W. D. Stockbucker Makes It "Three" In The Co. Supt's Race.

To the citizens of Coryell County:

Four years ago I submitted my name to the democratic voters of Coryell County for the office of County Superintendent of Schools. You gave me a splendid vote for which I shall always be grateful to you. With four more years of intensive study of the schools and school problems of the state and county, I believe I am better qualified to serve you if intrusted with this responsible position. Therefore I am again asking you for a careful consideration for this place when you cast your vote in the next primary election.

As to my qualifications, I am a college graduate, also having several years of teaching experience, in the common classified, and affiliated schools of Coryell county and central Texas.

My office and business experience has been sufficient as to enable me to handle the clerical work of the office, if elected.

Again thanking you for any favors shown me in the past or any consideration given me in the future, I am

Yours Respectfully,
W. D. Stockbucker

GRANDJURY RETURNS FIVE FELONIES AFTER WEEK'S WORK

District court slowed up this week after the Grand Jury came in with five felony cases for their weeks work.

As some of the parties have not been notified no indication was given by Judge R. Bates Cross as to the cases or the nature of them. The jurors were dismissed, and will re-convene later in the January session for further work.

Due to sickness, and that some of the legalites in the civil suits were at work in other courts, no cases have been called for the early part of this week, and the first case comes up Thursday. Petit jurors were dismissed until Thursday.

Thursday, the case of Flem Manning vs. Service Mutual Insurance Co. will be the delectable for the jury to start work on at that time.

Candidates Continue To Add Names To Growing List

As every day passes, more candidates are added to the ever growing list of aspirants to office in Coryell County.

In the Sheriff's race the name of George R. Hodges is added, leaving a vulnerable opening in the Constables race; which it is thought will bring out others thick and fast when the announcement is known.

In the County Supt's race, the name added this week is that of W. D. Stockbucker of Oglesby, who gives the voters his own statement.

In the heavy loaded Commissioners' race, there is the name of J. Milton Price, who will also divide the vote in that race.

Looking cityward, the race seems to be at a stand still with no new aspirants, and those who have already announced are not yet in our columns. Others are being expected momentarily.

If it was a race track, this would be book makers paradise.

Lassies of County to Tangle in B. B. Playoff Tonight

Tonight in the local gym the first round of the girl Round Robin schedule, played to decide the championship of this county will take place.

The local Hornets have come thru the season undefeated, having won around 25 games. They are overwhelming favorites to capture the title, but Pearl, Flat and Turnersville all have fine teams, and if they should happen to get lucky they could knock the local Hornets off their perch.

At 7:00 o'clock the Turnersville and Pearl teams clash. Both teams are small but their play is fast and furious. Turnersville was good enough to advance to the semi-finals of the invitational tournament held here, and with Pearl coming along at a fast rate, the game is due to be a good one.

At 8:00 o'clock Jonesboro and the Hornets tangle with Gatesville favored to come out on the long end of the score.

At 9:00 a strong Flat team meets Copperas Cove in a game that Flat should win.

Crowds have been getting larger and larger as the season progresses. You can enjoy three full hours of good basket ball for the small price of ten cents. The local lassies have one off the best teams in the state and everybody should come out to the gym and help the Hornets take Jonesboro.

Hornets and Hornettes Win Turnersville Tournament

FIVE MINUTES TO MIDNIGHT LAST SUBSCRIBER CAME IN

At exactly "Five Minutes til Midnite", the last subscriber at the half price rate on the Coryell County News came into the News office Saturday night. It was all over 5 minutes later.

This party was Mr. Jess Hale of Ames, who came in just in time.

We were forced to turn down "charge" and "phoned in" subscription orders, as the closing date would never end, if subscriptions were taken that way.

We are certainly pleased with the response, and we believe most of the subscribers and non-subscribers knew the final date, but we are sorry some of them failed to "get in under the deadline".

Our rate effective at 12 Midnight Saturday night, for subscriptions are: $1.00 a year in the county; 60c six months in the county; $1.50 out of the county, and 75c six months out of the county.

These are not "raised" prices they are the regular prices, as have been carried thruout the time the News has been published, but the "depression" got us, and you and the price was cut.

Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Fletcher and sons of Tyler were visitors here during the weekend.

Guests of Mrs. A. G. Tipton Monday were Mrs. Priddie, Mrs. Jorden's sister all of Meridian.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Irving of Moody were guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Scott Sunday.

Mrs. John R. Colgin, representative for the Amicable Life Insurance Co. in this county will be a guest at their annual Convention held in Waco the latter part of the week.

CHAPTER I

THE jerk that stopped the little train all but hurled young Ramsay McKay through the open door of the baggage car. Before he had recovered balance he was yelling his urge for speed across the heads of the crowd.

"Hi, Bart! Hurry up with that ice."

And, by the time Bart had the pair of horses and spring wagon alongside the car, Ramsay had rolled a dozen kegs to the doorway, ready for transfer.

"What in tarnation would Ramsay McKay be wantin' with a wagonload of ice?" one bystander asked another. "And, what's his dang-ed hurry?"

"Dunno about the ice," the other answered, "but he's workin' for Henry Wells and Will Fargo and hurry's what them fellows aim to do."

There were plenty of on-lookers—men, women and children—to show curiosity over Ramsay McKay's activity that

At least one day each week brought young Ramsay McKay with letters and packages for the villagers.

"Tuesday," Ramsay replied. "Boat to Albany, trains to Schenectady, Utica, Syracuse and Auburn; wagon to Geneva, where I caught this ho-jack, and here I am."

"Je—hos—e—phat! Four hundred and fifty miles in four days!"

"I've set a record, I guess," Ramsay admitted with a degree of pride.

Meanwhile attention of the on-lookers had been attracted by activities of two of their better-known fellow citizens.

cluded. "Anyone got anything for Buffalo?"

Ramsay was in the driver's seat of his wagon when the postmaster and marshal stepped up beside the wheel.

"Come down from there, Ramsay McKay," the postmaster ordered. "You're under arrest."

"What for?" Ramsay demanded. "And by whose authority?"

"My authority," the postmaster answered testily. "I'm supposed to be postmaster of this town. But here you come in wit' a couple of dozen letters and collect for 'em, while I only get three. You're competin' with the gov'ment mail service; that's what for."

The postmaster turned on the hesitant marshal.

"You goin' to do your duty?" he insisted.

"Better come down, Ramsay," the reluctant peace officer suggested, and put a foot on the wheel-hub.

"No passengers," Ramsay warned him, "and they're waiting for these kegs in Buffalo."

morning. For, in the Fall of 1843, arrival of the daily train in the bustling village of Batavia was still the sight of the century, and high moment in the lives of upstate New Yorkers who gathered to marvel at the snorting wood-burner locomotive with its towering stack and array of mysterious levers in the open cab. The newfangled contraption, it was said, could speed at forty miles an hour when unencumbered with a load, and had been known to make twelve miles an hour when hauling the baggage car and two passenger coaches.

Some day the railroad would build through to Buffalo but as long as Batavia was its Western terminus, local citizenry regarded it as a personal possession and trooped by scores to view its performances. Furthermore, at least one day each week brought young Ramsay McKay with letters and packages for the villagers and the larger consignments which he transferred to wagon and hauled by team to the city of Buffalo.

As the two expressmen labored over the kegs, Ramsay continued to urge greater speed.

"Got to make Buffalo by one o'clock," he reminded his helper.

"That'll be movin'," Bart commented. "When did you leave New York?"

"What's the postmaster and the marshal arguin' about?" one asked the station agent.

"Postmaster wants Ramsay arrested," that worthy replied. "Claims he's usurpin' gov'ment rights and competin' with the United States mail."

"That don't make sense. 'Twasn't until Henry Wells began to bring letters through here we ever got any the same year they were written, and he only charges six cents where the gov'ment charges twenty-five. Yup, there goes the marshal, but I'll bet it's what's in them kegs that's the trouble. What is in 'em, anyway?"

"Don't know," the agent answered.

Ramsay McKay now left to Bart the further stowing of the Buffalo consignments and jumped to the ground with his letters and packages for Batavia delivery. Most of the consignees Ramsay knew by sight and could call by name, and as his better than six feet of handsome young manhood rose well above the crowd he lost little time in making his deliveries and collecting the fees for service. From the running fire of greetings and comments it was evident that Ramsay was a prime favorite in Batavia.

"That's all today, folks," he con-

As the marshal reached for the handrail Ramsay chirruped to his horses and cracked the whiplash above their ears. The wagon was off down the road and the marshal tumbled into the dust.

Twenty miles out of Batavia, Ramsay checked his watch against a landmark to discover that his unusually heavy load had slowed him below schedule-time. His team was in good shape; the last five miles into Buffalo was level going, so he'd let them run for it.

Just two men in the world, he thought, knew how important it was that he reach Buffalo before one o'clock. The two were himself and Henry Wells, and Henry Wells was in Buffalo waiting.

In the light of subsequent events, however, it is doubtful that even Henry Wells could have suspected the extent to which a broken wheel just around a bend in the road, was to shift the course of destiny.

As Ramsay's wagon took a turn with his team on the dead run, head-on in front of him was a disabled carriage down on a rear axle. Beside the wreck stood a coachman. In the carriage two women stood up and screamed in horrified helplessness before Ramsay's onrushing horses.

1-MINUTE SAFETY TALKS
By Don Herold

We'll drive moderately, and if we have an accident, it will be a nicer one

How to Have More Trivial Accidents

If we are going to have automobile accidents, let's have little ones. It is not such a serious matter when we dent a fender. What we don't want to dent is a skull.

How shall we select for ourselves the smaller or more insignificant or skin-deep or grade "C" accidents?

I have a book in my lap, compiled by The Travelers Insurance Company on last year's smashes and crashes. It tells us which kind of accidents are the deadliest. Let's get a line on 'em and avoid THAT kind.

About the surest way to cinch your death in an automobile accident is to mix in a little alcohol. With an intoxicated driver (you or somebody else) at the wheel, your chance of death is greater than with a sober man at the wheel. I mean if you take 1,000 drunk accidents and 1,000 sober accidents there'll be more deaths in the drunk accidents.

Even an intoxicated pedestrian has a better chance of being killed than a sober pedestrian - per accident.

There has been a lot of loose talk about the safety of driving fast. A lot of people think that it is all right to drive fast if they drive "careful". But the figures show that the rate of death per accident which involves exceeding the speed limit is much worse than the average death rate for all accidents due to improper driving practices.

Places, too, have a lot to do with the violence of your accident. The rate of death per accident on highways and at rural intersections is more than 200 per cent greater than on city streets.

Time plays a part, also. The death rate per accident after dark is about 60 per cent worse than during daylight.

May all your accidents be little ones and they're more apt to be little ones if you know about and avoid these deadlier spots and practices.

After all the entertainment was over we went into the dining room and found it very prettily decorated with the same colors. There were two large candles burning when we went in, which made everything very pretty. The refreshments were punch and cookies. There were seventeen present.

WORLD COMMENT

Joe Burns

Summing up the President's address on the state of the Union, one finds the recommendations made by the chief executive to be of a decidedly negative character. This fundamental reaction was invoked in the writer's mind: Why did not the President say in 1933 what he said last week?

For five years now Mr. Roosevelt has been declaiming against monopoly, unfair business practices, and unjust wage differentials—the main points of attack in his address with the exceptions of the farm problem—and yet, by his own admission, these evils have not been corrected.

After being in complete and unchallenged control of the Federal Government for five years, the President has failed to provide an equitable labor wage and to suppress those policies of business which he now so heartily condemns. The essence of the administration's effort to correct business evils has been to declare war on business both in the halls of Congress by punitive legislation and before the American people by public indictments, by such action destroying any possibilities for co-operation between business and government tending toward a general betterment of relations between capital and labor.

This is one reaction growing out of the address to Congress. The second reaction is this: Mr. Roosevelt, in spite of the great power of leadership and strength in the legislative body which he has wielded almost unchallenged for five years, has signally failed in his efforts to restore a normal and healthy prosperity.

The government-financed boom which had its inception with the inauguration of the pump-priming activities in 1933 and which was maintained by the yearly expenditure of billions of public funds, burst last August. Since that time we have witnessed a repetition of those belated occurrences of 1930-33, such an increasing unemployment in heavy industry, shut-downs, depression markets, bankruptcies, foreclosures and the like, although in a form not so severe as that of seven years ago.

Thirdly, there is this to be gleaned from the President's statement that "we have raised the nation's income from 38 billion dollars in the year 1932 to about 68 billion dollars in the year 1937. Our goal, our objective, is to raise it to 90 or 100 billion dollars."

In other words, the President objective is to raise the nation's income about 50 percent over what it has been this year. He proposes to make it possible for the nation to produce three dollars where it now produces two. But how is this aim—clearly a laudable one—to be achieved?

Two methods were proposed in the President's message. By paying the farmers a government subsidy to produce less so that prices may be higher, and by legislating shorter working hours in industry, this increase in the nation's income is to be accomplished. So said the President.

But is that possible? Obviously, there is confusion on this point on the President's part. Is the national income to be increased by producing less agricultural products and because of higher wages and shorter hours, by paying higher prices for manufactured products?

Lastly, what about the increased funds for national defense which the President requests of Congress? This column has never criticized any expenditure of public funds for national defense. But the appropriation of defense funds merits closer scrutiny by Congress and the people, and here is the relevant point about the President's recommendation: Are the additional armaments necessary for the defense of our possessions and our home shores? If so they should be authorized. If not, no appropriation should be made. We in America should never fight another war on foreign soil. We do not need a navy for any purpose other than for the defense of the United States and its possessions. Before this defense money is authorized, it should be definitely ascertained whether the President is proposing to create an offensive navy or to maintain at reasonable and sufficient a defense navy.

Interesting in this connection is the resolution passed by the Senate, calling upon the State Department to provide information on the extent of American capital invested in China, the number of American nationals in that country, and the size of American armed forces there. Senator Frederick Steiwer, Oregon Republican authorized and sponsored the resolution over the protests of administration and leader Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky.

Surely the American people have a right to know how many troops and ships we are maintaining in Chinese war zones and why they are there.
