Washington "As It Looks From Here" OMAR BURELSON Congressman 17th District

THE JAPANESE 'CHERRY TREES' are in full bloom here in Washington. They are more popular now than they were ten years ago.

All this reminds me that just ten years ago I was in a Navy whose major purpose was to kill Japanese, Germans and Italians. Now, ten years later, we are calling all these enemies of yesterday our "allies and friends" while a country we fought alongside in 1945 is our Number One enemy.

It reminds us of the fickleness of events. It is the age-old question of the rise and fall of nations and peoples.

The fact remains that some of the vanquished in the last war may hold the key to world stability in their areas.

Regardless of the enmities of the Nazi regime ten years ago, the Germans have the strongest national character on the continent of Europe. Likewise, the Japanese are head and shoulders above anything in the Far East. This is evidenced by their ambition as a nation, if nothing else. Many years may not pass until again they may become our problem.

It seems that in this world in which we live problems are not exactly solved—they are only submerged by the weight of greater problems to take their place. For instance, the centuries old controversy between the Christians and Moslems was never solved. It has simply been submerged and still exists as surely as it did 2000 years ago.

THE CONGRESS is taking a few days recess for Easter. Perhaps during this "breather" and during the time which holds a religious significance for millions of people, members of Congress may take an inventory of themselves at this approximate half-way mark of the Session. It is an easy matter to take an inventory of the accomplishments of the Congress, but it is not as easy to take an inventory of one's self. To me that is more important.

In the almost three months the Congress has been in session, there has been introduced nearly 7000 bills; 175 reports have been filed; 12 bills have become law; about 40 roll call votes have been taken and 98 lobbyists have registered.

THE INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE COMMITTEE is now holding hearings on amendments to the Natural Gas Act. The purpose of the bill introduced is to remove the authority of the Federal Power Commission to control price at the well-head. This may seem like a question which would involve only those people interested in the production of gas and not concern the average citizen. Actually, however, it involves a very fundamental principal as to whether or not the Federal Government should have the power to regulate the price of a commodity at the place where it is produced. If the Federal Government can control the price of natural gas at the point where it is produced, why not have the Federal Government control the price of potatoes, the sale of shoes, or the price of tooth-picks as they come off the assembly line? I think the Federal Government has no business in this sort of price fixing.

both political parties are making a mistake in thinking that small tax cuts are more attractive to the voters of this country than a balanced budget. Our mail indicates that most citizens, including those with low incomes, think that they will be served best by stopping the inflation caused by deficit financing, and most of them think we should stop piling up additional debts for our children and grandchildren to pay.

Texas Viewpoint In Washington By PRICE DANIEL U. S. Senator

Deficit Financing. Long before coming to Congress your Senator has opposed deficit financing by both State and Federal Governments. It was a pleasure to have a part in passing the "pay as you go" amendment in Texas which has kept a balanced budget in our State most of the time since its adoption. Except for the 10 per cent tax reduction which went into effect automatically this year, I have opposed other tax reductions until the Federal budget is balanced.

The big debate in Washington this week has been about taxes. It arose over the bill to extend present corporate and excise tax rates for another year as recommended by the President. Everyone realized the necessity for this extension, but the House added a tax reduction amendment effective January 1, 1956, in the form of a $20 tax credit for each taxpayer and dependent. Democrats in the Senate supported a similar type of tax credit but with a "balance the budget" feature added.

The Administration cried "politics" at the Democratic effort to provide now for future tax relief. It is true that "politics" has been at the root of this fight, but it has not been all on the Democratic side. The Republicans clearly indicated that they would offer some type of attractive tax reduction proposal next year just before the elections. That is one of the main reasons that the House Democrats decided to sponsor their type of tax reduction now even though it would not be effective until next year.

Our national debt exceeds the total national debts of all other nations combined, and it has been my view that we should not increase this debt short of total war. Any present tax reduction or new government expense will be made on borrowed money to be repaid some day with interest by ourselves, our children or their children. That is also one of the reasons the writer voted against the recent salary increases for members of Congress. They were wholly justified, and tax cuts are wholly justified, but some of us think they should come not as part of increased deficit financing but only after the budget is balanced. That is why Senate Democrats provided for balancing the budget as part of our future tax reduction proposals.

The President's Mistake. If President Eisenhower had stayed firmly behind his campaign pledge to balance the budget and stop deficit financing, the present tax fight would have been avoided. A great majority of the Democrats in Congress would have agreed that no further tax cuts should be made until the budget is balanced. However, the President made the mistake of recommending tax cuts and adjustments especially attractive for corporations and business interests last year in spite of an unbalanced budget, and then again this year in his "State of the Union" address. The President said maybe we could cut taxes more next year. He seemed half joking or at least amused, as he leaned over the rostrum and predicted an election year tax cut.

New Texas Appointments. Last week two more Texans were appointed to highly important posts in Washington. Dillon Anderson, who was reared in McKinney and has practiced law in Houston with Baker, Botts, Andrews and Sheppard, has become a member of the staff of President Eisenhower. He will be Special Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs. Weldon Jones of Farmersville, Texas, has been nominated by the President to become a member of the United States Tariff Commission. He attended Baylor and the University of Texas and has been in government service for many years, part of which was in the Philippine Islands where he served as Acting High Commissioner on several occasions.

IN SOME parts of the country, a license is required for those who live in trailers and pick up pennies by reading tea leaves, yet every day hundreds of prominent folks about the nation make all sorts of fantastic predictions and it isn't costing them a cent. I propose a profuse tax be levied against anyone indulging in anything related to the art of prognosticating. I don't propose in any way to do away with free speech. Everybody has the right to speak his mind. It just seems to me that a lot of people are predicting things they really don't believe merely to get their name in the headlines. For instance, I read three separate articles recently. Each was written by a V. I. P. They predicted, in this order: 1. We will have another war within three months. 2. We will have a war within one year. 3. We will have a war within five years. Seems as if I read somewhere where somebody said we wouldn't have another war, but if I did, the guy didn't know what he was talking about. Three-to-one are pretty good odds in any game. War is only one thing. There are predictions we'll reach the moon in a few years; the world will end soon; America will become an iceberg within a few decades; the Communists will win the world. I'm no worrier, but these things bother me. I wonder if the people who foresee these things so clearly would be so quick to tell the world about it if they were required to buy a license before prognosticating?

The Home Demonstration Club prepared supper last Tuesday night for the Hico Lions Club. Several couples of this community were guests of the Club and their wives. A large crowd came out from Hico. Everyone seemed to enjoy the meal and the program put on by the Lions Club. Thanks to the H. D. Club and Hico Lions.

It Happened Here or Near

By E. E. DAWSON

There are a considerable number through this region that afford a lot of country graveyards scattered about of interesting items for one delving into the past. Not long ago we mentioned the Barbee Cemetery, which is a few miles down the river from Hico. The writer has not yet visited that spot, but he plans to one of these days, along with some old-timer and see what it reveals of historical interest.

One day last week we picked up Robert Bowden of Carlton and visited three old cemeteries, and these paragraphs will be about the findings in two of them.

We first went to Pecan Cemetery thinking it was where the seven identical tombstones were. But it was not, though it has many interesting features. We plan to get hold of Doc Carley and let him brief us on that historic burying ground, and two or three more on Resley's Creek, and along the Leon.

It was in Liveoak Cemetery where we found the seven tombstones exactly alike, and all set in a row, and in the order in the order in which the graves were made. It is a tragic story that is behind these seven identical grave markers, each set on a base of sandstone, and standing about five feet high, just a slim square shaft with the inscription, all of marble, one white and the others gray. It was back in the eighteen-nineties that the first of the graves was made. Here is the legend on the tombstone:

L. N. WEBB
Son of T. J. and N. E. Webb
Born August 30, 1866
Died April 18, 1893

Then there follows, in this order: H. P. Webb, Born March 3, 1872, Died July 9, 1895; W. B. Webb, Born July 25, 1870, Died November 13, 1895; Ella J. Webb, Born May 8, 1876, Died July 17, 1898; S. P. Webb, Born September 21, 1880, Died January 25, 1902; Becca A. Webb, Born June 6, 1878, Died April 17, 1902; Georgia E. Deaton, wife of D. C. Deaton, Born June 11, 1865, Died September 18, 1909.

The story, told me some years ago by an old-timer, was that all of these members of the Webb family died of tuberculosis, and after the death of the seventh, the family what remained of it, moved to West Texas somewhere and the rest of them avoided the dread plague. It would be interesting to know where the rest of the family was buried, or if some of them still survive.

At the foot of the first grave is a noble cedar tree, now getting to be somewhat of a giant. The road to the Live Oak Cemetery turns left from the Carlton-Dublin road, about two miles toward Dublin from Purvis.

Then Robert Bowden and I drove to the Turnbow Cemetery, which is to the right of the Carlton-Dublin road, about half way between Carlton and Purvis. A bit more than a mile from where you turn off you come to the Turnbow Cemetery, the neatest and best kept cemetery we have ever seen anywhere, with the exception of the Bethel Cemetery down in Ellis County at the old Bethel Camp meetings grounds, where the Methodists have a beautiful church and encampment buildings, and where they have an annual camp meeting yet. Wife and I passed there a few years ago in the autumn and it looked as if every grave had a huge coxcomb plant growing on it, in full bloom. It was a glorious sight.

The Turnbow Cemetery has a comely iron fence, with appropriate gates, around it is perfectly kept, and almost every burial lot has some appropriate decoration. The legend on the first grave to made in the place reads like this:
CHESLEY TURNBOW
Born Sept. 2, 1805
Died April 29, 1880

The Turnbow family came in real pioneer days to that community, and the burial ground takes its name from the family. There are a great number of Turnbow graves and burial lots there. And most of the lots with that family name on them are beautifully fixed up, with neat curbs, and a large central monument bearing the name TURNBOW, and the individual graves bearing small markers. Numerous other families have their dead buried there too. A caretaker is employed to keep the grounds properly cultivated and clear of weeds. In the center is a small wooden tabernacle where services may be held in all sorts of weather.

It will repay you to drive out there some day when you have a bit of leisure and see a beautiful spot, reflecting credit on the people of the community.
