2,500 See Doolittle's Eighth Annual Rodeo The Grove First Show

As fittingly as it was heralded, Austin Doolittle's Eighth Annual Rodeo held Wednesday and Thursday at The Grove, proved its merits to the 2,500 that gathered for the first performance.

Heat, dust, cowhands, mad Brahma steers, tough broncs, and hard to handle calves made the whole afternoon one of a thousand thrills, to which was added, considerable comedy by two funny clowns and their "trick" mules.

Brahma steer riding was unusually good in a dangerous way, since the Brahmas Wednesday were hot and mad, and attacked nearly every rider one hooking and injuring one rider, who was knocked out.

Calves in the calf roping gave trouble, however, making the time on this event bad, except for a few lucky ropers, one of which did his work in 20 1-5 seconds.

Bareback bronc riding, mule riding, and saddled bronc riding completed the show, which was announced by "Doc" Barnard. The Grove Band furnishing the music.

An even larger crowd was expected yesterday at this big rodeo.

Cotton boll worms are rapidly making their appearance in this county. The only recommended practice toward control of these worms is to dust (not spray) with calcium arsenate, using 6 to 8 pounds per acre. If any attempt is made to control boll worms it should be done immediately upon appearance of the first worms, and dusting should be repeated each six days.

The Future of Unicameralism
Through the inspiration of Senator George Norris and the progressive spirit of the electorate of Nebraska, a proving ground has been established in Nebraska for the unicameral or one-house legislature.

Voters of the forty-seven other states followed closely the progress of Nebraska's new legislative body during its first year's work. Consciously or otherwise, the forty-three members of the Nebraska Senate, through the success or failure of their work, will determine whether the unicameral plan will be introduced in other States where there is genuine dissatisfaction with the bicameral system.

Other States have found, as did Nebraska, that the inspiration for any far-reaching governmental reorganization that would affect government employees' jobs must come from the people. Violent opposition attended the efforts of Senator Norris, Professor Senning of the University of Nebraska's department of political science, and others to reduce the Nebraska Legislature to 41 members.

In Texas, Senator George Nelson introduced a bill at the first 1937 session of the Legislature to abolish the two-house, 181-member body and institute the unicameral system with 42 members, two elected from each congressional district. The bill failed of enactment, as was generally expected, but rising interest among the electorate was evidenced by letters to legislators and to newspapers commending the Nebraska experiment and urging its enactment in this State.

What is the future of unicameralism? As stated above, adoption of the unicameral system by other States is dependent entirely upon the success or failure of unicameralism in Nebraska. If such is the case, an analysis of the first session of Nebraska's unicameral legislature and of its good and bad aspects as revealed thereby is in order.

Fifty-eight days marked the duration of the 1937 session as compared with the 150-odd days which marked the last session of the bicameral legislature. The Senate—official name of the new body—enacted 210 laws at a cost, including the legislator's salaries, of $140,000, compared with 192 laws enacted by the last bicameral legislature at a cost of $203,000.

Observers at Lincoln agreed that orderliness and lack of confusion—evitably attendant at Texas sessions—marked the Senate's deliberations throughout the session. In part responsible for this was the legislative council, created by the amendment which inaugurated unicameralism in Nebraska, which prepared a program of action to be presented at the beginning of the session. Legislative committees were reduced from 31 to 13. There is no duplication in committee membership, thus assuring full membership at all committee hearings are held.

The new amendment requires that three days must elapse before final consideration of a measure and final passage. Before the Senate takes final action on a bill, constitutionality of the measure is studied by a committee of three attorneys on constitutional law employed by the Senate. This is for the purpose of preventing wherever possible invalidation of statutes in the courts.

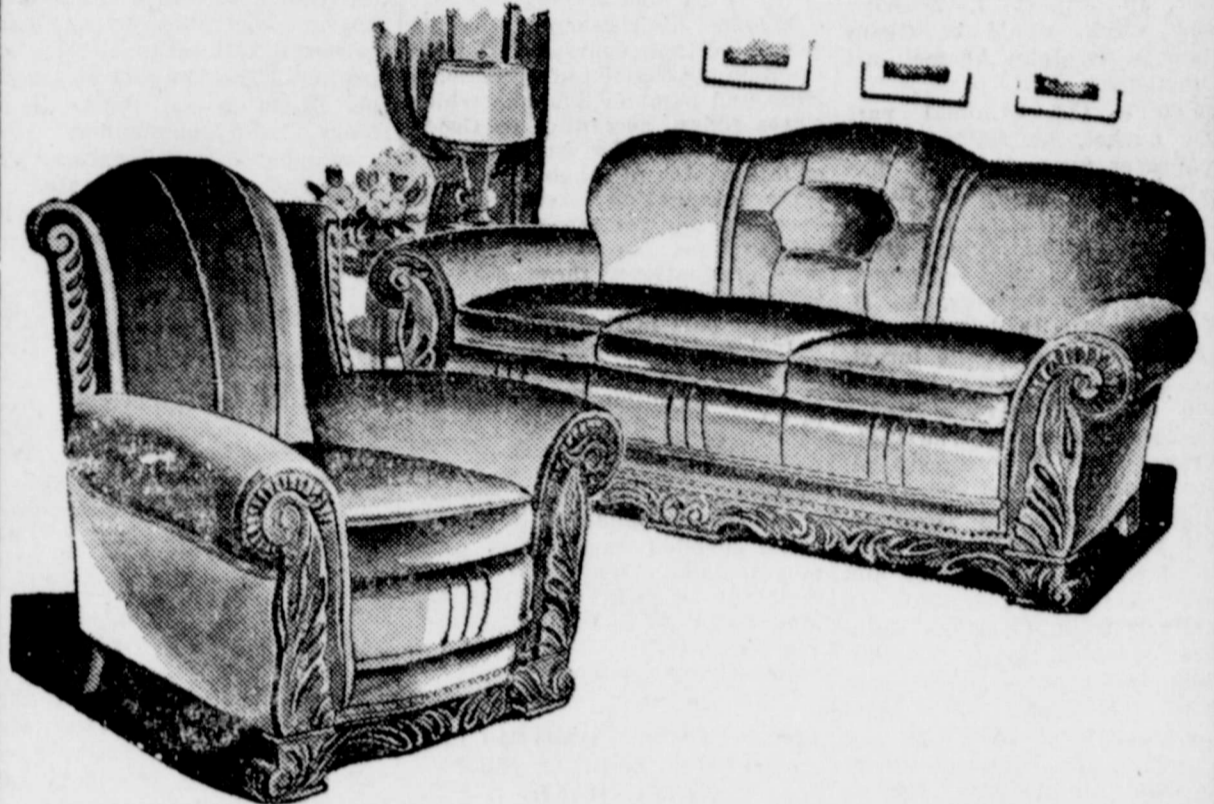

Members of Nebraska's Senate are elected on a non-partisan basis, which eliminates executive control of the legislative body and subservience of legislators to party leaders. Greater personal freedom of members is assured and political feelings do not enter into consideration of legislation.

Simplified procedure is one of the greatest advantages of the unicameral legislature. Public interest in and understanding of the procedures of the legislative bodies is essential in order to instill in legislators a sense of responsibility to the people. Nebraskans can now easily follow Buck-passing between two legislative houses is an evil of the past, as responsibility for approval or rejection of legislation is now squarely on the shoulders of the Senators.

Remuneration of the members of the unicameral body was doubled in Nebraska over the pay received by representatives and senators of the old body. The caliber of men seeking election to legislative posts is expected to be higher, and even the first session contained the legislative veterans of the two-house legislature. Moreover, members of ability can now influence legislative decisions, whereas, in the old lower house of over one hundred members, new and inexperienced members could not do so.

The results of the first session of Nebraska's new Senate are encouraging to those who favor unicameralism over the old and antedated two-house system. The people of Texas will demand to be heard on the Nelson amendment in the future.

Station, with one occupant of the latter car receiving a small cut on her mouth, and bruises. The cars were in the worse shape, having their bumpers, fenders, radiators and wheels damaged. There were three men, two women and a child in the Dallas car.

SPORTS AS SEEN

By John Frank Post, Jr.

Coach Fred Shwartz has been appointed Athletic Director for the new Junior high school athletic teams. There will be a football, basketball and softball teams, and maybe a track squad.
Mr. Schwarz was line coach of the 1936 Hornet football team, coming here last year from Moody.
New equipment will be purchased for the boys and the school officials are trying to match enough games to have a regular schedule.
The boys reporting for football will probably work out and have regular practice sessions on the old athletic field, which will be fixed up so as to make it suitable for that purpose. However, they will play their scheduled games on the new football field.

In the late years there has been an increasing need for teams of this kind. As a result the younger boys will be taught the funda-mentals of football before they play in the official schhmm rr
Last year for instance, 54 boys reported for football at the opening of school. The coaches did not have time to teach those inexperienced boys all they should have known before the first game was played. All of them did not get into the regular scrimmages and did not get all the benefit of their football training. With the establishment of the new junior high these boys will be ready to go right into the more "inside" part of football without the coaches using all their time teaching them the fundamentals. They will also have the benefit of the regular games, played under the official rules with the competent referees, which will prove invaluable to them.

This applies to all the other athletic squads that are organized there, and this innovation should be a boon to the sports in general at Gatesville High.

MACON DISASTER REPEATED FOR "GO GETTER" PICTURE

Never having and an airship plunge into an ocean your correspondent was more than delighted to accompany his guide to Stage 5 at Warner Bros. studios after being informed that they were cracking up the U.S.S. Macon for a sequence in the Cosmopolitan production, "The Go Getter," which comes to the Regal Theatre Theatre, Saturday night 10:30.

The Macon, you'll remember, dived into the Pacific coast in February, 1935," the guide recalled. "She got caught in a storm; part of her upper fin tore away and down she went."

Our guide explained that the sequence was in the picture simply to eliminate the right leg of George Brent, male star of the production.

"Eliminate his right leg?" we inquired, puzzled.

"Yes. He's supposed to injure it in the crash and they have to amputate it later in the hospital. Then Brent is further unfit for further service in the navy and he has to go back into civilian life. He gets a job selling lumber for Capp Ricks., Petter B. Kyne's famous fiction character, played by Charles Winninger in the picture, and that gives him the opportunity to fall in love with the boss' daughter, Anita Louise."

WORLD COMMENT

Joe Burns

The era of presidential domination of both the executive and legislative branches of the federal government, established in 1933 and nescitiated by the exigencies of a devastating economic crisis, ended when the Senate voted 70 to 20 to recommit the compromise judiciary reorganization bill to its judiciary committee for the purpose of eliminating the provisions affecting the Supreme Court. The Senate has reassumed its traditional prerogatives and once again we have the three independent branches of government—executive, legislative, judicial—functioning as in normal times.

The nation is ready for a new era of sane, constructive leadership—a leadership which the Democratic Party and President Roosevelt are in an enviable position to supply. The Democratic Party was split wide open by the obdurate stand of the President and his clique of liberal advisers that the Supreme Court be enlarged and subjected to executive control. The threats of Chairman Farley and his emissaries of the Post Office Department and the Democratic National Committee against those Senators who opposed the bill added salt to the wounds of dissension within the party.

The fact remains that President Roosevelt is today popular with the masses, in spite of his championing of a cause with which they were not in sympathy and that three and a half years of his second term remain in which he can unite with his overwhelming majority in Congress to place the nation on its feet.

In spite of the vindictive charges hurled against those who opposed the court bill, the self-evident truth is that he is best friends are today ready and willing to join with him in inaugurating a new era of party harmony and constructive legislation for the country at large.

That small group of legislators which might rightly be branded as "reactionary" and "Tory" did not lead the fight against Supreme Court reorganization. Instead, the opposition group in the Senate was pronounced liberal. Senator Wheeler has been identified as liberal throughout his political career, and the President was assiduously defended and supported during his first administration by Connally, Clark, O'Mahoney, McCarran, and most of the other oppositionists.

There is a group in Washington which should make a quiet though dignified retirement from the scene following the fiasco of the Supreme Court plan. That group includes Tom Corcoran, Benjamin Cohen and others behind the scenes who have had the President's ear since the beginning of his second term. The original scheme to increase the membership of the federal court originated among these schemers who believed the nation could be reformed from top to bottom in four short years. They have contributed more toward wrecking the President's popularity and the solidarity of the Democratic Party than did all the mistakes of the first Roosevelt administration combined. The Nation and the President have no further need of them.

Reassumption of the policies of the first administration in so far as a spirit of cooperation between the executive and legislature is now in the offing, due largely to the mediation efforts of Vice President Garner, Senator Barkley, the new Senate leader who voted to recommit the Court bill, Senator Burke, and others. The Administration must realize, however, that the day of blank check handouts from Congress is over.

Those forces which ardent Roosevelt men choose to brand as "reactionary" but which in reality stand for economy in government, including a balanced budget, reduction for relief rolls, labor peace, and strict adherence to constitutional law as the best preventative against American Hitlers, are now in control of the Senate, in which Senator Barkley believed to be the administration candidate, defeated Senator Harrison, supported by the Court oppositionists, by only one vote—the result being 38 to 37. Thus the Democratic membership of the Senate is split almost 50 to 50—but the G.O.P. representation which numbers 16 will inevitably be cast for the principles enunciated by the so-called "conservative" bloc. So does the administration find its forces in a numerical majority in the Senate—but with a liberal bloc of friendly representatives of the Senate ready to cooperate on all sensible legislation.

Farmers and Ranchmen O.K. Game Conservation Demonstration Plan

That Texas farmers and ranchmen approve the game management demonstration plan offered by the Extension Service of Texas A. and M. College is evident from the enrollment of 1,597,600 acres in 30 counties, according to R. E. Callender, game management specialist.

The plan which has been in operation less than a year, calls for demonstrations featuring deer, wild turkey, antelope, beaver, prairie chicken, quail, fish and other forms of wild game. Farmers and ranchers who enter the game management program organize into associations and set aside their land as game preserve demonstrations.

In most cases the preserves will be open to restricted hunting. Hunters will pay a nominal fee, part of which will go to the owner of the land, and the remainder to the association to be used to provide cover, feed, and other protection for the game.

Dallas county leads in the number of individual demonstrations as well as in total acreage involved with 648 land owners and 150,000 acres. Other counties listed by Callender as high in the ranking include Stephens, with 124 demonstrators and 110,000 acres; Baylor, with 98,077 acres; Young, 83,586; Callahan 76,590; Kaufman, 42,000; and Colorado, 40,000 acres. In Wheeler county 36,000 acres along Sweet Water Creek are devoted to beaver management.

In addition to working with farmers and ranchmen on the plan, county agricultural agents have a number of demonstrations with 4-H club members Callender said.

SOME COTTON DELUSIONS

By Clarence Ousley

There have been many delusions about cotton production in the South. One of the earliest was that God bestowed upon his people a monopoly which would forever remain as their precious heritage. Thoughtful and informed persons long protested that there was a cotton belt all around the earth and that wherever in the temperate zone good soil was found cotton could be successfully produced. Finally this delusion is dispelled by the fact that Southern cotton, which once furnished 60 per cent of the world's supply, now furnishes but little more than 40 per cent.

Another delusion was that the soils of the black lands of Texas were inexhaustible, though educated persons long protested that plants absorb certain elements of soil fertility and without replenishment in due course of time soils consistently cropped in any plant will become exhausted. This delusion has been dispelled by the stern fact that the average acre yield in Texas has declined in the last 50 years from more than 200 pounds of lint to 128 or 150.

Two other delusions remain. One is that one kind of cotton seed is about as good as another for producing cotton. Somewhat akin to that delusion is the notion that the lint outturn of any cotton variety is more im-

The mowing machine is the farmer's biggest aid in pasture improvement work.

The greatest improvement in pastures in humid regions, says R. R. Lancaster, pasture specialist of the Texas A. and M. Extension Service, results from mowing.

The direct result of mowing pastures is to give good grasses, which have been shaded out, an even start with poor grasses and weeds. Most troublesome pasture weeds can be eradicated by mowing twice a year for two or three years.

At the Angleton Experiment Station, mowing twice a year increased the yield of the experimental pastures from three to five times over nearby unmowed pastures. Hereford cattle, carried for two years on native pastures mowed twice a year, weighed approximately two hundred pounds more than a similar group on unmowed native pastures.

The best grasses are those that grow in the sunlight, according to Lancaster. Mowing removes weeds and tall grasses and permits sunlight to reach grasses which have been growing in the half shade.

If weeds are cut just before the seed mature, they will be at their weakest stage in food reserve and will not recover as rapidly as otherwise. The weed stubble from the first cutting should be tall enough to allow a second cutting below any new branches that sprout from the stubble, Lancaster warned.

portant than the quality of the fiber. This delusion is not yet dispelled but courageous leaders of the cotton producing, the cotton-mechandising, and the cotton-processing industries are making a strenuous effort to dispel it, through the educational committee of the Texas Cotton Improvement Committee. No more convincing evidence of the folly of the delusion can be cited than the statement of Messrs. Anderson, Clayton, & Co., the world's largest cotton merchant's that through Texas cotton once commanded a premium in the markets of the world it is now the case that many spinners make their contracts of purchase with the "specific provision that Texas and Oklahoma cotton shall not be delivered in filling the sale."

The other delusion is that the staple length of cotton has no relation to market price. This particular delusion is directly encouraged by the practice of many cotton buyers at primary markets in paying the same price for inferior and superior cotton, though they well know that in the ultimate market the superior cotton will command a premium over the inferior. These buyers are either ignorant of the elements of grade and staple or they are themselves under the delusion that it is not good business policy to pay one of their farmer customers more than they pay others.

Other cotton-growing countries which practice more "regimentation" than even our discarded AAA program, control the varities of cotton planted in Brazil in particular, our newest and most potential rival in cotton production, has brought her staple to the point where it averages better than ours.

These facts, thus attested and undisputed, are a severe indictment of the aptitude and the sagacity of the two most important parties of the cotton producing industry—to wit, the cotton producer and the primary market buyer. Reform must begin with them, and they should realize that the efforts of the Texas Cotton Improvement Committee are sincere endeavors to render them a valuable service. reflect he will understand that cotton, like all other plants and animals, is subject to the law that "like begets like," that inferior seed will produce inferior cotton, inferior in both yield and quality are more important than lint outturn.

If the cotton buyer will reflect he will understand that the invariable rule of commerce is that quality determines value, and if he has the slightest sense of justice he will equip himself to determine the quality of the cotton he buys and pay to the grower the due premium which the ultimate market freely grants to the merchant who assembles and distributes it.

These delusions will be dispelled when these two parties to cotton production come to understanding and practice of the fundamental rules.

SYNOPSIS
 Jack Gordon, crack air pilot, comes to New York on vacation from his western division duties only to be called back to Salt Lake City to fly a ship to San Francisco. He balks but changes his mind when he sees pretty Felice Rollins, society heiress, board the west-bound plane. Felice treats him coldly until they reach Chicago where a gun-toting foreigner named Stephani attempts to stop Felice from continuing to San Francisco. Gordon saves Felice. In Salt Lake City, Stephani attempts to bribe Jack by offering him five thousand dollars to make a forced landing before they reach the Coast. Jack refuses and locks Stephani in a closet a few minutes before the plane leaves. But when they take off, Stephani is in his old seat in the plane!

CHAPTER VII.
 "GORDON three four two to Salt Lake—" Jack was speaking into the radio. "Gordon three four two to Salt Lake —

Freddy. "I'll fix that cockroach." "You gotta go back!" Stephani was screaming as he stood in the aisle, his eyes wild and his hair tousled. "You'll kill us all . . . I can't stand it! . . . I'll jump out if you don't go back!" He looked like a man gone completely insane and panic was beginning among the passengers. "Cut the comedy," snapped Jack, starting toward him. "Comedy!" Stephani's scream was as convincing as if he really had been insane. "You're trying to kill us and you call it comedy." Before the pilot could reach him Palmer entered the situation. For a second there appeared on his face the cold expression of the killer who kills for the love of it. He rose quietly, struck Stephani on

"You're turning around," she cried. "But you can't do that." "Please—you'll have to get out of here." Jack was all business. He turned back to banking the plane through the blinding snow storm which now surrounded them. "You promised you'd go through!" "I said I'd TRY to get through. It can't be done. I can't risk killing everybody just to satisfy you." "You're yellow!" she raged as she went out and slammed the door. "What's the matter with Beulah?" Freddy inquired with a grin. "Her name's Felice," was the curt answer. "Well then—what's the matter with Felice?" "None of your darned business!"

"What happened?" inquired Freddy when Jack returned. "Stephani got funny—Palmer knocked him cold," Jack replied.

Three miles north of Wendover—clear here but heavy overcast ahead—what is Elko?" "Salt Lake to Gordon three forty two," came the reply. "Elko—ceiling zero—visibility zero—wind northwest twenty-five." "Not so hot," muttered Freddy, reading the message as his pilot scribbled it on a pad. He glanced out of the window and studied the heavy, snow-laden clouds which were blotting out the landscape ahead. "Air's going to be pretty bumpy," said Gordon. "Better go back and help Ann get the passengers into their safety belts." "You're not going right on into that storm?" Stephani demanded wildly as the co-pilot entered the cabin. "Everything is perfectly all right," soothed Freddy. "There's absolutely no danger." "I won't stand for it." The Count was becoming more and more excited. "It's suicide." He turned to the other passengers. "There's no sense taking such chances. We should insist they turn back." After fixing the safety belts, Freddy returned to the cockpit only to be followed by Ann a moment later. "Jack, come here—quick," she gasped. "This fellow Stephani's gone crazy." "Here—keep her on this course and keep climbing so we won't kiss a mountain," Jack commanded the jaw and then, before the latter, completely knocked out, could fall to the floor, struck him again with terrific force. Then he stood looking down at the unconscious man, his lips curled back in a vicious smile, as though the blow had given him a definite physical thrill. "That second blow wasn't necessary," Dr. Evarts remarked coldly as he came and knelt beside the injured man. "What'd you want me to do—kiss him?" sneered Palmer. "What happened?" inquired Freddy when Jack returned. "Stephani got funny—Palmer knocked him cold." "Hadn't we better land and get rid of him?" "Land, my eye! If we have to get rid of him we'll push him overboard." He switched on the radio and called Salt Lake. "Elko closing in rapidly," came Pete's voice. "Return to Salt Lake or land at the nearest emergency field." "Now wait a minute, Pete," protested Jack. "This looks like it might clear up a bit." "Return to Salt Lake or land at nearest emergency field!" "Okay." The pilot became resigned to the inevitable. Then to Freddy. "Hang on, we're heading for home." He tilted the plane for a curve. Hardly had he done so when the door opened and Felice entered.

"If they start naming planes like Pullman cars, they'll call this the Squirrel Cage," grunted the other. "She's a pain in the neck," Jack started muttering, more to himself than to Freddy as he peered through the black blizzard outside. "Yellow, eh—because I won't risk nine people's lives—including her own—Well, all right—so what? But," he added as if reasoning with himself. "I can understand how she feels—once I start I hate to turn back myself—I sure hate to save someone's life—and Waldemar's ma will sue for a million dollars and Felice won't reach that girl on the train." He reached a sudden decision. "Wonder if I could sneak through to the South?" As he spoke the ship broke through into clear weather and both pilots heaved sighs of relief. Then Jack switched on the radio, and banked the ship. "Gordon three four two to Salt Lake," he called. "Three miles south of Shafter—weather's breaking to the West—going to try it again." "He's going back again," cried Palmer in the cabin. Stephani, who had recovered consciousness, lost his smile of satisfaction and began to groan. "Yeah, I know all that," Jack was arguing with Pete over the radio. "If it looks bad South, I'll come back." He reached for a pad and pencil and started writing down a message for Dr. Evarts. "PATIENT JUST DIED," it read. "COMMITTEE WILL MEET YOU IN SAN FRANCISCO. (SIGNED) DR. GULLIVER." For fifteen minutes the plane proceeded smoothly through clear skies until, far to the South, it reached a dip in the mountain range. "This is the place," said Jack. "Two or three times before I've sneaked through here when I couldn't make it farther north." Hardly had they entered the pass, however, when a bank of black clouds started pouring into it just ahead of them. "No good!" Gordon's voice showed his acute disappointment. "Got to go back." He pulled the plane up to a quick, climbing turn which threw the passengers into confusion. As he completed the maneuver inky clouds spurted into the eastern end of the valley. "Too late, Freddy," gritted the pilot. "We're caught dead to rights."

MOORE & TIPPIT FAMILY REUNION HELD SUNDAY JULY 18; NEFF PARK

A most enjoyable day was spent by the Moore and Tippit descendants at Mother Neff Park on Sunday, July 18th. Arrangements had been made and all notified from time to time.

There were approximately two hundred present for the occasion. There being eight direct descendants from the Moore family, being four boys and four girls, seven still living. Three brothers and three sisters present. One sister died several years ago. One brother, Jim Moore, living at Clegg, Texas was unable to be present.

There were sixteen of the Tippit family, some having died in early childhood and there remains only two living children, A. J. Tippit of Alpine, Texas and Mrs. Levia Clawson of Flat, both being present.

Mr. Allen Tippit made a short talk telling about the Tippit family coming to Texas and their final settling in Coryell County. He related many hardships in the early days including the trouble with the Indians.

Mr. Euram Moore made a short talk relative to the Moore family.

Both of these families settled in the same community in and around Flat, Texas where all grew to maturity. They were neighbors in every sense of the word.

Their families scattered over the state of Texas from time to time until every section of the state has some of these descendants.

Words cannot describe the occasion. There was every sign of joy. Even tears of joy when these people arrived at the park. Gladness is a mild way of saying how these folks felt. To meet relatives all day long. Loved relatives from all parts of the state that some had not seen for years and others who had never met before.

Dinner, as these folks call it, and truly it was a dinner. Barbecue had been prepared and everyone brought their dinner. All was spread on the park tables and you can only imagine the good things there were to eat. There was enough to have fed twice the number. I'll assure you that if anyone went away hungry, it was his own fault.

There were among these people some few who were not related to them, but who were old friends from childhood. Who could resist the opportunity to see their old friends? You may be sure that they were certainly welcome.

Soon after dinner you could hear throughout the crowd that it was such an enjoyable occasion that it would be an annual reunion. Earl Moore of Taylor was elected chairman and Leslie Tippit of Flat, was elected corresponding secretary.

From that time until night you could see them bid goodbye and winding their way from the park to their cars, greatly thankful that they had been spared and given the opportunity to meet. All expressed hope of being able to be back next year. The next reunion will be on the third Sunday in July next year at Neff Park.

HOW MUCH WILL IT COST TO RUN?

Only KELVINATOR tells you with a SIGNED CERTIFICATE OF LOW COST OF OPERATION

Cost of operation is a vital factor in your choice of an electric refrigerator. If the refrigerator you buy isn't efficient and economical of operation, you pay extra for your refrigeration month after month, year after year.

In buying a Kelvinator, you don't have to guess about operating cost. Kelvinator, and only Kelvinator, gives you a Signed Certificate of Low Cost of Operation that tells you in advance what your current consumption will be. Kelvinator can do this because Kelvinator is Plus-Powered. It has twice the cooling capacity and half the running time of many electric refrigerators of equal size now in use.

Kelvinator puts your mind at ease on other points, too. Kelvinator's 5-Year Protection Plan gives you signed assurance of reliable performance. Kelvinator's built-in thermometer shows you at all times how cold it is in the food compartment. And Kelvinator gives you rubber grids in all ice trays, automatic return from defrosting, interior light, sliding shelves and every other worthwhile convenience.

See the Plus-Powered Kelvinator today and you'll say: "There's the refrigerator that we're going to buy."
