BASEBALL CHATTER By Post

The Ireland Cardinals and the Gatesville Hornets broke into the win column for the first time over Turnersville and the State.

Francis Rutherford, Hornet twirler, pitched some fine ball in turning back the State nine. He allowed only a few hits, and the one run the State scored came as the direct result of errors by Pierce Richards, Hornet short stop. The entire Hornet nine played a fiery, hustling brand of championship ball and behind the fine twirling of Rutherford, they should go to town.

Ireland had to use four hurlers before they decided on the Turnersville Buffaloes, 14-7. The Cardinals displayed a powerful punch at the plate, but did not have any effective pitching to back their terrific batting strength. Everything went smoothly for Ireland until the fourth inning. They were leading the Buffaloes 4-0, and Lemmer was turning the Buffaloes back. But in that frame the Turnersville team strated a rally and kept it up into the sixth inning. However, in the sixth Paul Russel slugged out a long homer with two mates aboard to put Ireland into the lead 8-6. From then on Ireland commanded the situation.

In their only league game to date, Flat eked out a 3-7 win over Turnersville.

GATESVILLE, TEXAS, FRIDAY APRIL 22, 1938

WORLD COMMENT

Joe Burns

Col. Ernest O. Thompson opened his campaign for governor at Waco last week eleven days in advance of the opening gun of William McCraw to be delivered April 23 at Arlington. Thompson spoke to a large audience, including a three hundred delegation from Ft. Worth. Two former governors were present—Ross S. Sterling and Pat M. Neff, together with many distinguished Texans, including Secretary of State Edward Clark and Myron G. Blalock of Marshall, chairman of the State Democratic Committee, who will manage Thompson's campaign. Both Clark and Blalock have been loyal and close supporters of Governor Allred in his campaigns.

Thompson outlined his platform in minute detail, carrying out his pledge to inform the people of Texas as to his stand on all major issues.

Stating that utility rates in Texas are too high and that the power and authority to fix all utility rates for the protection of the consumer should be given to a State agency or commission, to be determined by the legislature, Thompson declared, "The people of Texas are entitled to fair utility rates. Elect me Governor and I'll see that you get it."

He expressed his opposition to the open saloon, sale of liquor by the drink and all forms of gambling.

Stating that the greatest problem facing Texas is unemployment, Thompson said,

"How can we get gainful jobs for our unemployed Texans? I intend to meet this challenge by encouraging and fostering legitimate business, small and large, to the end that Texas may prosper and go forward. It is time in Texas that the thinking people assure our citizens and the citizens of America that business and industry in Texas are not going to be hampered by feckish laws, rules and regulations and unholy taxes."

Thompson reiterated his belief that no new taxes are necessary at the present time and stressed that this would be an incentive for new industries to come to Texas.

"I know that Texas is an attractive field for industrial expansion," he said. "We have cheap gas; we have raw materials; we have the transportation. We have some of the best ports in the world, and I believe that our State should adopt a definite program calculated to invite the establishment of new industries in this State."

An aggressive and practical program of industrial expansion would benefit organized labor, the farmers and ranchers and every other citizen in the state, he declared.

Other points in his platform stressed by Thompson included advocacy of a three-member land board to make sales and leases of public school lands; getting the insane out of jails and into hospitals, and recognition of the necessity of paying old-age and other pensions and caring for the State's share of the teachers' retirement fund.

Thompson removed his name as possible candidate for the senate in 1940 or 1942 when he said:

"I'll not use the office of governor as a stepping stone to the United States senate or any other office; I'll not be a candidate against Tom Connally, Morris Sheppard or anyone else, when my term expires I'll retire and practice law."

Bill McCraw will not release his platform in full until his Arlington address, but in its skeleton form, as released by the press Thompson's. The point is that the choice between McCraw and Thompson—generally regarded as the leaders in the marathon—is likely to devolve into a choice between two personalities because of the similarity of their platforms.

Should Karl Crowley base his campaign upon a sales tax and pensions for all over 65—measures sponsored by the Ferguson and opposed between the platforms of Thompson and McCraw on the other. Those voters who sided with the latter would then have to decide between McCraw and Thompson, who take the same stand on taxes and pensions for the old.

Friends of both Tom F. Hunter and Harry Hines say they will enter the race. Hunter, reportedly, has contracted for time over a Fort Worth radio station. Should either or both of these enter, there would be considerable importance attached to the platforms they would advocate.

Another factor to be considered is that the importance of the Ferguson "vest pocket" vote, which Jim Ferguson has promised to deliver to any candidate who adopts the Ferguson platform, increases with every new entry in the gubernatorial field. Should Hunter and Hines enter against Crowley, Thompson and McCraw, the chances of entering the runoff of the candidate bearing the Ferguson endorsement would be materially enhanced.

In the sketch of his platform released last week, Attorney General McCraw advocated avoidance or limit on further taxes together with economy and measures to stimulate, encourage and revive business. He condemned both the state sales tax and the state income tax.

"No smokeless smokestacks in Texas," he adopted as a business reassurance program.

"The people by their decisive vote have ordered their state government to carry out a broader more enlightened social welfare program. This touches the teachers, the old folks, the blind, the dependent children. It will cost more to carry out. Any slithering or evading of this program is unthinkable," he said.

"It is not optimism," he declared, "but a certainty that better business all over Texas will tremendously add to our revenue. I am confident that strict economy and business increase will take care of the situation. Should we be disappointed in a continued business increase, I shall look to those who are best able to pay to furnish funds to care for the aged, our needy children, the blind, and match the teacher retirement fund. Those best able to pay are the corporate interest controlling our natural resources, together with the pipelines and the public utilities."

"Business is not going to be disturbed by making a favorite out of one industry, or penalizing another. General confidence will be held because the needs of all the groups will be looked after impartially."

Note: All candidates for public office in Texas will be accorded equal space in this column in the discussion to follow before July primary. It is the purpose of this column, in the discussion upon

HALF AND HALF STRIP CROPPING SUCCESS ON PIDCOKE FARM

Mrs. Wade Hampton, a land owner in the Pidcoke community, expressed much enthusiasm concerning the erosion control program planned for her farm last week by the Soil Conservation Service.

Among other things that received her approval in the planning and rearranging of this farm was the use of half and half method of strip farming with small grain. The practice, as applied on the Hampton farm will consist of alternate strips of small grain and row crop equal widths. This method allows a two year rotation of row crop and grain areas without confusion of running new lines each year.

The new plan also provides for two fields, one of 40 acres and the other of 60 acres. Cotton and small grain strips will be planted in the other. This cropping plan will also be rotated each year between the two fields. In this way the field planted to corn and small grain each year may be grazed with sheep as soon as the grain has been harvested.

Before placing the farm under agreement, Mrs. Hampton was planting the same amount of small grain, but had each of the fields divided with cross fences in order to graze the small grain as soon as it was harvested. The new plan allows practically the same amount of grazing, removes the cross fences and provides a complete program of erosion control without changing the original cropping plan.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

Questions on Lighting

Here is bad and good lighting. At the left the light strikes almost directly on the front of the subject. Shadow contrasts are too harsh and the young lady's "crowning glory" is almost lost in the dark background. Notice the difference in the other picture where the light strikes from the side.

TAKING proper exposure for granted, right lighting, whether it be daylight or artificial, is the principal quality which distinguishes the photographic work of art from the ordinary haphazard snapshot. How much attention do we, as amateurs, really pay to how light illuminates our subject when we aim our cameras?

Suppose we are photographing a person, do we take the pains to avoid harsh front lighting, which makes our subject squint and casts deep shadows into eyes and from the nose. This usually happens when the sun is high and directly strikes the front of the subject. Especially in the case of a close-up the shadows that delineate the features are likely to be unpleasantly harsh.

Do we seek to discover the light angles that are most pleasing? Usually light coming from the side or a bit from behind the subject makes a better picture.

Do we observe the tone of the principal object of interest? If the object is dark do we note whether it is in such deep shadow that it is in danger of merging with the background when the negative is developed and the print made?

Do we notice whether a light colored subject is in a full glare of light without a dark background behind it to set it off? Sometimes a background that seems to be dark may not prove effective because of unobserved light reflections such as from the surface of water.

Some of the most famous photographers stress the intelligent use of light to an almost unbelievable degree. When working with artificial light, they may use thousands of watts on such a seemingly easily photographed subject as a basket of eggs. They carefully study the effects of variations in light intensity, how they affect sharpness of shadow outline, shadow density, shadow gradations. They experiment with these effects, shifting camera, lights, or the subject itself, and decreasing or increasing the volume of illumination. They want to show you a picture of that basket of eggs that is realistic enough to tempt you to reach your hand into the basket and pick one up, and by controlling the lighting, they succeed, in doing just about that very thing.

We, too, as amateurs, can immensely improve the quality of our pictures if we will but study and consider light effects, whether from the light of the sun or from home photo lamps.

Obviously, there can be no rigid rules for selecting or arranging light effects, considering the infinite variety of picture subjects, often quite differently affected by similar light conditions. Getting the right effects depends upon how much sense of the artistic we possess, plus experience-sizing up the picture chance.

But there is one general rule, and that is to seek contrast in the highlights and shadows that compose the outline, substance and background of the principal object of interest. At least we can avoid that cardinal sin of black and white photography—"flat" lighting.

For the first four days of this week the House moved off with a dispatch of business that seemed to indicate a determination to dispose of all necessary legislation and bring about an early adjournment. However, yesterday noon we received the President's message suggesting a vast new spending policy. It seemed to baffle or discourage the members so that last night the House adjourned over till Monday. Personally, I hated to lose this time as I am anxious for us to get home but all of us can profitably use the time in our offices or on visits to the department of government.

I am sure that the folks back home have no idea of the volume of business that comes to a Congressman's office. My secretary just tells me that yesterday we sent out over 150 individually dictated letters, exclusive of all of the printed matter that we have to keep going all of the time. Today we already mailed 50 letters and I have made two trips to Departments down town. We have to see the Departments on all kinds of matters—of course, chiefly in an effort (generally fruitless) to secure some kind of job but other departmental visits include such matters as the location and retention of CCC camps, the admission of aliens who have friends or relatives in our district, the interpretation of the farm regulations, refund of money, discharge of boys from the army, parole of convicts, establishment of rural mail routes and the collection of veterans benefits and more recently railroad retirement benefits, etc.

In connection with these last items let me suggest to all Gold Star Mothers, widows, fathers or other dependents of veterans killed in the World War, who are in need that the Congress has made provisions for the payment of compensation to such dependents at the time of the expiration of the payments on their War Risk Insurance. In most cases these payments will be $45.00 per month and will be made to those who have been receiving $57.50 per month insurance payments. Most of the insurance policies will be paid up this year and the Veterans Administration will very soon be faced with a congestion of the section that handles this new compensation. It will be well, therefore, for all who have such claims to file them as soon as possible, giving in every instance the veterans XC number and being sure to sign your name and address on the letter (not simply on the envelope). If our office can be of any assistance in securing action on these applications or on Railroad Retirement or other like claims do not hesitate to write me. It is our pleasure to render any service we can. Our only regret is that we can not always secure everything for our people that we think they should have.

The House worked all this week on the Agricultural Department Appropriation Bill but did not finish it. We did, however, win an important victory in the Committee of the Whole House yesterday. Early in the proceedings, we succeeded in adding an amendment making available an additional $400,000 to complete the tick eradication work in Texas for which the State appropriations will be expended in a few months and we secured this without any promise to repay it out of other funds coming to Texas as had been suggested.

Later in the afternoon we increased the funds for farm tenancy home purchase loans from $15,000,000 to $25,000,000 that had been authorized last year. This will but enable this program to go on a very inadequate basis but it will make possible a very worthwhile thing. I spoke on both of the above matters and pointed out in regard to the latter that the Farm Tenancy Program is the only program that has been brought before Congress which provides at one and the same time both a place for a man to live and for him to make a living. The urban housing programs are good and I am for them but they only put a roof over a man's head. They provide no means for enabling him to pay for that roof or to feed the family under that roof. The work and relief programs help feed himself and family but they do not enable him to become a home-owner, but a farm provides both a job and a home, and in this program we have a combination of the two most desirable features of a broad long-time relief program. I only hope that the House will not next week undo the fine work that we did yesterday because I believe that we can do no better work than to increase the number of tenants who can become homeowners.

SYNOPSIS

Released on the charge that he was captain of a slave ship, Captain Nuggin Taylor, an American, conspires with the British Naval Commissioner's Office to trap Lieutenant Tarryton of Her Majesty's Navy who is in league with the slave syndicate. Tarryton deserts the Navy and sails for America on the William Brown. Taylor takes the same boat with Powdah, his mate and is surprised to find Tarryton's sister, Margaret, aboard. Tarryton and Taylor have a fight over the latter's attentions to Margaret. A pyromaniac starts a fire aboard. Taylor goes after him. He falls and is stunned. While the fire rages and the passengers start to riot, the crazed firebug gets ready to kill the unconscious Taylor.

CHAPTER VI

In his extremity, Taylor's fingers closed on some chance object. It was the iron pipe which had laid him low, and now rolled after him. He brought it down blindly on Edding's open. One of the ship's boats hooked itself grotesquely to the main cross-trees.

It was stovewood. Next there was a sound of water rushing into the hull. Those who were uninjured staggered to their feet, reeling and trembling. But Babsie lay moaning. Powdah knelt and lifted her head.

"My little love, it's me, Powdah. Look, my jewel." A piece of chain from his wrist drew across the delicate throat.

"A jewel—you will never steal... Powdah... it was... so nice."

Babsie lay dead in his arms, with her head against his heart. A rabble of desperate shapes drove over them, fleeing—nowhither. The fat Purser, striking right and left, cried, "The Captain. Where's the Captain?"

"The Captain is dead. I am Captain dom? Margaret uttered a broken cry. Powdah shivered, and pulled at the chain dangling from his wrist when that grey shape struck the water.

George Martin, unmanned, put his head in his mother's lap. Old Mrs. Martin, in a remnant of a yellow settee, sat knitting.

"We are sinking," George cried. "Look, the rail is under."

The peasant-girl's eyes flashed with her first scorn of him.

"Come. You will make me drop stitch," the old lady said.

It was plain to any eye that the ship was sinking fast.

"Nothing can be done from inside," Taylor said. "Into the sail locker and light out the spare fore-topsail."

They wrestled the heavy folds of canvas out on deck.

"Iron. Bring me iron bars out of

"Over my dead body then," Tarryton cried, a pointed revolver for Taylor's heart.

skull. The madman's clutch loosened. He was dead; but other hands seized on Taylor's all but senseless body. He felt himself lifted out of the hold. Water was dashed on him. He revived. A group of frightened passengers replaced his rescuers, who had returned to the hold. Taylor got to his knees gripping a stanchion.

"Here is the man who set the fire," Tarryton's voice shouted.

"No... Not this man," Margaret moaned.

"I will swear it."

"And I will swear that I was in his arms when the fire broke out," the girl said with fierce passion. Her brother clapped his hand over her mouth.

"The Lieutenant is right," came another voice. Lindon's. "This is the man who set fire to my buildings in Liverpool. Seize him."

Uncertain looks passed. It was one thing to order this arrest and another thing to make it. Taylor's strength was returning fast.

As if out of the blue deep itself, a muffled cry was heard.

"Nuggin the ship's on fire. Save me. Save me."

Powdah was chained to a ring in the after-hold, next to the one that was on fire. Taylor seized a fire-ax from its pocket, and descended into that hold. With one stroke, he cut Powdah's chain.

"Come, there is work ahead."

He went up the ladder again. A bucket brigade had formed. The ship's Captain leaned over the raging hold with the glare of fire in his tortured face. The first officer plucked him back.

"My duty is here," the Captain shouted.

"But, sir—the explosives..."

The warning came too late. In that very second a dull explosion shook the ship from rucks to keel. Men and women were thrown flat on their faces. A pillar of black smoke laced with red gleams twisted up from the ship's waist. The deck was split here," Taylor said. He was torn and grimed, but master of the situation. In such a crisis, that man leads who best gives expression to his will. "Men, your officers are dead. Blown to bits. I am taking charge."

"Over my dead body then," Tarryton cried, and pointed a revolver for Taylor's heart. In another second, he would have snapped the cap, had not Margaret, smooched and bedraggled in her satons, knocked the weapon to the deck, with a little cry. Taylor got the revolver into his own hand.

"You and you and you—guard these boats with your lives," he said, pointing to three sailors. "Come below with me the rest. You, too, Powdah."

Powdah followed on. But the door to Margaret's cabin flapped as if beckoning. Jewels, sapphires, twinkled up at him from the rough planks. He took a step away, returned, and swept the gems up greedily in his two hands.

"Babsie, I'm sorry," he whispered with a haunted look over his shoulder.

Water had rushed into the ship and put the fire out; but it was not satisfied with its role of rescuer. It must now turn destroyer. Taylor's crew, up to their knees, and then to their thighs in water, salvaged charred kegs and crates of food. The carpenter's squad struggled desperately to build a bulkhead around the hole in the ship's bilge, but with small success.

Day dawned. The ship had listed, and was lower in the water. The sea was empty. A circle of solitude, a silence of death, was fitted round them like a shroud. Four or five bodies lay on deck, wrapped in canvas and lighted with iron shot.

The Reverend Clark read the service... "And I now commit this body to the deep, and its soul to God who gave it."... Two sailors lifted the plank on which Babsie's shrouded form was laid. Was this her free-the bo's'n's locker," Taylor commanded. "Now... tie the bars into the foot of the sail. Good. Now bridle some three-inch stuff from the corners. Here, let me have the end of the rope."

"What is this sail for?" Powdah asked blankly.

"You will see. Fix the leech in the main shrouds. This is about over the hole. Now, when I give the word, throw the bottom of the sail as far out from the ship's rail as possible. The iron will sink the canvas. The water will suck it against the hole and cover it."

"But the canvas will not stay over the hole," Powdah protested.

"It must be tied there. Somebody must take this bottom rope and swim under the keel of the ship. You will be a good man for that, Powdah," Taylor grinned. "You are a strong swimmer."

Powdah looked fearfully over the rail. A shark's fin ripped the surface of the water. Sharks, like rats, know when the seal has been set on a ship's fate. Powdah's eyes had a white flash.

"Poor devil, did you think I meant it?" Taylor said contemptuously. "Your job is to tie the sail in the rigging." Taylor himself leapt to the rail and made fast the bottom-rope to his waist.

"Now, when I dive, throw out the bottom of the sail. The iron—and my body—will carry it down."

"My son, there is a man," said old Mrs. Martin, picking up yarn on her needles.

"Just God, no. Not him," Margaret murmured, sinking her teeth into the back of her hand. He heard nothing. Intent, adroit, he stood poised. "Now men." He dived, and the men threw out the sail. A monstrous rat, running along the ship's rail, jumped after him. There was a spot of foam on the water that had closed over his head. Margaret covered her face with her hands.
