

TWO MORE BIG RODEO SHOWS: 5,000 ENJOY FIRST NIGHT

RODEO LEADOFF IS PARADE, THEN THE BIG SHOW WITH CAPACITY CROWD: CRAZY WATER GANG HERE THURSDAY FOR BROADCAST. STAGE SHOW AND DANCE

No, "Smiling Bob" Saunders is not even smiling yet, even after that enormous crowd that jammed and crammed Gatesville's Rodeo and Frontier Celebration arena on the opening night, Wednesday evening, which was variously estimated from 3,500 to 7,500. Anyway, there were lots of folks there.

First, beginning with the parade, which out-paraded anything yet seen in Gatesville, which was about 2½ miles in length (might be stretching it a bit) but, anyway, it had four bands, Hardin-Simmons Cowboy Band, GHS Band, Waco Summer Band and the State

Juvenile Training School Band, and, any number of floats, riders etc., etc.

Drawing the most notice, where we were stationed, were the Cowboy Band, Regal and Bailey Wrecking Shop floats, on the comis side, and Painter's, Leaird's and Bluebonnet Beauty Shop and others on the "purty" side.

Streets were equally jammed and crammed with people viewing the parade, and the majority remained for the sterling performances of the best riders in the world and the toughest rodeo stock in the world which was brought here by Everett E. Colborn, which was Madison Square Garden's Championship Stock.

Here are the results as tabulated by the Rodeo Secretary Eiland Lovejoy: Bareback bronc riding; 1, Mutt Ray, 2 Tack Bolton, 3, Frank Griffin, 4, Don Birom.

Bull riding: 1, O. B. Lynum, and he was the only one to qualify (stayed on until the whistle blew). Just to show you how tough the brahama bulls really were.

Calf Roping: Roy Matthews, 17.1 seconds, Leo Huff, 19 secs., Leo Brannon, 21.4 secs., and N. E. Barron 23 seconds.

Wild Cow Milking: Jim Saunders, 31.2 secs., Leo Huff, 33.3 sec. Weldon Mitchell, 38.2 secs., Ted Powers, 44.4 secs.

Steer Wrestling: Dub Phillips, 7 secs., Roy Sewalt, 11.2 secs., Sam Stewart 15 secs, Tack Bolton 18.

STAGE SHOW AND AIR SHOW BY CRAZY WATER GANG

Gatesville went on the air Wednesday at 12:45 to 1 when Jack Amlung Conrad Brady and the boss, Hal Collins gave the old home town a break, and released a little publicity, thru the ether, when they were brought here by Charles Powell of the Palace Theatre.

Practically a full auditorium greeted the boys at the performance and they put on a swell show, receiving a sweller reception.

Sugar Cane and February, along with the other boys, kept the crowd in an uproar, and did themselves well by their sustained applause of the performance.

Thursday night, at 10 p. m. they played for a dance at Tippit's Skating Rink.

Folks, there's two more performances of this premier event, the Gatesville Rodeo and Frontier Celebration, and tonight, especially, will present Hell's Angels, voted by the Rodeo Association of America, as the toughest bronc in the world will be included in the festivities.

Don't say you've seen it—see it again! Due to the number of entries, it is impossible for all the boys to appear every night, and you'll see new riders nearly every night.

Don't forget, two more big shows! Now smile, Bob!

SENATORIAL CANDIDATE HAS A WORD FOR VOTERS

Henry Clark, candidate for State Senator, of Stephenville is in Gatesville, and will be here for all four of the rodeo performances.

He has been an enthusiast for rodeo performances all his life and is one of Texas' authorities on rodeo entertainments.

Mr. Clark has not missed attending the Fort Worth rodeo a year since its organization. He has been a member of the Texas Cowboy Reunion for years at Stamford, Texas. That rodeo is given up to be the best amateur rodeo anywhere.

He says that the stock at the Gatesville rodeo furnished by the Lightening C Ranch is the best he ever saw.

Mr. Clark will probably have something else to say in this paper after the four performances.

“JUST RIDIN’ LONG”: HEAR OF RODEO VIA AIR: COME DOWN

Here's a highlight on the local Gatesville's Rodeo and Frontier Celebration.

We don't know who they were, but they're from Illinois. They were traveling south in Oklahoma and heard a broadcast of the big show here, and decided, and did come on down to Gatesville to see the rodeo and enjoy themselves. On our register, we have the names of Alma and Curtis Sherman, and it might have been them.

We just don't know.

Anyway, that's the publicity received from the big show here. And we think it's worth it!

Mound Tramples Plainview 22-3

Sunday at Plainview the Mound baseball club with Foy Wicker in the box romped on the Plainview team by a score of 22-3. Sparked by the flawless hurling of the youthful Wicker the Mound lads leaped into the lead early in the contest and continued on to finish away out in front.

Tooter Hall, Plainview pitcher who has made several nice starts thus far in the season, couldn't check the Mound sluggers whose powerhouse drives far into the outfield sent Mound runners around the circuit at regular intervals during the game. Bailey also pitched several innings.

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE:
When Alma Brehmer is found murdered in her penthouse apartment, suspicion falls upon John Webb, her attorney and former sweetheart. Webb has been crusading against a local graft ring led by Vincent Cushing, Alma's lover, who is friendly with the Police Commissioner. Webb is released for lack of evidence, much to the relief of Ann Seymour, pretty but very naive night club entertainer, who is very much in love with him. A couple of days later Webb enters his office to find that his secretary has been murdered with a knife in the same way that Alma Brehmer was killed.

Chapter Five

Webb, still reluctant to believe his eyes, stared down at the still figure. He was snapped back to reality by the feeling of chilly steel around his wrists. Inspector Fromm had entered the office and was festooning the dazed Mr. Webb with a pair of handcuffs. With Fromm were Joyce, Cushing, and a couple of detectives.
"Just routine, Webb," said Fromm sourly. "I'm sure you can explain everything."
"Get the idea, Webb?" Cushing smirked.
"The whole picture comes to me at once," Webb retorted — "including the frame."
While they fired questions at him you'd go crazy before you were twenty.

"Hey, give me that!" yelled Webb, grabbing the paper and examining it. "Eureka! Puss, you're a hero!" He kissed her.
"Gee, I like that," Ann glowed.
"But what was it for?"
"For finding me this!"
"I'll find some more."
"All right. Here's some on account." He kissed her again and handed the paper to Rus. It was a receipt made out by Stuyvesant Joyce to Vincent Cushing, acknowledging payment of $25,000.
"What a headline!" exulted Rus. "Joyce sells police department to Cushing!"
He sent the damning papers with a scribbled note to the "Citizen", the newspaper that had been supporting him and Senator Scott's anti-Cushing highway amendment.

Webb's disclosure of the Joyce-Cushing graft deals rent the city government into that unhappy condition known in journalistic circles as "wide open". Joyce was summarily bounced out of his job as Police Commissioner and succeeded by Inspector Fromm; and the proof of Cushing's perfidy made the passage of Scott's highway amendment a certainty.

Webb and Rus, moistly celebrating their victory in Webb's apartment, were unkindly interrupted by a visit from the new Police Commissioner, bowed down with evil tidings. It hurt him more than it did Mr. Webb, etc., but the opposition press was still yelling for Webb's scalp as the prein the hope of extorting some damaging admission, Ann and Rus barged gaily into the office.

Webb, reluctant to believe his eyes, stared at the still figure.

"Oh, hello, Rus," said Webb. "You know all my psychopathic friends here, don't you?"
Rus took in the situation with one expert glance, and left.
They were still questioning Webb, Ann meanwhile having discovered Miss Ater's body and fainted peacefully away, when Rus returned and briskly presented a legal document to Fromm. It was the life-saving habeas corpus.
"Okay, Webb," grunted Joyce, as the handcuffs were removed, "but you're bound to run out of judges."

Mike Daley, he of the light foot and the heavy-laden glass, was summoned to the office for a council of war. Webb was temporarily at liberty, but the presumption of guilt was strong against him. Nevertheless, he remained optimistic.

"You haven't anything new against the forces of evil?" Rus queried.
"We'll get something," said Webb airily. Rus emitted a squawk of stage mirth.

"Well, they laughed at Marconi," Webb reminded him.

"I don't know why. I never thought his stuff was funny."
"The murder candidates have narrowed down to Cushing and Godena for my money," speculated Webb. "Look, Mike — do you still remember how to open a safe?"

"I don't have to know how. I just blow on 'em and they open." He was despatched on a little errand forthwith.

Daley, having visited the Cushing home and blown on the safe, carried his treasure trove to Webb's apartment, where Webb and Rus were waiting for him and Ann was showing them her newest purchases made against Webb's charge account. They began rummaging through the papers which Daley unloaded from all pockets.

"Mr. Joyce sure crosses his 't's funny," observed Ann, looking at a slip of paper. "I heard that if you cross your 't's a certain way sumptuous murder of Miss Ater, not to mention Alma Brehmer.

"Look, Fromm — I can't go to jail now," protested Webb. "Give me a few more hours to figure this thing out."

Fromm, who after all owed his present new eminence to Webb's exposure of Joyce, agreed to an extension of grace, placing Webb on his honor to surrender himself at headquarters next morning.

By the time Fromm was leaving, Ann had arrived to exhibit her daily purchase of hundred-dollar gowns and other trifles — still on Webb's charge accounts. Her jubilation expired when she discovered Sarilla Cushing's coat, left there since the night of her losing battle with Webb.

Ann, almost strangling with a seizure of that rare disease known as a woman's jealousy rage, seized the coat, ripped it to shreds, and flung them practically bleeding at Webb's agitated feet.

"I wouldn't take you back now," she sobbed, "if you came to me on your hands and feet — and this time I mean it!" She stormed out of the apartment.

But Webb did not pursue her on any combination of limbs, for he had seen fluttering out of the torn pocket of Sarilla's coat a certain aged newspaper clipping. Retrieving it from the floor, he read this fragment of a news story:

"Funeral services were held today. Samuel Brehmer leaves behind his only daughter, Alma. The murdered man was greatly mourned by every man and woman in the town — with the prayer on everyone's lips that some day the murderer of Samuel T. Brehmer be brought to justice."

On the margin of the clipping were the words, "Morganville, Texas" — scrawled in Cushing's handwriting.

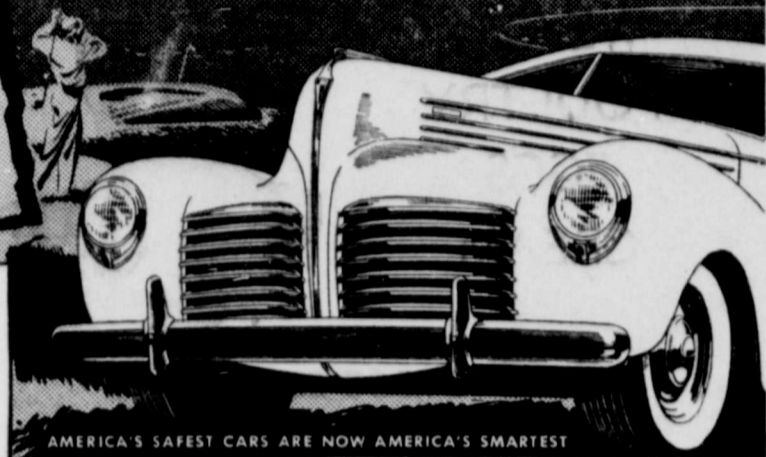

"I've got it!" shouted Webb. "Godena's the guy that murdered Alma's father. Alma had this clipping. Cushing discovered it, and held the information as a club over Godena's head. Rus, how long would it take you to pack your toothbrush and charter us a plane for Morganville, Texas?"
"Okay, chum — I'll get the plane."

WASHINGTON NEWS
FROM OUR CONGRESSMAN
W. R. POAGE

While I feel that we are all taking an ever increasing interest in the news of the world, and while I am sure that many of you are more interested than ever in receiving reports direct from Washington, this will be my last weekly news letter until after the election. In this issue of this paper you will find my announcement for re-election. I have furnished these weekly news letters for a number of years, but I have never felt that it was proper for me to write them while I was candidate for office. I shall, therefore, discontinue them until after the campaign is over.

World events are moving rapidly these days and events in Washington are keeping pace. The sessions of the House as well as of the committees have become long and strenuous. Ordinarily at this stage of the session the committees will have very largely completed their work. One month ago it seemed that such would be the case this year, but now they are all meeting and considering new legislation—most of it relating in one way or another with the defense of our country. This means that the session will be prolonged. I expect to stay as long as the need exists. My vote may be needed here to assist in a preparedness program and to keep us out of some unforeseen involvement in the European debacle.

This past week we approved the President reorganization plan, of placing the Bureau of Immigration under the Department of Justice. I am a member of the Committee on Immigration and I voted for this proposal and did all I could to further it because I believe that the Department of Justice is in a position to and is inclined to deal much more firmly with subversive alien groups than has been the Department of Labor, from which the Bureau was moved. We must look to our internal defenses as well as to our external.

However, neither Congress nor the President is overlooking purely military preparations. On Tuesday the House passed two very important bills. One to expedite naval shipbuilding, and the other to expand the naval air force. I, of course, supported both of these bills. The one relating to shipbuilding involved the removal of some of the existing red-tape and minute control that at present slows down naval construction. Personally, I feel that we made a step in the right direction, but I feel that we are going to have to give the industry still further relief from governmental regulations if we are to keep pace with the aggressor nations. We understand here that Japan is building battleships in just about one-half the time it takes the United States. We are trying to cut the red-tape.

I think it is interesting to know that on tomorrow (June 1st) the United States will launch our first new battleship in 19 years. The S. S. Washington will go down the ways at Philadelphia tomorrow, and two weeks later her sister ship the North Carolina will follow at New York. Nor are we overlooking the fact that while the British retreat from Flanders has shown that battleships are still a vital force, the German advance has at the same time proven that to be safe much less effective these ships must be supported by a powerful force of modern aircraft. We are, therefore, expanding the naval air force, just as we voted to expand the army air force the preceding week.

On yesterday we considered what was termed the War Department Civil Functions Appropriation Bill. This bill generally carries the appropriations for river and harbor improvements and for flood control. This year the President suggested that most of the ordinary items be left out and that the bill be modified to provide for the improvement of a number of needed naval and aviation bases in strategic points all the way from the Panama Canal to Alaska, with the largest expenditure at Panama for the modernization of the existing lock and the construction of a new set of lock all with the idea, of course, of enabling our one-ocean navy to more effectively protect two sea coasts. While I am heartily in favor of the two-ocean navy, it will take so many years to construct that I gladly supported the President's proposal, which carried by a vote of 188 to 141.

You have, of course, read the President's message which he sent to Congress yesterday. I do not feel that it should be considered as an alarming message, but on the contrary as a frank recognition of the facts. I am happy to have a President who is willing to watch the development of world events and to quickly and firmly shape American policy to meet them.
