WORLD COMMENT

Joe Burns

On Self-Government

The President's proposal to increase the membership of the Supreme Court from nine to fifteen by adding an additional judge in each instance where a member reaches the age of seventy and fails to retire strikes at the very heart of the American system of democratic government.

He is firm in the conviction that in making such a proposal he is working in the interests of "government for the people," but that he is working for "government by the people" in submitting this proposition is an immediate challenge.

To date, the New Deal has suffered nine major defeats before the present personnel of the Supreme Court, six of whose members—Chief Justice Hughes and Associate Justices Butler, Brandeis, Sutherland, Van Devanter and McReynolds—are seventy or above. The most notable defeats were the invalidations of the NRA and AAA, but the Railroad Pension Act, the Hot Oil provisions of the NRA and the Frazier-Lemke Act, the removal of Federal Trade Commissioner Humphrey, the processing tax, the Jones Security Act, and the Guffey Coal Act were also declared unconstitutional.

Only in the case of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration defeat was there widespread public disapproval of the Court's action. Through out the country there was general skepticism as to the practical advisability of continuing the NRA in the dark days of 1933 before the Nine Old Men ruled it out.

Irrespective of the arguments forthcoming from the White House and Congressional Leaders, there is but one objective behind the President's action: reintroduction of the invalidated acts of his first administration in the next four years regardless of their constitutionality. In other words, the President is determined to go ahead, circumventing the Constitution by appointing to the Supreme Court justices who are in sympathy with his program.

Two curt, concise comments outlined the rational arguments of the opposition. One spokesman, Chairman John Hamilton of the Republican National Committee, declared the President's program would destroy every vestige of hope for an impregnable bulwark against legislative and executive assumptions of power. This statement echoes the views of all, regardless of party allegiance, who are cognizant of the huge Democratic majorities in both Houses of Congress and because of this fear to place in a Democratic President's hands control of the Federal.

This comment was forthcoming from a Democrat, Rep. John E. Miller of Arkansas, who said: "The congress has a well-defined duty to perform and should not lend its assistance at any time to a nullification of the Constitution by indirection."

Such truly will be the result of approval by Congress of the President's plan. For the President, by appointing sympathizers to the higher court, would certainly be nullifying the constitution by indirection." The Supreme Court has spoken in defense of the Constitution; to alter the judgments of that duly constituted body would be to nullify the Constitution.

This terse statement came from Rep. John M. Robinson of Kentucky: "The President's proposal would make a rubber stamp out of the Supreme Court."

With a Democratic President, a Democratic Congress, and a Democratic Supreme Court, then would not President Roosevelt be a dictator in theory if not in fact were his plans approved? For while acting through the regular legislative channels to secure ratification of his acts, executive, legislative and judicial branches of the federal government would in reality be subject to the control of the chief executive through his personal influence over and control of the three branches of government.

It is especially significant to note that while the proposal would not effect members of Congress, nine of the eleven members of the United States Senate over seventy years ago disapproved of the President's proposal to name a substitute for every Justice on the Supreme Court who has passed his seventieth birthday.

The nine in opposition, whose names we take space to list below, are without question the best known names in the halls of Congress today. But we'll let the prestige of these gentlemen speak for itself. And they are:

Carter Glass (Dem.) of Virginia, 79; George W. Norris (Ind.) of Nebraska, 75; William G. McAdoo (Dem.) of California 73; Arthur Capper (Rep.) of Kansas, 72; William E. Borah (Rep.) of Idaho, 70; Hiram W. Johnson (Rep.) of California, 70; James Hamilton Lewis (Dem.) of Illinois, 70; William H. King (Dem) of Utah, 70; Ellison D. Smith (Dem) of South Carolina, 70.

The two septuagenarians in favor of the proposal are Theodore F. Green (Dem) of Rhode Island, 70, and James H. Hughes (Dem.) of Delaware, 70, both newcomers to the Senate.

Any inference that the ripe old age of seventy has taken a toll on either the strength or intelligence of these oldtimers is subject for controversy. In our opinion, the above list of nine men contains the best brains in the Senate.

Senator Borah, dean in point of service of the Senate, made no direct statement, but indicated serious opposition when he said there were "some things in the message I cannot support." An interviewer asked Borah:

"Shouldn't this 70-year-old retirement rule apply equally as well to senators as to Supreme Court justices?"

Borah smiled a bit and replied: "My people passed on that question the third of last November."

Borah's comment provoked the question as to why the chief executive did not outline the course he is now attempting to pursue before the voters in last fall's campaign. To persistent queries by Governor Landon, the Republican candidate, and the press as to his intentions toward the Supreme Court, President Roosevelt refused to answer.

In addition, deriving another question from the Borah interview, Why not apply the rule to the Senate if there is justification for applying it to the Supreme Court? If the senility of the Supreme Court septuagenarians is responsible for the defect of the New Deal measures, are not the Senate's "old men" unfit for further service in that body?

Senator Norris of Nebraska had this to say:

"I doubt the wisdom of the remedy suggested by the president" and Senator Capper said: "I am opposed to increasing the membership of the Supreme Court for the purpose of allowing the chief executive to carry out his legislative program."

To the rescue of both the court and the "old men" of the Senate came its "baby," Rush D. Holt (Dem.) of West Virginia, who said:

"It's as silly to retire Supreme Court justices at 70 as to retire senators at that age. I don't think liberalism or ability depends upon age. Some of the most reactionary people are young and some of the most liberal are old. I don't believe anyone should be punished for being old."

In an editorial in "The Daily Times Herald" of Dallas, under the heading, "There Can Be No Doubt of the Main Issue," a representative viewpoint of Texas dailies as to the proposal is presented.

Said this newspaper:

"If the court reform plan suggested by the president did not give him the privilege of immediately appointing twenty-five new judges, including six members of the Supreme Court, it might not arouse serious controversy.

"But it is indeed, a large request for a chief executive to ask for a measure that would enable him to select twenty-five persons, friendly to his policies, and place them in life tenure positions on the bench.

"It is particularly significant for such a request to be made by a president whose program has been largely disapproved by the judiciary, whose party is overwhelmingly in the majority in Congress, who has been accused of seeking too much personal power, and who has criticised court actions.

"Under the circumstances it is impossible to regard the White House proposal as anything less than a move to change the complexion of the judiciary, especially ally the Supreme Court, so that new deal laws will be given more favorable treatment. The issue is clear from every point of view. It cannot be ignored."

Levita Wins County Championship

Pandemonium reigned in the local gym with groans, screams, and cries of horror rending the air last Friday night when Levita and Jonesboro met for the Senior boys basketball championship of Coryell county.

It was truly an awe-inspiring sight, one from which women fainted and strong men turned pale, biting their finger nails at the savage butchery going on right before their eyes. Little Children with bated breath and glazed eyes, gazed at the horrible spectacle and uttered fiendish cries of pleasure as the orgy went into some of its bloodier phases. When the limit had run its course, and with the players limping off the court, the score board told its strange tale, the miraculous story of the underdog emerging victorious, Levita, one of the most-often beat teams in the county, had won 8 to 3.

At the start of the hostilities the referee strode to the center of the court. All eyes were focussed on him. The suspense was terrible. Turning slowly he looked first at the banked wall of spectators on his right. Then, as inexorable as the sands of time spill out, he looked to the left. The silence was so painful you could hear his shoes squeak. Suddenly with a nerve-shattering gesture he tossed the ball in mid-air, screamed "Bless you my children," and vanished into thin air, not to be seen again until the start of the second half.

The battle of the ages was on! It was smash, smash, batter, heel, kick, squeal, and the devil take the hindmost! The rafters reverberated with the pandemonium. The dull thudding sound of flesh meeting flesh formed the predominating note in the cacophonous melody with an inuendo, of groups and shrieks filling the gaps. A sporting event gone mad. An athletic contest turned into something that Wagner might have dreamed of and lacked the ability to write.

Jonesboro, the most dreaded team of the county, the aggregation that had toppled Gatesville only a short time previously in one of the most royal battles ever witnessed, the lead pipe cinch for the county championship, could not only get a shot at the goal. Three free tosses were allowed them, all of which were tallied, but no chances at field goals were offered, Levita had them sewed up tighter than a Spirella corset and no one could break the blockade.

When the fury of the battle had exhausted itself, there was the grim fact revealed on the score board, Levita 8—Jonesboro 3.

As one the spectators rose to their feet, wiped the collective perspiration from their brows, heaved a sigh, and wended their weary ways home. The slug fest was over! Levita the champion and woe be to him who contested the fact.

Elaine Cross and Denver Roberts Wed in Church Ceremony Sat. Eve

A notable wedding of this year was solemnized Saturday evening in the First Baptist Church when at a service spoken by Rev. Clarence Allen Morton, pastor, Miss Doris Elaine Cross daughter of Judge and Mrs. R. B. Cross, was given in marriage to Denver Roberts, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Roberts of Pettus. The bridal music was furnished by Miss Orpa Mayo of this city, who played "Night Visions" by Schumann, and furnished the accompaniment for Murray Kendrick of Dallas who sang "Until" by Sanderson and Tschemacher, and "Oh Promise Me," by De Kouren. Miss Mayo also played the wedding marches and the soft strains of "Lieberstraum" by Liszt during the ceremony. The mellow glow of candles in Cathedral candelabra, palms and ferns banking the altar space, white gladiolus in pedestal baskets and bows of white satin marking the reserved pews, gave the decoration, and provided an ideal setting for the early spring event.

The bride was gowned in an exquisite model of antique ivory satin with full-shouldered sleeves which fitted snugly from elbow to wrist and with a skirt which flowed out into a slight train. Her silk net veil fell from a turban of orange blossoms and she carried a bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley. For sentiment's sake she wore an old gold watch belonging to her grandmother, Mrs. E. H. Trapp of this city, which was her grandfather's gift to her grandmother on their bridal day. Her father gave her in marriage.

For her going-away costume, the bride wore a smart suit of blue with a blue fox collar and a corsage of orchids. She chose navy accessories.

The maid of honor, Miss Beverly Chamlee, was gowned in a honey gold taffeta, fashioned like the bride's and she carried a bouquet of Texas gold roses. Mrs. Doyle Baldrige of Temple was matron of honor and wore a gown of delft blue taffeta and had an arm bouquet of Texas gold roses.

The bridesmaids, Mrs. George Berry Graves and Miss Mary Katherine Reinhardt, both of Waco; Mrs. Burton Gilliam of Dallas and Mrs. Marion Burleson of this city, wore models of delft blue taffeta and carried lovely Texas gold roses in cascading ornament.

Halbert Nutt of Dallas attended the bridegroom as best man, and Barney Chappell of Dallas, Bob Roberts of Pettus, Jimmy Johnson of Waco and David Franks of this city were groomsmen.

Following the church ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents for the bridal party relatives, out of town guests and close friends. The table was laid in a lovely Normandy lact cloth and the white wedding cake in novel arrangement was topped with a miniature bride and bridegroom, and was graced with four miniature flower girls encircled with a wreath of orange blossoms and pastel shades of sweet peas, illuminated by four ivory tapers burning in china holders which were decorated in valley lilies. Mrs. Aubrey Stringer of Waco poured and Misses Dorothy Reinhardt of Waco served cake.

Immediately following the reception, Mr. and Mrs. Roberts left for a wedding trip to New Orleans, after which they will be at home in Pettus.

Out of town guests for the ceremony included Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. James Roberts of Pettus; Mr. and Mrs. Morris Roberts of Austin; Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Nash Jr., Mr. and Mrs. George Berry Graves, Dr. and Mrs. C. H. Brooks, Jimmy Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Reinhardt, Mrs. Aubrey Stringer, Mr. and Mrs. Clay McClellan, Mrs. Hattie Harris, Miss Dorothy Reinhardt, Miss Willie Huff, all of Waco; Mr. and Mrs. Hervey Chesley of Hamilton; Prof and Mrs. Neil Foster, Misses Roberta, Mona Mary, and Leota Keys all of Baylor University, Waco; Mr. and Mrs. E. Sheppard of Balinger; Mr. and Mrs. Roy Townsend of Dallas; Bill Alexander and daughter, Miss Morris, of Temple.

SENATOR TOM CONNALLY INTRODUCES WAR PROFITS BILL

Senator Tom Connally has just introduced a bill in Congress designed to "take the profits out of war" thru taxation, the Connally measure drafts industry and wealth and effectively prevents war-time profiteering.

Should the United States become engaged in way increased tax rates and reduced exemptions for individuals would automatically become effective. Personal exemptions would be lowered to $800 and $1,600 for single and married persons, respectively, and the rate of tax would be 10 per cent, with a surtax beginning with 6 per cent on the first thousand dollars in excess of the exemption and reaching a maximum of 80 per cent.

The bill was unanimously adopted by the subcommittee and reported favorably by the finance committee to the Senate late last session, action was not taken due to adjournment. The measure carries out the anti-war profits plank in the Democratic platform adopted in Philadelphia last June, a plank which was placed in the platform upon the insistence of Sen. Connally.

HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT ASKS INFORMATION ON CARDS

The car owners of Coryell County can aid tremendously in furnishing official information to the State-Federal Highway Planning Survey for use in working out a logical plan on which future road and street construction will be based. Mr. D. H. Culberson, county assessor and collector of taxes, has given a number of post cards which ask for fundamental information that is needed in road planning, thus affording the motorists opportunity to participate in outlining his future road program. These cards, to be distributed to car owners as they pay their 1937 registration fees, require no postage and are self-addressed. The number of cards which have been furnished Mr. Culberson was judged according to the number of motor vehicles which were registered in the County during 1936. The number of cards allotted to Coryell County is as follows: 3,800 for passenger automobiles, 800 for trucks, and 100 for trailers and motorcycles, and 65 for owners of five or more vehicles.

The business of constructing and maintaining highways, the streets, and roads has become a tremendous task within recent years, and it now affects the well-being of every citizen. Obviously, every effort should be made to plan our public road system so that it will serve all car owners in an equitable manner and so that the tax burden for roads will be distributed justly. The information sought on these cards is vital to the establishment of an equitable, well rounded program. In order to work out such a program, the Texas Highway Department and the United States Bureau of Public Roads are conducting a statewide highway planning survey, and it is to be to the advantage of each County to participate to the greatest extent possible.

ROTATION REDUCES SOIL LOSSES IN COTTON

Texas Farmers, in complying with the Agricultural Conservation Program, planted 1,625,236 acres in 222 counties to legumes and an additional 3,819,329 acres in 228 counties were devoted to other soil conserving crops and practices, according to the annual report for 1936 submitted by E. N. Holmgren, administrative assistant of the Texas Extension Service.

Experiments have shown that rotation of crops increases the yield by adding fertility and holding moisture. In addition, rotation reduces loss of soil erosion. The reduction through rocluded: from rice, 38,266 acres; from peanuts, 23,564; and from general soil depleting crops, 2,519,181 acres.

Of the 2,338,418 acres terraced or contoured in Texas in 1936 under the supervision of county agents, a total of 1,401,525 acres were so protected in compliance with the terms of the Agricultural Conservation pro-

SYNOPSIS
 Mustered out of the army, Wild Bill Hickok leaves for Leavenworth on the Steamer Lizzie Gill. On board, he meets his old pal, Bill Cody, who is returning from a honeymoon trip with his wife, Louisa. On the Leavenworth wharf, boxes of farming tools consigned to John Lattimer arouse Wild Bill's suspicions. He thinks that they are guns destined for the Indians. Lattimer and Wild Bill almost come to blows but for the arrival of Calamity Jane, Bill's sweetheart, who is the driver of the Overland Stage.

CHAPTER III
LOUISA CODY had asked no more, merely staring away the dismal miles, while atop the conveyance, there continued a note of discord which had begun with the departure from Leavenworth. Wild Bill's eyes were filled with appraisal as he looked at the blustering, happy-go-lucky, frontier woman beside him; the substitute driver of today's stage. Particularly did he observe a string of beads about her neck, incongruous against her soldier's clothing.

"You got a nasty, cold-blooded disposition to go on wearin' those beads I gave you—after the way you've acted," he growled.

She smiled pertly.

"Now just how've I acted, Bill, besides lovin' you?"

"You know how you've acted. A fellow at every stage station and a beau in every cavalry troop west of the Missouri!"

Calamity Jane became suddenly serious.

"Aw, Bill," she begged. "A gal's got to pass the time somehow. It was awful lonely after you left for the war. Whoa—you boneheaded hunks o' horsemeat. Whoa, I tells you!"

Her strong forearms suddenly had contracted against the reins. Already Wild Bill was on the step and ready to leap for the ground, for he too had seen—an old man on a mule, weaving in the saddle, a trousers leg stiff with dried blood. Ten minutes later, the stage was rushing on again while inside the vehicle, there was a new passenger.

Jack McCall held the old man in his arms, while Cody bent over him, seeking to administer aid to a bullet wound in his leg.

"You'll have to tear a piece off your petticoat," he said crisply to Louisa, his wife. The St. Louis girl obeyed with palsied hands.

"What's he saying?" she asked.

"That Injuns have busted loose, two thousand of 'em," the husband answered, "with war paint on. Killed eighty soldiers up at Fort Piney in one attack—the old man man was trying to get word into Custer at Fort Hays—somebody's got to take ammunition to General Carrington—" burned on the high hills, even within sight of Fort Hays. Occupants of the little village which nestled close to the fort were in constant danger. It was to this that Louisa Frederick Cody had come "to grow up with the West!"

"If Will had only waited a while," Louisa said as she moved hopelessly about the little cabin. It was a dismal place. Suddenly she paused. "I wonder if he would have stayed if I had told him—"

"Now see here, Louisa Cody," said Calamity Jane with an attempt at firmness. "If Bill Cody had known he was going to be a Daddy, of course he'd have stayed. But you did right in not telling him—he's got enough worries right now. So have you."

Louisa strove bravely to hold back the tears.

"If I only knew where he was."

"Oh, that's easy. He's somewhere between here and General Carrington's command with that ammunition train. Workin' up east of th' usual trail, through Deep Valley and across th' upper ford of th' Republican."

"Mr. Hickok must be with him," concluded Louisa. Calamity Jane snorted—even the admiration of one of Louisa's dresses could not overcome her thoughts.

"Not that buzzard. He's out by himself, looking for Yellow Hand. They used to hunt buffalo together. An' Bill's crazy enough to think he can worm it all out of that Indian hyena—just what he's goin' to do an' where he's gettin' the guns to do it with. Huh," she grunted with a view toward the window. "Better light a lamp. It's pretty near dark."

She continued to eye that dress, even while they cooked the evening meal and ate it together, two women of the most widely divergent breeding, tastes, ideas, suddenly drawn together by the loss of those they loved. Suddenly, just after the dishes had been washed, Louisa said:

"Calamity—why don't you put that dress on?"

"Me?" Calamity Jane glanced swiftly at her faded soldier's uniform, her scuffed boots. "Me in a dress?"

"Try it on, please." Then, as Calamity, in somewhat nonplussed fashion, obeyed her. "I want you to keep it."

"Who? Me?" Calamity went to the mirror, primping, smoothing her hair, straightening the beads which Wild Bill Hickok once had given her, about the collar of the dress. "Say, nobody ever gave me anything like this before."

"And you should have a hat," said Louisa. Out came one from a bandbox. Calamity gasped.

"What? Me? A hat? With feathers on it? Maybe I've started dreamin', maybe—"

Her eyes had strayed from the mirror to the window. Suddenly they narrowed. She turned back to the mirror, pretending to again view herself. "Get out of sight, Louisa," came tensely. "And do what I tell you. Injuns outside. I just saw one lookin' in the window."

ABOUT FRUIT TREES

In buying fruit trees remember your trees are no better than the man you buy them from. His problems are your problems and if he sells you the wrong types his principles will soon show up. The average tree dealer or bootlegger has nothing in view but his profit that he is making on his trees that he bought from the man that is selling the cheapest trees, not the best.

Don't let tree dealers or painted pictures influence you in buying trees. If you can buy trees from an agent with certified credentials to sell trees for the one nursery only, you should get good trees. Tree dealers and bootleggers have hurt the orchard business, the nursery inspection law should be so amended that anyone could not sell trees and shrubs until they have had two years experience in propagating trees.

The average farmer that buys trees knows very little about trees and if some one does not help him he will not have much luck. The average tree dealer does not know one variety from another and if he gets them mixed the farmer may buy a Burbank plum and get a Chinese Elm. Remember good fruit trees do not just happen. Any good tree grower will have to work his trees about 25 times before he has them ready to sell. Fruit trees stand transplanting better than any trees known, will live one hundred percent if transplanted right. Every time you let the roots dry on trees you lower their vitality. Don't let the fish stay out of water too long it will surely die. A nursery man sells his best trees and shrubs to his direct customers and agents and his inferior trees to dealers and bootleggers at a lower price.

The A. and M. College recommends the best one-year old trees, not June buds. June buds will take a year longer to bear. The buds that you have to use come out of the nursery row; not from bearing trees, and not recommended as best. The summary of this article is to buy your trees and shrubs from a reliable nursery and get your trees, if possible take them right home and put them just as the nurseryman says to put them out.

Keep the rabbits, stock, grass and weeds away for the first 2 years and keep in touch with the nurseryman and he can help you with your orchard problems.

The tree dealer and bootlegger CANNOT.
