Gatesville All-Stars Drop Game to Strong Waco Soft-Ball Club

A club which ranks high in Waco softball circles came to Gatesville Saturday night and gave a team of All-Stars defeat by a score of 11 to 8.

The game was witnessed by some 500 spectators, the largest crowd ever to attend a game under the floodlights in Gatesville.

The local club managed to hold the visitors for the first four innings. Beginning the fifth with the score 4-4, the Waco Linen Supply team piled up enough tallies to score a final victory.

Gatesville's prize hitters lacked the usual ability to connect with the soft hide, and errors were numerous in the infield. Sasse and Ricketts, local pitchers, displayed complimentary hurling, giving the visitors but few actual hits.

Lineup

Gatesville: Franks, 1s; R. Jones, 3b; Mayhew, 2b; Ewing, 1b; Blackburn, cf; Laxson, lf; Olsen, c; Rogers, rf; Patterson, ls; Sasse, p.

FISHERMEN RETURN WITH PHOTOS TO PROVE BIG CATCH

For the benefit of disbelievers, actual photographs are on display here to prove one of the best fish yarns heard in "these parts" in many a day. To be more definite, the pictures are being shown at Mayes Studio.

Returning last Saturday morning, a fishing party composed of Judge Rob't W. Brown, C. C. Sadler, Dr. H. M. Haynes, L. S. Holmes, Byron Leaird Jr., Fred Prewitt and Ed Ray, Walker, "chow master," brought with them tales of great experiences.

The party spent three days fishing on the Sabinas river and Lake Don Martine in Mexico, camping on the falls of the river.

It is reported that the fishermen caught a fish-a-minute while casting their hooks over the falls. The catch included bass weighing about a pound each and cat of about five and six pounds. Several times two fish were caught on the same cast. Two Mexicans assisted each fisherman, one to bait the hook and one to take the fish off the line.

CORYELL MAN INVENTS MECHANICAL FARM DEVICE

Frank Beverly, Killeen, Route 3, has invented a windmill that does all the chores around the farm.

The windmill is constructed entirely of model T Ford parts. A generator charges six batteries, furnishing the light for his house barn, and chicken house. Another belt runs to the washing machine and does the washing for the family. Another belt hooks on to the wood saw and saws all the wood. Still another belt runs to the threshing machine that threshes all the grain on his farm and ranch. If the wind is too high and runs too fast, it automatically cuts itself off.

Mr. Beverly is the inventor of this, and is also inventor of a threshing machine that he uses. —Copperas Cove Crony.

LET'S BEAUTIFY

Much concern is being given to spring cleaning throughout the country, all of which is well founded. Nature is doing her part at this particular time of the year to beautify this old world of ours but without a little assistance from human hands she can't do all.

Throughout the cold rainy months landscape appearances are somewhat neglected and during that time when nature is rather dormant "we folk" sleep.

When nature, at her annual awakening, brings up weeds and unsightly sprouts along with the beauty of flowers and foliage, it is time for human-beings to wake up and get to work.

Now is the time for a thorough spring cleaning, in the interest of better health, safety and beauty.

A clean up campaign in Gatesville and other Coryell county towns is a splendid activity for which any civic club or similar organization may attain much credit. Someone must take the lead; once a group takes the initiative and gets the thing started the entire populace should be more than glad to join in.

The clearing of vacant property lots; cleaning of streets, parkings and gutters with a little re-painting and whitewashing will do untold wonders to the general appearance of any town or community.

The consideration of fire safety alone is worth the time and expense spent in such a project. It is interesting to note that in 1932 rubbish and litter alone caused a fire loss of over a million dollars in the United States.

A local clean-up campaign would be a good investment in saving public and private property and making this section a talked-about beauty spot in central Texas.

WHAT OF THE SOIL

Passage of the Bankhead bill which makes cotton acreage reduction compulsory regardless of what the farmers may have to say about it probably has done more than any other measure to make the farmers of Erath county and this entire section of the State to look into the agriculture situation. Immediately after the bill became a law, a plea was made by farmers and business men of the county to the Department of Agriculture not to be too severe when it came to cutting acreage in Erath.

The petition came after a survey of cotton production had been made. The survey showed that the average production in the county from 1928 through 1932 was 9,611 bales. The same study gave evidence to the fact that cotton acreage in the county has been slashed during the last few years.

It is evident, however, that reduction in acreage is not the whole cause of the cut production. Drought and other factors have figured in the reduction of the number of bales produced. But it seems that the main factor is the condition of the soil.

A brief examination of much of the soil in the county shows that it is not what it once was, that it is not what it should be. Reduction in acreage, government control of the farm, at least temporarily, is evident. This, it seems, gives the farmers an excellent opportunity to give some thought to soil improvement.—Stephenville Empire Tribune.

The manufacture of starch from sweet potato culls by a process recently evolved by Department of Agriculture scientists offers possibilities in a State like Texas which produces millions of bushels of that crop annually.

American Lubricator Co., Dallas; Fried Novelty Co., Houston; Jolly Box & Crate Co., Pharr, are new manufacturing corporations recently chartered.

WORLD FOREIGN COMMENT

"NEVER AGAIN will we discuss the problems of the Orient with western nations," emphatically declared Foreign Minister Koki Hirota in a recent address to prefectural Governors. Evidently the Japanese are somewhat put out by the hostile stand taken by France, England, and the U. S. on her "hands-off-China" policy. Only recently the French government issued a statement asking the Japanese to respect the Nine-Power Treaty and others regarding the territorial integrity of China.

The attitude of the President and Secretary Hull toward the recent Far Eastern situation should be commended. During the years 1931-1933 the blundering Stimson endeavored to arouse the moral indignation of the world against the Japanese while other powers whose interests in the Far East exceeds our cleverly utilized our unpopularity to advance their own interests. In short, we were suckers. At any rate, the President and Mr. Hull seem to have wisely decided that we shall not reassert the leadership in a world-wide crusade against the Japanese which our competitors found so profitable during the period of Mr. Stimson's public reprimands.

TODAY'S PAPER says that France is planning for a larger army, and intends to extend the term of training for conscripts. This is most certainly in line with developments preceding the World War. Of course, we are not predicting a World War in the immediate future, but, fourteen years before the Great War started rivalry in armaments was intense, say, in 1900. It was along this time that the British-German naval race started, and now the world has a naval race on its hands, possibly between Japan and the U. S. or France and Italy. Economic rivalry was intense during the twenty years before 1914; now the British Lion is roaring because British supremacy in the Yangtse Valley of China and in her colonial possessions is threatened because of Japan's desire to dominate the East and to compete in commerce for world supremacy. Also, economic rivalry in South America is growing between the European nations and Japan. Colonial ambitions will not figure in the next war unless it is fought in the Far East.

The military command in any army is always ready to start war scares in order to increase the strength of the army numerically—and also to bring about an increase in their own power and prestige. The Minister of War, who by the way in the great war hero of France, Marshal Pétain, proposes to increase the present term of compulsory service of one year to fifteen years. At the same time, France is building more forts, more airplanes, and more ships. The French most certainly dread the Germans more than the Germans dread them.

Three Fold Responsibility

Scientist, humanitarian, economist... we are bound to be all three. We are charged with keeping abreast with advances by a modern social order. We must exercise tact and sympathy. And we must keep the cost within the means of those whom we serve.

SOFTBALL SYMPTOMS

Doc Ray should get the credit for pitching his team to victory, together with the support accorded him by his mates. Sasse was up to the usual form but lacked the assistance of his outfielders. The Highway was due for a loss, hence they shouldn't feel bad over it.

Bob Arnold's bunch got into stride in their game with the Roundtable. It wasn't a set-up game by any means, regardless of the score indication, and Arnold should be glad to have this win. Ward's team had a slow time in starting against the State Friday night but ended up with an undisputed victory, completely blanking the State. The latter club has a better team than the results of the game indicated.

The Methodists took another defeat at the hands of the Fire-

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Seeking death by throwing herself from the summit of Lone Mesa, to escape dishonor, at the hands of a drunken desperado, Sonya Savarin allows herself to be rescued by her suddenly sobered and repentant attacker. The girl is a self-appointed physician to the Navajo Indians, living on an Arizona sheep ranch with her brother, Serge, his wife, Lila, and their small daughter, Babs. For a year she has been engaged to Rodney Blake, wealthy New Yorker, but her heart is with the friendless Navajos and she evades a wedding.

CHAPTER III.—In the desert village, shopping, Sonya again meets the man whose advances she had repulsed on Lone Mesa. He tells her he bitterly regrets his action and has never had a minute's peace since that day. Sonya is affected, but unforgiving. She hears rumors of a border bandit "El Capitan Diablo," who crucifies his "double-crossers" and has a dire reputation as a despoiler and murderer, vaguely connecting him with her attacker.

CHAPTER IV.—Sonya pays a visit to Little Moon and finds her well on her way to recovery. On her return she rides to the top of Lone Mesa. There she again comes upon the strange young man, but she no longer fears him. When he reiterates his sorrow over his misconduct she indicates forgiveness and assures him a man can always change for the better.

CHAPTER IV

The Spots of the Leopard.

AT THE home ranch Sonya found two air-mail letters from Rodney Blake which completed her entire return to the commonplace. She smiled as she read them, and for the first time it seemed as if there might be a charm or two in the great city he depicted so colorfully.

She rode over to Chee wash to see Two Fingers and Little Moon the next day and found the Indian woman up, and about the simple matters of her hogan, her rug, and her family.

It gave the girl a thrill to see her so, the flush of joy that such vindication of her work always brought. She was poor as the goods of this world went, they were all fairly so, Serge and Lila and little Babs, but she felt very rich inside her, arrogantly rich, and she could smile up at the blue heavens with a secret sense of fellowship.

So she left her last instructions with the little family at the hogan, patted the cheek of the youngest round-eyed child, and rode away erect in her saddle and pretty well satisfied with herself and the world at large.

It was in this mood that she came under the tall face of Lone Mesa.

As she swung round its southeastern side, she decided to go up. The trail, cut into the sheer face by those long dead inhabitants of the pueblo, went up from here, angling sharply, and so steep that none but the level headed dared to make it. She was such, and so was the good horse under her, though they had both sweated in a cool day the first time they had attempted it.

It was a stiff and slow climb, but presently they gained the top and scrambled up through the small defile that was the steep trail's end.

As they went forward Sonya felt the surge and thrill she always felt at sight of the vast reach of the world about her, spread out so far below. Taking off her hat, she sat long in contemplation, her hands and the hat resting on her pommel.

For a long time she sat so, then reined away toward the right. She would circle the mesa, look at the silent white houses with their flat roofs, still amazingly intact, look at the great stone basin which was nearly always sweet with water caught in the yearly rains.

Presently she left the ancient tank and went on toward the north, circling the huddled houses, and was turning eastward around them when she stopped dead still.

A horse stood there in the blue shadow of the silent walls and a man sat on his haunches smoking a cigarette. The horse was golden as a raw ingot, and the man was bronzed and lean. The light of his bare head shone in the cool shade. He looked up, and Sonya looked down, and the girl's eyes dilated with swift excitement.

"So!" she said coldly, her lips suddenly tight. "You come here again?"

The man arose, a single motion beautifully correlated.

Sonya, not conscious of what she was doing, sat looking at him, and presently he looked up at her, a straight look, humble and still.

"I—like the mesa," he said. "It's so high and austere, so far from— from everything."

At the contact of his glance the strange tense feeling which this man's presence had caused at every meeting took hold on Sonya. It was not fear—it had never been—nor repugnance, nor the anger which had stirred her, but a little of all shot through with something which she could not define, a sense of prophecy, a forecast of destiny.

It chilled her within and sent a wave of fire across the chill, and for a wild moment she felt as if the solid rock were falling away beneath her. Then she caught herself together severely and lifted Dark-ness' rein, and the man spoke again.

"Please," he said, "please. Miss Savarin, don't go away. Will go right gladly."

He reached for the bridle of the golden horse and drew it to him, hesitating.

"I know I've got no right even to speak to you," he said, "or look at you after—after—that day up here, but if I was to be hung for it next second I couldn't help it. And I don't want to cause you another minute's trouble or unhappiness. If this here mesa's a favorite place of yours, I'll never come again. Don't stay away yourself. It's too sweet to be lost."

"But you'd lose it," Sonya said against her will.

"I'd lose my right hand if it would help," he said doggedly, looking down and fiddling with his latigo.

"H'm," said the girl through her nostrils, a sharp and cynical sound.

"I would," he repeated, "and all you've got to do is set a mark to prove it. Is there anything—any single thing that a man can do to prove his word? Tell me, and I'll do it."

"Who is the bandit across the Border who crucifies his double-crossers?" cried Sonya like a shot and gasped at the sound of her own words. It seemed as if another person spoke them, so wholly unintentional had they been.

The man's eyes flashed up to hers, and once they were wild as any hawk's, the black of the pupils spreading over the blue of the irises. Slowly the color drained from his face, leaving it ash white beneath its bronze, the lips pale as blue milk.

"Good G—d!" he said and was silent.

The girl was silent, too, and for the first time she felt a flash of fear, as if she had set in motion sinister forces of which she knew nothing. They stared at each other for a moment aghast at this thing which had sprung between them, stark and terrible, and then Sonya flicked her rein, moved in her saddle recovering. She knew she had touched disaster too deep for a woman's hand, and she drew back instinctively.

"No," she said swiftly, "don't answer. I shouldn't have asked. And it's no proof, anyway. I don't want proof. What's past is past. I take your word."

The man wet his stiff lips. "You do? Do you believe what I've been trying to tell you ever since that—day: that I could kill myself for what I did? Do you believe me?"

"Yes," said Sonya. "Not that it matters, but I do."

He took out a white handkerchief and wiped his face, which was sweating in the high cool wind.

"No," he said unsteadily, "not that it matters—to you. But it does to me. Why, I don't know, but it does. More than anything has ever mattered in my whole d—d life—I beg your pardon!"

"Granted," said the girl. "Serge swears."

"Serge?"

"My brother."

"Well, it matters, and I've spent hours alone up here and other places wondering about it and why it does. I've known women all my life, in several countries, and never a one that stayed in my mind a week after I left her. I'm a bad lot, as I told you before, and it don't mean a great deal what I think, one way or another, only I ain't ever felt so sorry in all my days over anything. I was just wondering, when you rode around th' wall yonder."

Sonya regarded him steadily.

"It does matter," she said, "what anyone thinks and does. No man lives to himself alone, as the Good Book says. To every man his place and a certain amount of influence. And to every man his responsibility, too, for that influence. You've got influence, somewhere for something."

"And something's changing in you," the girl went on, "there's been a change in you since—since the first time I saw you. In your face, in your speech. You're using more 'g's on the end of your words, for one thing, and your eyes are different."

"If they weren't when I look at you, I'd be lower than I am, and that's plenty low."

"Granted again," said Sonya calmly and watched the slow tide of red that swept up over his pale cheeks. "But the very fact of change outwardly argues change inwardly. I'd trust you now a considerable way."

He drew a long breath of fragrant smoke and, turning away, looked out over the spread of desert shimmering under the early afternoon sun.

When he turned back to her Sonya was shocked at the look on his handsome face, a sunken look, haggard, as if some cruel vise of the spirit had suddenly been set upon it. He smiled, for the first time in her experience of him, and something leaped in Sonya's heart like a captive bird struggling to be free.

"Miss Savarin," he said, "that's the sweetest and the cruellest thing you ever said in your life. It's a dangerous thing, too—for me. Yet I'm glad you said it. It'll be somethin'—something to remember among worse memories. And now I'll be getting along. Please come here whenever you want to. Lone Mesa is yours from now on."

He swung into his saddle, and the girl put out a quick hand and caught his sleeve.

"No," she said swiftly, "why should you give it up? There's something here for you, something good, I know. It's your eyes when you look out yonder, a peace and a healing, and I want you to have that. You need it. It—it's something of the—of the soul, if you see what I mean."

Gravely he looked at her, shook his head wonderingly.

"My G—d!" he said softly. "What a woman you are! I didn't know there was one like you outside of th' story books! Are you, by any chance, a lady preacher?"

"No," said Sonya, "of course not. I'm a physician. But I'm a woman first, and I can see when a heart's sick as well as a body. You're sick in your soul, your character, or I miss my guess—and I usually don't do that."

"No," he said, "you haven't now. But it don't matter in this case. It's too late for medicine—even yours."

"It's not," said Sonya, and was astonished at the passion of her tone; "it's never too late. Not till one's last heartbeat—only then."

"What are you tryin' to do?" he asked her, smiling into her eyes again—"change th' spots of th' leopard? Be careful. There's a more treacherous beast alive. An' I'm telling you true, Miss Savarin. I'm a leopard at heart, cruel and fierce, and not fit for you to speak to like this, straight out, man to man. I don't deserve it. If you knew what an' who I am you'd turn your horse an' ride for that down trail like all possessed, and you'd be right."

"Maybe I do know—a little," Sonya flashed, "but I'm not afraid. I'm never afraid, of anything."

"No. You're like a white angel in armor," he said gravely; "you haven't any need to fear. Even I could not hurt you when I wanted to. You're safe—anywhere—any time. Th' devil himself couldn't hurt you."

"Will you remember what I say—that it's never too late to change?"

"I'll remember," he said politely. "an' thanks. Now, good-by, and good luck always, Miss Savarin."

"Good-by," said Sonya, "and the same to you."

IN MEMORY OF UNCLE JIM CROMENAS

"Uncle Jim," as he was affectionately called by his many friends, passed away. He was born in the state of Mississippi August 23, 1863. Making him 88 years 7 months and 24 days of age at his death. He came to Texas at the age of 11 years and settled on the Cow House Creek near what is now Pidcoke. He has resided in this county ever since with the exception of one year. Later he moved to Bee House and settled. For the past 48 years he lived on the place that was his home at the time of his death.

January 8, 1871 he was married to Miss Sarah Wood, who survives him. To this union were born seven children, two boys and five girls. Five of whom survive him. A daughter, Mrs. Janie Carrigan of Mt. View preceded him in death by one year and three months and a son, David Wilson, died in infancy.

Those who survive to mourn his death are: Mrs. Mattie Price of Bee House, Miss Mary Cromenas of Bee House, Mrs. Donnie Knight of Slater, Texas, Mrs. Cora Curry of Weatherford, Texas, and Will Cromenas of Bee House. He also leaves 11 grandchildren, 11 great grandchildren and one brother, Frances Cromenas, of Bertram.

"Uncle Jim" was loved by all who knew him. He never turned any one away from his door. Those who needed help or advice always knew that they would receive it if they would go to "Uncle Jim". He was always devoted to the things which are right. At the age of 29 he was converted and joined the Methodist Protestant Church. He loved his church and was ever ready to be of service there. He lived a devoted and faithful Christian life until death claimed him. He was willing and unafraid to meet his God when he passed from this life.

The funeral services were conducted by his pastor, J. S. Duffy, and an old friend, Holland Price, who gave several interesting accounts of the Indian battles that "Uncle Jim" had fought. He was a pioneer who helped make our country what it is today. He could talk for hours of incidents that happened in this county when he was just a boy and young man, but he was fondest of telling of the Indian raids, and how he helped drive them away in order to make this a suitable country to live in.

When he was just a boy the Indians killed one of his old friends, Bill Hampton, and "Uncle Jim" cried because the men would not allow him to go with them to capture the Indians.

He was laid to rest in the Bee House Cemetery. How he will be missed. In his home there is a vacancy which can never be filled.

God needed another in heaven so he called "Uncle Jim away". It was one morning at break of day,

We had to say dear father's gone. His children all were standing by. When his dear soul went home on high,

He's gone to be with Christ, the Lord and enjoy his great reward.

He sweetly sleeps beneath the sod.

His spirit has gone home to God. His face we see in memory still, but none his place can ever fill.

And as we tread life's weary way, We pray to meet him some sweet day.

In that sweet home so bright and fair,

We hope to meet dear father there.

On heaven's bright and golden shore,

Where parting will be known no

"CLEAN SHIRTS" GIVEN HEARTY BOOST BY NATION'S BUSINESS

A splendid piece of unsolicited publicity for the laundry industry appears in the editorial pages of "Nation's Business" for March. This publication is the official organ of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

Here is the editorial as it appeared:

"We have until now kept aloof from the great shirt movement which has been agitating the world. We have never joined the Red Shirts of Russia, the Black Shirts of Italy, the Brown Shirts of Germany, the Blue Shirts, the Green Shirts, or the Yellow Shirts of various other portions of Europe. We have resisted the temptation to join William Dudley Pelley's Silver Shirts of America.

"Now, however, we have decided to form our own shirt organization:

The Clean Shirts of America

"Clean Shirts of America" has nothing in common with the "Black Shirts," the "Brown Shirts," the "Blue Shirts," or any other variety of Fascism or Nazism, but has much to do with the laundry industry. It makes the member "clean shirt conscious," and to that extent improves the scenery of city streets and public gatherings, raises the self-approval of the member—who observes the requirements—and at the same time helps the laundry back to financial stability. Join now.

"Its purposes are simple. The one requirement of its members is that they shall put on a clean shirt as often as they think advisable, giving regard to the day the laundry is due back, the state of the weather and the state of the wife's mind as to how often such a change is necessary. Added to that duty, each member is urged, but not required, to mind his own business so far as may seem convenient.

"The great strength of this organization lies in the fact that it is not 'constructive.' It has:

"No member may ask another to join. Anyone, white or black, tion; no bill before congress.

"No member may ask another to join. Anyone, white or black, male or female, old or young, may join by saying (to himself) 'aye'. After that he need only put on a clean shirt when he thinks it is called for and mind his own business."

When you say "Aye" call the Gatesville Laundry, 40. We will pick up and deliver your bundle. Adv—
