CHAPTER I

WHEN Deputy Alec Inglis took over the job of trying to trace the stickup man who had held up Hadley's Filling Station in the little town of Glenby, most of his fellow-townspeople gathered around the doorway of the gas station to jeer while Alec instructed his cameraman as to what he wanted photographed.

The general opinion of the town was that Hadley was right in accusing Alec of going in for time-wasting monkey-business, especially when they heard him order the photographer to get plenty of pictures of the doorknobs. "What good is it?" Hadley demanded impatiently, to the accompaniment of nods of approval. "I want you to catch this burglar, not to set up as a photographer."

Alec nodded comfortably. "That's what I'm trying to do," he explained. "Get a line on who he is, and then go after him."

"You're crazy, Alec," Hadley snapped. "If the chief wasn't on his vacation, we'd get some action, instead of fingerprint pictures."

Alec smiled. "You'll get just that, Hadley," he replied. "I'm going to send these pictures to a place where they've got over ten million fingerprints on file. If this fellow has a record anywhere, chances are we'll get within shooting distance of him, anyhow."

The new clerk of the Identification Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation shook his head mournfully. "I still don't see how that thing works," he said to the operator who sat behind a huge card-sorting machine.

"It's simple enough." The operator took the card which the clerk held up to him. "I'll show you with this rush job you've got here. You notice that each one of these cards is punched with holes, but that every one has a different combination of holes on it. Now watch." He adjusted a couple of knobs on the machine as he went on talking. "The card itself gives the special fingerprint classification of the criminal they're looking for—and I've just set the machine to that combination. If we have his fingerprints on file, his card will fall into that drawer over there," he pointed to a drawer on the side of the machine. "when it matches up with the way I've set the machine."

"Now, watch," he said, as he snapped a switch. A steady stream of cards started to pour from the storage compartments through the machine.

A few minutes later, the operator smiled. "There she is, son," he said to the wide-eyed clerk. "Take it away." He fished a card out of the drawer and handed it to the clerk, who still shook his head in bewilderment over how it all worked while he marched down the hall to deliver the card to an officer in the Fingerprint Division.

The officer rushed into his supervisor's office. "We've just checked those Glenby fingerprints, chief," he announced.

"Any luck?"

"Yes, sir! Here it is—his complete record."

The supervisor glanced at the card which his officer had given him. "Hmm," he murmured. "Freddie Martin . . . alias Frank Marson . . . alias Martin Fredericks . . . hold-guess the crime wave's about over, isn't it?"

Alec nodded. "I guess so. He's probably moved on to some other town. I'll run over and tell the filling station people."

"Hey, wait a minute," the deputy said, as Alec rose to his feet. "You're not forgetting to call the Missus, are you? You were going to drive her home."

Alec snapped his fingers. "That's right. You go see Hadley at the filling station." He picked up the phone on his desk. "Hello. Hello. Let me talk to the Parisienne Beauty Parlor."

Miss Petty, her hat and coat already on, was closing the cash register when she heard the telephone ring. She picked up the receiver. "Hello. La Parisienne Beauty Parlor. . . Oh, yes, Alec. She left about three minutes ago. She said for you to meet her at the La Mode Dress Shop. Goodbye." She hung up and turned to the colored maid. "I'm going now. Tell Dot to look up after she finishes with her customer."

The maid nodded. "Yes'm. Goodnight," she called, as Miss Petty left the shop. She walked to the back where young attractive Dot Bronson was working on the hair of a blonde. "Miss Per-ty say you lock up, Miss Bronson. Dot nodded. "All right." The blonde smiled languidly. "Sorry to keep you late, honey."

"Oh, that's all right. I'm about finished, anyway." She handed a mirror to her customer who looked smiling and rose from the chair.

Dot took the luxurious fur coat from the hands of the maid who had brought it to the chair. "Do you mind if I help you on with this? I've always been crazy to touch a beautiful fur coat."

The blonde smiled. "That so? Why not try it on?"

Dot's face broke into a happy smile. "Thanks," she said, and slipped into the coat, to protrude before the long mirror with both hands held in the pockets.

"You're certainly a great help to that coat, sister. With what you've got, you could go places," the customer said, approvingly.

Dot nodded. "That's what I want to do—go places. But I don't want to hitch-hike." Her right hand came out of the pocket of the coat and her eyes narrowed as she glanced quickly at the expensive compact lying in her palm. She saw her customer busy taking her hat from the maid, and with a quick gesture slipped the compact into her bosom. "It's sure a nice coat," she said coolly, as she slipped it off.

TRUTH about ADVERTISING

By CHARLES B. ROTH

MY FRIEND asked me if I would go with him to buy a horse. I went. We traipsed from one dealer's to another. One man asked us $300 for a horse. The next man had a horse which looked no better, but his price was $450. Before the afternoon was over we had seen horses ranging in price all the way from $150 to $14,000.

Now, the $14,000 horse was a much better animal than the $150 horse. No use to deny that.

But nowhere along the line did we find a stabilized market. Had we bought we would have been paying a price which the seller thought his horse was worth. There was no market authority we could consult which would tell my friend whether he was being overcharged or undercharged.

That same evening I went out to buy a small household item—one which is advertised in all the newspapers. I knew what the market price would be: advertising had told me.

With confidence I asked the clerk for what I wanted and put my 25 cents down on the counter. Had he said: "I am sorry, sir, but the price is 50 cents." I would have left and gone somewhere else.

What assurance have I, as a consumer, that someone won't take advantage of me and overcharge me in this bold way?

My only assurance is the advertising which I read in the newspaper. That is my market and my buyer's guide. It tells me the prices I must expect to pay. Let the seller who tries to charge me more beware.

It also tells me what quality I may expect. Let the seller who tries to give me a poorer substitute beware.

So you see that advertising stabilizes prices and enables me, no matter how inexperienced I am in business, to buy with the same expertness and assurance of a professional buyer who spends his life buying for a large concern.

No one objects to paying the established price for something he wants. But all of us hate to be robbed by an unscrupulous man who, taking advantage of our ignorance, "soaks us good and plenty."

The way to avoid being "soaked" in this complete way is to buy advertised goods from merchants who advertise.

There was a time in America when there were no set prices. Each merchant charged what he thought "the traffic would bear." Advertising came to the rescue of the consumer. It led the way to the established prices you pay when you buy anything today — except, perhaps, horses.

Making the Most of Pastures

By T. C. RICHARDSON, Associate Editor
Breeder-Feeder Association

The mower is conceded to be the best pasture growing implement, and this applies sometimes to planted summer pastures (Sudan grass, etc.) as well as to permanent pastures where the mower keeps down weed competition with the grass. Both on permanent and temporary pastures the use of the mower cannot be dated by the calendar, but must depend upon the condition to be met. In most of the Southwest the spring growth of weeds has already been mowed before now, or has been permitted to seed. Certain other weeds however, come along later in the season and should be mowed about the time they begin blooming.

Briars and sprouts of various kinds, and seedlings of certain trees, also yield to the mower's persistent use. It is generally conceded that July and August are the best months in which to cut sprouts, robbing the roots of the sustaining foliage before the storage of foods in the roots is completed for the season. This operation is hard on the mower but it is worth it, and an old mower which is past its usefulness for cutting grass will still cut weeds and sprouts. Many farmers who have no hay to cut are buying second-hand mowers to use on the weeds and sprouts in the pastures.

There are times, however, when the mower is more important in the temporary pasture. Everyone knows that when Sudan or other hay and pasture grasses begin to get "stemmy"—that is when they shoot up the course seed stems and start making seed, they are less palatable to livestock and also less nutritious. We have all seen such a pasture where the foliage has been eaten off and the bare stems left standing.

If the pasture gets ahead of the animals which graze it—that is when they do not keep it grazed fairly close—the mower comes into play to cut back the seed stems and throw all the growth to new foliage instead of seed. Fresh growth has a higher protein content than old growth, and is more palatable besides. It will pay to run the mower over the temporary Sudan grass pastures even though there is not enough hay to rake and cure, whenever stock do not keep the seed stalks down.

After corn is laid by grass and weeds often spring up and grow luxuriantly. This late summer growth can be turned into cash by grazing the corn fields with sheep. Fencing off such temporary grazing has been greatly cheapened and simplified by the invention of the electric fence, which, with one or two wires properly installed and energized (by battery or power) keeps the animals within bounds quite effectively. The sheep may destroy a small amount of the corn, but the grains from the grass and weeds will more than offset the loss in grain and the corn ground will be in better condition than if the weeds and grass were permitted to grow unmolested, and seed the ground for next year.

Temporary summer pastures will also furnish more and better grazing if they are divided and the divisions grazed in rotation. Here again the temporary fence, electric or otherwise, pays well for the trouble and the moderate expense of installing. Dollars are lost every year on many Southwestern farms thru failure to take advantage of the grazing available, when it is available. There must be animals to graze and fence to confine them, but there is no form of wasted opportunity so common, and which offers so great a promise for extra farm income.

The new agriculture which is growing out of the cotton crisis is a balanced agriculture, of which both crops and livestock are essential parts. We have too long thought of "agriculture" as crop farming, and "animal industry" as a thing apart. True agriculture includes both, for nature's own laws demand that plants and animals be kept together in that God-given reciprocal relation by which each feeds the other and the residue returns to the soil—nothing lost.

MOUND EDGES OUT WHITE HALL IN BEST GAME OF YEAR

Otis McBroom turned the heavy hitting Mound boys back from the plate for six innings Sunday, his smoking fast ball blazing past the Mound hitters so fast that they could not get any great number of safeties. But he tired in the 7th, and there the trouble started. Mound garnered one run in the last of the seventh to tally the first marker of the game, which up to that time had been a great pitcher's duel between McBroom and stocky Foy Wicker, who pitched one of his best games. The White Hall boys, however, came back to score in the first of the eighth, to tie things up, 1-1. In the last of the eighth stanza the Mound boys began blasting. They scored one run and put two men on when the White Hall infield became jumpy and threw a couple away. With one down and two men on the base paths Bud Evans, Mound gardener, came up and sent one of McBroom's fast ones into the far recesses of the outfield for a round tripper, making the score 5-1, and the White Hall fans breathed a sigh of regret and began to file from the ball grounds. They stopped their departure, however, when the home club got a couple of men on. Pierce Richards, husky White Hall receiver, grabbed his bat and strode to the plate with a determined glint in his eye. He sent the White Hall rooters into wild ecstasies of joy when he slammed out a four-bagger to pull his club to within one run of the Mound team. Wicker hitched up his belt took a firm stance on the rubber, and put out the next two men to face him thereby winning himself the stormiest ball game of the year.

The Pidcoke 'Cokers remained in the league lead by slaughtering a hapless Jonesboro club, 16-1. Schoolboy Rutherford was again stingy with base hits, allowing only three, while his mates were pounding the Eagle hurler for 14.

The local fans must have been thrilled by the beauty of the Hornet bat power Sunday. Poised men in gold at the plate kept pounding base hits into every point of the playing field to take a one-sided 18-4 victory from the Topsep boys. Tooter Hall went the route for the locals lobbing them over most of the way.

Blackfoot remained in a tie for second place by winning their third straight game, 16-4 over the Turnersville Buffs.

DOIN' THE WORLD'S FAIR

By Byron M. Fisher

There were jangling of spurs and the brilliant flash of lances as the highly trained horses of the Royal Mounted Police pranced to music in the Court of Peace, before the Federal Building, on July 1st, which is celebrated thruout Canada as Dominion Day, the day on which the four original colonies, Upper Canada (Ontario), Lower Canada (Quebec), New Brunswick and Nova Scotia united in 1867 to form the nucleus of the present nation. W. D. Euler, Minister of Trade and Commerce, representing Canada with Grover Whalen and other dignitaries speaking over a national broadcasting hookup in front of the Canadian Pavilion. The recent visit of the King and Queen to the United States was mentioned several times thruout the addresses as a high token to the friendship between the two countries. Thousands packed Presidential Row South, part of which was roped off for invited guests.

Following a colorful parade thru the Fair streets, three hundred members of the Medinah Temple of Chicago celebrated Shrine Day recently. The brightly uniformed Shriners with an Oriental Band of musettes and drums, a sax band and a singing group of Chanters, presented a striking picture in the Court of Peace where they were welcomed by Vincent Murphy, representing the Fair's president. Following the assembly here they disbanded to tour the grounds informally. Among those at the head of the Chicago Medinah Temple delegation was Frank Roundy, oldest past illustrious Potentate of the organization.

You can't live a bad reputation down, it seems, at least without a good effort on your part. Two or three years ago miles of New Brunswick roads were torn up and tourists came back howling that the people of the province, not content with accepting the worst nature could do, insisted on using their utmost ingenuity to make the motorists' lives as miserable as possible. Now practically all the trunk roads are macadamized with a very high grade of material, but us guys in the New Brunswick Booth still hear that remark day in and day out: "Those terrible roads!" Once and for all: "Them roads is paved!"

The Savoy Theatre, where the colored jitterbugs go thru one of the wildest jamborees human eye ever witnessed, has filed a suit of $10,000 against the Fair. The grounds for the suit are that the Fair "forced" them to be ready for opening on April 30th, official opening date of the Fair, whereas the official opening of the Amusement World was deferred until May 13th.

Virginia Dare, the little Miss said to be the first settler ever born in America and a member of Sir Walter Raleigh's "Lost Colony," is in prominence at the Fair again. Two drab pieces of stone bearing carved names of settlers believed to have been members of the Raleigh Colony and thought to be related to Virginia Dare are now on display at the Georgia Pavilion. A stone bearing a legend which, it is thought, indicates that Virginia lost her life at the age of four in an Indian massacre and which, if true, dissipates all the romantic stories woven around the little girl, is on display at Rockefeller Center in New York.

Since song writers will rehash old melodies in swing style under new titles, we're someday going to take over "I Didn't Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier" and in lilting rhythm, sprout forth with: "I Didn't Raise My Boy to Be a Scribler". Scriblers are found in every nation, language and style of scribbling, it seems. They've been decorating the base of the Washington Statue with initials and those "Suzie Loves Alonzo" type of things since the Fair began, and despite the efforts of Fair employees to erase their efforts the base is constantly well decorated.

The eleven mark was reached around the first month in Fair attendance. In two months eleven millions. In six months, 33 millions. That's easy mathematics, though it's not quite that simple to prophesy what the first year's attendance will be. If it hits only 33 millions, however, the attendance for the first year will have been only a little more than half what some forecast before the show opened.

About 7,500 persons drowned in the United States last year.

As a cure for "nerves", rug making, modeling and mandloom weaving have been proposed.

ALLENE CUNNINGHAM—

was a misfit in Hollywood society, and her parents called her home.

At home she received an invitation from the Light Opera Company of Chicago and went there for voice study and a concert in Kembell hall. The National Broadcasting company offered her a contract totaling $1,000 a week. She sang for Lily Pons and others. Chicago papers played her up as a sensational find.

Such may have been happiness to some people, but to Allene all the reporters and photographers were nothing more than a nuisance. She wanted to return home, but her employers refuse to let her go. Then one night she slipped away and flew back to Kansas. The next year she attended Wichita university.

Miss Cunningham sings at the Ireland Baptist Church next Sunday night.
