EDITOR OF TROUP BANNER COMES OUT WITH AN 18-PAGE PAPER

Fred G. Prewitt, editor and manager of the Troup Banner, is making his mark in the newspaper world by his special edition featuring the opening of a tomato canning plant in that thriving east Texas city. The paper which includes eighteen pages which includes pictures, features, and stories about the cannery. What struck us forcibly was the picture of the Chamber of Commerce in 1926 building a shipping shed for tomato shippers.

Mr. and Mrs. Doyle Baldrige of Temple were visitors with Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Baldrige and Mayor and Mrs. C. E. Gandy of this city.

PIPE ORGAN SELECTIONS ENTERTAIN LIONS CLUB WEDNESDAY

Miss Mamie Sue Halbrook, organist, was a guest artist of the local Lions Club Wednesday and rendered several organ compositions following the business luncheon. Included in her selections were, "Humoresque," "Moonlight and Roses," and "Evening Song." In the latter piece the chimes were used very effectively. Miss Halbrook concluded with a selection in march tempo.

Van Sadler of Waco was a "Fourth" visitor in Gatesville with his mother, Mrs. Harvey Sadler.

The number of unemployed in Irish Free state is decreasing.

THAT WORD "CRASH"

Latest Developments in the Nation's Battle Against the Reckless Driver

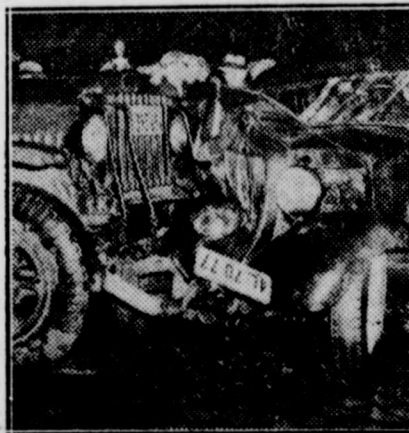

BUS CRASH KILLS TWELVE says a paper on Monday. FAMILY OF FIVE DIES IN CRASH says another on Wednesday. FRANCO-GERMAN RELATIONS HEAD FOR CRASH—Thursday. Even the Friday woman's page says "Linen Crash dresses popular for sports wear." And the depression, now turning venerable and white at the temples, started its lusty youth with what was popularly called "The Crash."

If you've ever been in a crash, you know it's not as simple as the word sounds. It's a very personal sort of symphony, starting with the scream of tires on the pavement, going from the second movement, a sort of shuddering, bumping whack, into the lighter melodies of tinkling glass, screaming women and the music of licking, hungry flame.

Speed does it, and speed alone. It doesn't take a student of naval gunnery to figure out that if a thing is going fast, it hits something hard. Speed hits more than 35,000 people every year. It hits them very hard and kills them.

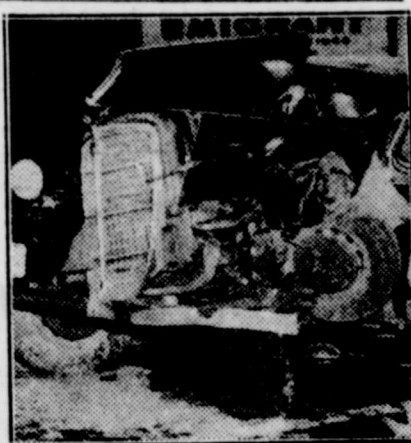

The simplest logic in the world is to say, "Get rid of speed and the word Crash will soon be as extinct as the shaving mug." But speed is like the weather—everybody dislikes it, but the only man who can do anything about it—the driver—doesn't.

That's easy, too, because if he won't do anything to help himself, somebody will have to do something for him. Speed cops can watch him part of the time, and arrest the most blatant offenders, sometimes before they kill somebody, sometimes after. But the consensus of opinion—state, local, and Federal—is that if these grown-up children are going to hurt themselves by running their kiddie-cars too fast, the kiddie-cars will have to be fixed so that speed too great for conditions is just not there. In other words, mechanical control that holds down the driver at all times.

Speed did it.

In Minnesota they have a plan, and more and more of the other states, especially where they have heavy crash casualties, think the Minnesota plan is pretty good. The first prerequisite is a color zoning of roads; when a driver can go thirty with impunity, he sees yellow painted all over the fences, lamp posts and everything else. A forty-five-mile zone might have blue, and a sixty-mile zone, out in the open stretches, green.

Speed did it again.

That wouldn't make him behave any more than anything else to date; so on his car, according to the Minnesota Plan, goes a gadget like a light switch, with three contacts on it. One says thirty, one forty-five, and one sixty. When he hits a zone, he turns his switch to the right place and his car, though accelerating and acting perfectly normally, just won't go any faster than it's supposed to.

Logic shows that we still can't make him throw the switch every time, and we haven't gotten anywhere yet, but here's the tie-in, and the thing that will make it work. On the front and rear of his car are three lights like stoplights, colored to match the zones, and when he enters a zone and throws the switch, the matching light goes on. It he doesn't he advertises for as far as his car can be seen that he is just looking for trouble, and makes himself liable for arrest before he even breaks the law.

Down in Washington they think a lot of the Minnesota Plan, and of the gadget, too, because of course the two are inseparable. What will happen to it no one knows at the present time, because the three million miles of American highways will take a lot of colored paint, and a lot of regulation will be necessary to get the gadget adopted universally enough to start painting. But it looks like an out to a problem that started by being nasty, then turned tragic, and is now in the worst state of all, when the basic word CRASH is becoming something as common at breakfast as scrambled eggs—something that a man will flip over with his newspaper page as casually as the latest report on Peggy Hopkins Joyce and then discover an hour later to be the ultimate experience of all.

Ayres Compton, Safety Director at Dallas Speaker Over WFAA

Ayres Compton, safety director for the city of Dallas, and formerly editor-owner of the Coryell county News, was the principal speaker over WFAA Saturday morning at 10:45 to 11.

In reference to accidents during the holiday, Mr. Compton said in part that "speeding and drinking are the chief causes of accidents. I would say, be sure that road conditions are favorable, and pick a good time to travel; be certain of the condition of your car; and don't try to mix driving with drinking, and finally, be sure that your physical condition is good."

This was a program urging people to be careful during the three holiday in and around the Fourth of July.

PAN AMERICAN EXPOSITION DRAWS LARGE CROWDS

Playing to packed houses, the Calvacade of the Americas, dramatic story of the liberation of the Western Hemisphere, at the Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition, is off to a good start and promises to equal the attendance record set last season by the Calvacade of Texas.

The new and bigger Calvacade, which begins with a scene of human sacrifice by the Aztecs in the ancient and sacred city of Tenochtitlan, (now Mexico City) in the year 1400 A. D., covers the history of the Western World from the landing of Columbus to President Roosevelt's "good neighbor" speech at the Peace Conference in Buenos Aires last fall.

One of the high points of the drama, portrayed on the world's largest stage, is the ancient volcano of Popocatepetl in actual eruption. Another is the barbaric sequence when Cortez conquers Mexico. For uproarious hilarity, the street scene of the "Gay Nineties is one of the most popular spots of the spectacle. The same is true of the finale, when the flags of the twenty-one Pan Americans countries are borne over the ramp to the thunder of galloping horses.

Calvacade even bigger and better than last year's show is already a prime favorite with Exposition crowds. The huge presentation tells the red-blooded story of America's immortals. It is the seething element of dramatic history poured into the mould of time; a living textbook of the past created by 300 actors.

W. E. Lasseter Attends F.F.A. Conference at Stephenville Meeting

Stephenville.—W. E. Lasseter, vocational agricultural teacher at Gatesville, went to John Tarleton College Monday to attend a 5-day summer conference for vocational agriculture teachers in Texas Area IV.

About ninety teachers are expected at the conference, which will close with attendance at a soil conservation rally at the Green Creek demonstration project at Dublin. At least 2,000 people from about 100 towns in the area are expected at the Dublin meeting. Vocational agriculture teachers will be as advisers to the area's Future Farmers of America, who are sponsoring the meeting. Dr. H. H. Bennett, chief soil conservationist of the United States, will be honor guest.

Wednesday skill schools in handling livestock, farm shop, soil conservation, woodwork, handling poultry will be conducted by members of the agriculture faculty at John Tarleton. Wednesday evening conference delegates will be entertained by Stephenville business men.

Thursday afternoon the conference will recess until 1 p. m. Friday. Mr. Lasseter will return to Gatesville so that he may attend the FFA-sponsored soil conservation meeting with local Future Farmers and interested adult farmers.

A number from near Gatesville will probably attend the Friday afternoon meeting at Dublin.

4-H Garden Demonstrators Progress

The following Garden demonstrators attended the 4-H Encampment: Mary Nell Evans, Leon Junction; Ara Mae Black, Ewing; Bonnie Will Ingraham, Harman; Sallie Frances Weigand, Plainview, Elwanda Tabor Slater; Wilma Dean Ivy, Pecan Grove; and Georgia Jane Grubb, Ireland. Each reported they have tomato plants that will soon be bearing and each plans to can 15 containers of tomatoes per person in their families.

The Home Demonstration Agent outlined the State-wide Canned Products Judging contest for 4-H Club girls. Each girl has been given material to study in preparation for the county judging contests which will be held during July. The winners in the County Contest is eligible to participate in the State Contest at College Station During the Short Course, August 16-19.

"TWO SILVER SPOONS"

Gatesville and Coryell County both again have been offered "two silver spoons:" two chances to secure free and beneficial publicity.

The Greater Texas and Pan-American Exposition inquires if Gatesville or the county as a whole wishes to have a special day at the Exposition this year. The Frontier Fiesta at Fort Worth is willing to do the same. Gatesville, so far, has maintained a frigid silence.

When travelling out of a hundred mile radius of Gatesville the chances are nine out of ten that if you disclose the identity of your home town to some stranger he will immediately reply, "oh yes, where the reform school is located." That is a fine description of one of the richest agricultural sections in the state of Texas and of a county that leads the world in the production of mules and the state in production of oats.

Propaganda is a recognized asset in the business world. The superior mousetrap builder today would starve in short order if he didn't get out and tell the world what a wonderful product he was manufacturing, and while Coryell county probably will not immediately go bankrupt if they fail to take advantage of these two offers they will be passing up an opportunity to gain some very favorable state-wide recognition.

Who should take the initiative in organizing such a trip? A civic group, such as was recently organized in Gatesville, could handle this job very efficiently if they would take the time and effort to do so.

SOCIETY

Miss Annie B. Henson, Mr. Clarence Jameson Wed In Simple Ceremony

In a twilight ceremony, made lovelier by its simplicity, the wedding of Miss Annie B. Henson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Henson of this city, and Clarence Jameson, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Jameson of Meridian, was solemnized at 7:30 o'clock Monday evening, July 5, at the home of the bride's parents, on Spindletop avenue.

Rev. Brooks Sasse of Waco, cousin of the bride, read the ceremony before an improvised altar of ferns and summer flowers.

The bride wore a smart frock of navy marquisette fashioned in redingote lines over navy taffeta, trimmed in white embroidered organdy. Other accessories were white and she wore a shoulder corsage of pink sweetheart rosebuds. For something old the bride wore a gold brooch ornamented with a single coral, which belonged to the late Mrs. J. C. Rankin, grandmother of the bride. The pin being over a half century old, having been handed down for two generations.

Mrs. Jameson is a graduate of the local high school and for the past nine years has rendered very efficient service as operator for the Gulf States Telephone Company.

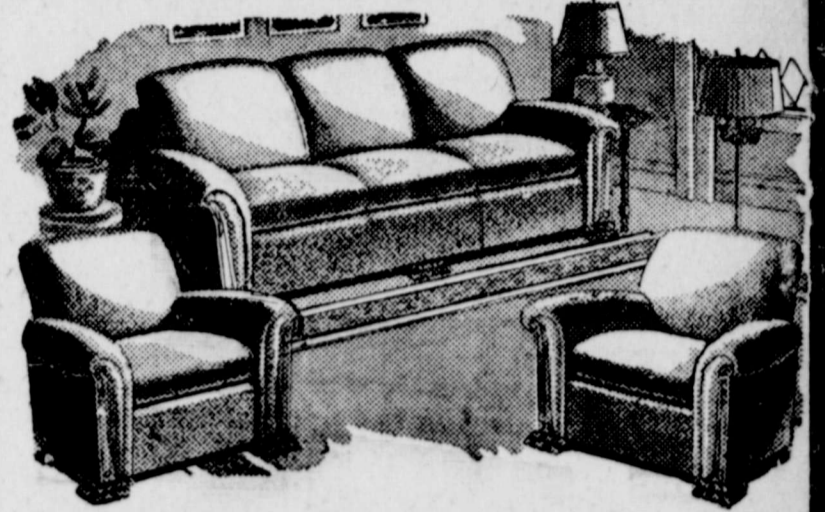

The couple left immediately after the ceremony for a honeymoon trip, place unknown.

They will make their home in Meridian where Mr. Jameson is engaged in ranching and farming. Mrs. Jameson will remain in this city until October at which time she will be relieved of her position and join Mr. Jameson.

Only members of immediate families and close friends were present for the ceremony.

SYNOPSIS
Countess Alexandra Adraxine, her life endangered in the Russian Revolution, is protected by A. J. Fothergill, an English journalist masquerading as Peter Ouranov, Red commissar. Hunted by both White and Red forces, they have many narrow escapes from death, during which they realize that they are deeply in love with each other. Finally they fall into the hands of a Red inquisition, but are permitted to escape by young Captain Pushkov, who loves the Countess. Realizing that he has ruined himself through his act, he leaves them, and a moment later they hear a shot.

Chapter Six

People came running from the crowd in all directions. Peter seized a man by the lapel. "What's happened?" he demanded.

"Officer just shot himself," gasped the fellow. "Through the head — deliberately!"

Slowly they walked to the center squad of White troops approaching with rifles held at ready. He hastened his step to avoid crossing their path. But their officer called out to him to halt. Peter turned frantically, attempting to run, but saw that his escape was blocked and stood rigid with dismay and terror as they approached and seized him.

In a short time he was in their prison camp, but his fear for his own safety was swallowed in his worry for her. He could not know that the Red Cross had found her, and that even now she was safely installed in a bed in their big white hospital. Or that soon she would be placed on a train and rushed to safety out of Russia.

In the prison camp, the business of murder went on methodically, without passion, almost without malice. Names were read off, groups of men lined up and marched off to die under a crushing hail of machine-gun bullets. Two days passed and Peter heard his name. Without spirit or hope he took his place in the line.

But as he marched across the field, something within him flared up against the injustice of dying when he was so close to safety, when he had so much to live for.

Alexandra collapsed, overcome by all the pain, the terror.

of the crowd, in time to glimpse Pushkov's limp form being carried into the station by two soldiers.

"Dear, he has done this for our sakes," whispered Alexandra. "We must start now, Tovarich."

They slipped away in the midst leading down to the river.

Akhiz the Tartar, a huge mountain of a man, genial, bolsterous and less stupid than his looks suggested, stood on the deck of his broad timber barge, peering down the river and waiting for the right moment to cast off and pursue his leisurely journey to Saratoff, some three weeks' travel distant. When two bedraggled-looking refugees hailed him from the bank, called him "Captain," and offered him gold rubles in payment, he was only too glad to give them passage.

"We are in trouble, friend Akhiz," Peter informed him. "We have enemies. If they find us they might kill us."

Akhiz the good-natured, the brother of all men, shook his head in disapproval of the idea. "Too much killing already," he boomed. "If anybody comes looking, I will say nobody here."

No sooner had the boat started out on the journey, than Alexandra collapsed, overcome by all the pain, the terror, the wearing torture of their flight.

The kindly boatman's wife helped to make her as comfortable as the rude comforts of their boat could afford. But Peter, watching her white luminosity being slowly consumed by the fever, knew that she was desperately ill. He was resolved to secure a doctor for her at the next town, no matter what the risk.

The barge docked at Saratoff, and the boatman, inquiring, learned that there was an American Red Cross unit in the vicinity. Peter hurried to tell the news to Alexandra who half-comprehended in her delirium. "Darling," he whispered, "I will get you a doctor. You will be well. We shall be happy soon."

As Peter left the docks he saw a

He would not die, he thought to himself. And with a cunning born of desperation, he bent, pretending to pick up something. When the officer paused, he shot up with a crushing blow to his jaw then turned to flee. The other prisoners, heartened by his resistance took up the fight, and only a few scattering shots were sent after him. One raked his arm.

Down the road, Peter happily saw the symbol of the Red Cross unit. He raced to safety, breathlessly told his story. In a few minutes a jovial doctor was binding his wound. "Nurse," spoke the doctor as he wound the bandage, "read the names of the women leaving on the train." She read through a long list, then finally, "Alexandra Adraxine."

"What?" shouted Peter in amazement. She repeated it. "Is she—?" he asked the doctor and he sketched a brief, perhaps a lyrical, description of Alexandra. The doctor nodded.

"The woman you describe," said the doctor, "has improved sufficiently to leave the country. She was put on a train this morning; if you can make the station within the next five minutes, the train may not yet have left."

Peter waited to hear no more. Shouting, waving his arms, shoving aside any one who happened to get in his path, he dashed through the streets to the station. Three blasts sounded from the whistle of a train that stood on the track. The wheels started to turn. Peter sprinted alongside the last car; and there, pressed against the pane, was the beloved face of his little Comrade Alexandra. She saw him, jumped up, cried out inaudibly through the glass.

Peter swung onto the step of the now fast-moving train, into the car, almost hurled himself into the waiting arms.

"Alexandra! Little Tovarich!" he murmured. "I'll never, never let you out of my sight again!"

PATTERSON'S HOME RUN IN SIXTH WINS FOR THE FIREBOYS

The Fireboys shoved the Merchants deeper into the cellar by overcoming a five-run lead garnered by the Merchants in the first inning and defeated them eight to five. Wright, the Fireboy's new pitcher, turned the Merchants back without a run after the first inning, while his mates equaled the Merchant's feat by scoring five times in the fourth inning when the Merchant team fell apart.

The pay-off blow came in the sixth inning when Bobby Patterson slugged a long home run over the left fielder's head, scoring Morgan ahead of him; A moment later Franks singled Wilson home, making the score 8 to 5. Brown was the Merchants' leading batter, slamming out two hits in three trips to the plate.

HERO OF YELLOW FEVER WARS DIES — Try home merchants first.

New Orleans, June 24.— Dr. Edmund Peyton Lowe, 77, retired physician, author, and world traveler, died here today after a brief illness.

He probably was best known for his fight against yellow fever in the epidemics of 1897, when he was himself stricken, and 1905, the last big fight in New Orleans. He was instrumental in the move for invoking the federal quarantine and bringing order out of the chaos in the severe 1905 battle against yellow fever.
