qualifications of teachers in rural aid schools as interpreted by State Superintendent Woods:

1. A minimum of two years' college training must be had by all beginning teachers in 1934-35. A beginning teacher is one who has not taught before regularly under contract.

2. The equivalent of two years' training is the completion of the sophomore year in college either by correspondence, extension, or resident work.

3. Teachers now employed in state aid schools may continue in service even though they do not have two years' college credit, provided they will complete work toward a degree each summer until two years of college work has been completed. Teachers now employed in schools other than state aid schools may contract to teach in state aid schools even though they do not have two years' college credit, provided they will complete work toward a degree each summer until two years' college work has been completed. If the state aid school is also a first-class affiliated school, the rules for teachers in such affiliated schools must be applied to the teachers of the state aid schools also.

4. Teachers not measuring up to the certificate requirement may continue to teach, provided their certificate legally entitle them to teach in the grades wherein they are employed, and provided further that the holder of a second class certificate shall not be eligible to teach in rural aid schools.

5. In applying for work teachers should ask to teach in subjects in which they have had special training.

"Bombshell" With Jean Harlow and Lee Tracy At Palace Next Sunday

For the first time Jean Harlow and Lee Tracy—two of the picture world's most colorful personalities—are starred together in "Bombshell", the picturization of Hollywood film life which opens Sunday at the Palace Theatre.

Directed by Victor Fleming, veteran master of camera beauty, "Bombshell" present one of the most unusual and hilariously humorous pictures that have come out of Hollywood.

Jean Harlow as Lola Burns is a sensational and glamorous film star who has been famous by the genius of her press agent, Lee Tracy.

It is this publicity that plunges Miss Harlow into all of the woes that beset her throughout the action of the screen story—her headline love affairs, her revolts with the studio executives, her worries with her trouble-making family and the additional woes heaped upon her by movie-crazed fanatics.

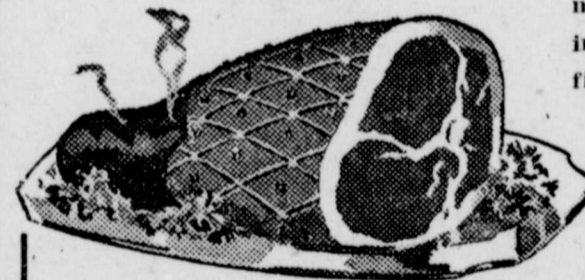

It is a made to order part for Miss Harlow who gives it all the punch and vitality which film-goers have come to expect of the heroine of "Red Dust" and "Hold Your Man". Tracy, as Space Hamton, her publicity director, is as dynamic and speedy as ever. It is nothing less than a stroke of casting genius which placed these two sparkling personalities together in one picture.

The supporting cast is uniformly excellent, featuring such competent players as Frank Morgan, Franchot Tone, Pat O'Brien, Una Merkel, Ted Healy, Ivan Lebedeff, Isobell Jewell, Louise Beavers, Leonard Carey, Mary Forbes, C. Aubrey Smith and June Brewster.

Two-fifths of Brazil's new coffee crop is to be destroyed.

Isn't it true that people are hard to please? We have had reasons for liking and disliking the month of March. Some of us come to school with a mad look on our faces because the hurrying wind has blown us almost to pieces, others come with new bonnets and caps, and even the little boys have been caught with their toes peering out from their overalls. It has been said that March blows everything but a saxophone but we haven't stopped to realize that it is blowing winter merrily on its way and bringing behind it the lovely spring. Now, why did we fuss at March—'Twasn't such a bad month!

County Meet

School was dismissed last Thursday at noon in order that students and teachers might attend the County Meet. Unfortunately, we didn't get what we went after but somebody has to lose and we can certainly be good losers.

IN MEMORY OF LITTLE
W. I. YOUNG JR.

In the sweet calm solitude of the early morning hours of March 11, 1934, little Irving Young Jr., fell asleep in the divine arms of love and mercy and went to be with Jesus ever more.

Little Jr. was born October 15, 1931 and departed this life March 11, 1934. His short stay in this world was only two years, four months and twenty four days, but he left an impress of lasting love that will live through out the ages.

Little W. I. Jr. was the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Irvin Young. His precious going has left a sad vacancy that can not be filled and aching hearts that can not be healed.

Our precious darling thou art gone
To live beyond the skies,
While our hearts ache and long
For the sparkle of your eyes.
We miss the patter of your precious feet
Your trusting love so true.

We long for the sound of your precious voice
Oh! mam ma where are you?
Oh daddy longs for that gentle touch

That loved embrace so true
And mother longs for that baby hug
That none can give but you.
Oh grandpa's heart is broken
He longs for your baby love,
But he knows his precious darling

Now lives in the mansions above.
Your little life was sunshine
To guide us on each day
Leaving a train of sweet memories
That bekon us over the way.

He was an unusal child, finding love and beauty in all things, expressing love and affections for every one, ever entrenching his little life in the deep wells of love and sweet memories of all he met, leaving a train of heavenly childish thoughts never to be forgotten.

Like a butterfly he flitted about the home, and from the arms of one loved one to another he ever wended his precious way, spreading love and sunshine with his sweet baby talk, which is heard no more.

This little bud of love and sunshine was plucked from the walks of men early in life, only to be transplanted in the heavenly fields of joy, there to bloom according to Gods divine will.

Though our heart is broken and our life crushed, we know he is a gift most precious from Gods own hand, a little light that shone in our pathway making sweet and beautiful the passing days.

Oh! how we wanted to keep him, but God wanted him too. The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away. Blessed is the name of the Lord.

In the going of this precious baby it seems that the joyful melodies of our once happy lives have dipd away on the slow mournful chords of a heart broken cadence, but may the mighty pinions of God's eternal love on which we were lifted to such majestic heights of love and joy, by his sweet presence, gently float us down to earth again, leaving in our soul a quiet note of reconciliation to Gods divine will.

May God in his unwasted fullness richly bless and comfort the heartbroken ones in this sad hour.
Just as God breathed the resurrection touch of spring on the works of his own hand and made to live again that which seemed to be dead, just so in his own appointed time will he call forth little Jr., alive for ever more.

HOWARD COMPTON

WEDDING MARCH MURDER—

was elaborately casual. "Crazy idea, eh?"

"Listen, it isn't half as crazy as that story you just told me about an auto accident. I know where you got that black eye. I know where those bruises came from. And you weren't even in an automobile, young fellow. The things I know are going to send you to the chair."

Kilday edged forward, the hardness of his face no harder than the bleak stare of his eyes. "I was on to you from the first. If Cardigan had listened to me, then, he'd be here with me today, instead of where he is. But you're not going to pull the wool over my eyes any more."

"You killed Jim Franklin. Whether you did it to prevent him from marrying your sister, after everything else had failed, or for another reason. We'll discuss that later. We know you quarreled with him in the study of the church, within a half-hour of the time he was murdered. We know that Webster Spears told you about Choo Choo Train that very afternoon, at lunch. Spears is under arrest. He admits he told you, in the hope that you would stop the wedding. He even admitted, this morning, that he was the author of that anonymous message your father received. He admits everything except the murder itself, and the phone call to Choo Choo Train. Perhaps that was your work. Oh, Spears has tried to protect you, but he won't any longer. Spears has talked, and he'll keep on talking."

"Webster Spears?" Rylie's tone was incredulous. "Did he say that?"

"It doesn't really matter what Spears says." Kilday brushed aside the interruption with an impatient wave of the hand. "We've got the goods on you, anyway. After your quarrel with Franklin you returned to the study, entering by the rear door, so that you wouldn't be observed. He was standing in the sacristy door, with his back toward you. You seized the knife that was hanging on the wall and stabbed him twice. Then you locked the door, wiped the blade off on the curtain and replaced the knife in its sheath, first being careful to obliterate your finger-prints on the handle."

"Franklin had a revolver in his pocket and attempted to draw it, during the struggle. You wiped it clean of finger-prints, too, and then thought of leaving Franklin's own thumb-mark on the weapon. You pressed it into the dead man's hand, then flung it into the bushes of the garden, in the rear. After that you left the way you had come, but you couldn't go into the church because you had not had time to dress for the wedding. You were still in tweeds. So you crossed the street and waited in your car until after the crime was discovered."

"You have already told us what you did then. After taking Callis Shipley home, you returned to the church. You knew Franklin had been murdered. To protect yourself, you first said that the girl had told you. You knew she couldn't know Franklin was dead unless she was implicated in the affair. When you saw you were trapped, you tried to wriggle out of it, and the girl tried to help you. I don't know. It might have worked if it had not been for last night."

"Last night?" Rylie Carmody stared fixedly at the detective. "You keep coming back to that. What about last night?"

"You want me to tell you, eh?" Kilday's gaze never wavered from the youth's face. "You were suddenly mighty anxious to escape the man who was following you, last night, weren't you? Because you had something to do that would bear watching."

"You were afraid there was something in Franklin's apartment that might identify you with the crime. You hadn't an opportunity to do it before, because we were watching you. You realized you were under suspicion. That heightened your anxiety and made you all the more eager to destroy that evidence, if it were in the apartment."

"So last night you made up your mind not to wait any longer. You decided to shake the detective and take your chances with Fletcher. And that's what you did. You had a lucky break when Fletcher went out for a couple of hours. But you couldn't find what you went after there and decided Franklin had kept it at his office."

"I don't know what you were after—yet. But I'll find out. Probably some evidence that connected this Shipley girl with the case. Or perhaps it connected you, or even young Spears with the crime. At any rate, that's where Cardigan out-guessed us both. It's too bad I didn't have more confidence in him. If I had, I'd have been with him last night, and he would be here, right now. Next time, I'll play his hunch, if there ever is a next time."

The detective scowled. "I don't understand how you caught him so completely off his balance. He was armed. But somehow or other you did. And in the struggle which followed, you knocked him out of the window. But not," he paused to glance significantly at Rylie's bandages, "not before he had put up an awful struggle. He left his mark on you."

"You gave our detective the slip. Why? Because you couldn't afford to be observed when you went to Franklin's apartment and office. You knocked Cardigan through the window, but not before he had left his mark on you. This accident story won't get you anywhere, Carmody."

"Suppose," replied the boy soberly, "that I can prove there really was an accident?"

"Do you have witnesses?"

"Not eye-witnesses, but I can produce the wrecked car. That should be pretty strong circumstantial evidence, as you call it."

Kilday puffed thoughtfully. "The wrecked car, eh? What time was this wreck?"

"About eight-thirty, or perhaps a quarter to nine, on a gravel road about ten miles from Westport."

"Where did you go? What did you do? How did you get back to town? What time was it then?" The sergeant shot his questions with staccato rapidity.

"I was stunned. I guess it was this blow on the head that did it." Rylie fingered the discolored eye gently. "I don't know how long I was 'out.' It was quite dark, I remember. The car had overturned and I had been thrown clear. I didn't realize, at first, that I had been unconscious. Then I looked at my watch. It was nine-thirty. That worried me, because I was supposed to meet some one at nine. And the last thing I remembered before the accident, I had had plenty of time."

"There was a farmhouse up the road about half a mile. I could see the lights. So I limped up there and asked for help. I telephoned Westport from there and got a car. Then I returned home."

"What time was it when you reached the farmhouse?"

"I don't know, exactly. It might have been about ten. Not much later, I'm sure."

The sergeant smiled—a slow unpleasant sort of smile in which there was no trace of mirth. "Pretty clever, Carmody, but it won't work. It was somewhere around four o'clock when you started for the country. About four-forty-five you lost the man who was following you. The accident occurred nearly four hours later, within thirty miles of the spot where you were last seen. It didn't take four hours to travel thirty miles—not at the rate you were going. Where were you all that time? What were you doing?"

Rylie hesitated. "I was just going for a ride. I wasn't going anywhere in particular."

"You said you had an appointment at nine. With whom?"

"That doesn't have anything to do with the case," the young man replied slowly. "I merely mentioned it to fix the time of the accident."

"You'll have to let me be the judge of what's important now," declared the sergeant gruffly. "Who were you going to meet, and where?"

The young man remained silent. "All right," declared Kilday. "I'll tell you. Your engagement was to go to Franklin's apartment. That's why it was necessary for you to give my man the shake first. He last saw you late in the afternoon. There is no record of your movements between then and the time you claim this accident occurred, near Westport. The fact is, after you had searched Franklin's apartment you went to his office, where you had the struggle with Peter Cardigan. Then you became frightened. You needed some means of accounting for your movements at that time. Besides," the sergeant leaned back and studied his man thoughtfully, "you were badly battered in that fight. You were going to have to explain those bruises. What better explanation could you find than an automobile accident?"

The King's business requires haste. Come, let us learn of His ways and walk in His paths. The study of the Bible will make you a better man or woman, a better boy or girl. There have always been those who doubt in what God has said; there have always been those who would point the finger of scorn. In spite of all of this, throughout the ages that have passed, the Word of God is a mighty force among men. It is truly an object of pity that some men's wisdom becomes so great that it attempts to dethrone the wisdom of the Almighty.

Be with us next Sunday at 10th and Saunders Streets in the following services:
