Self girl took sick very ill and died after a few days of illness, and little Milton, age 6 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Wright, was killed when pulled behind a truck and with hay. The wagon passed his body.

amount of grass on the ranch. According to the ranch group's findings, a large percentage of the livestock producers in the district could increase their net return per acre of rangeland if they would obtain this balance on their places. It was pointed out by some of the ranchers in the meeting that obtaining this balance on their place would not only give them greater profit, but would also give the land much of the needed protection against soil and water loss. If your rangeland is not producing what you think it should, it may be that you are trying to operate long on livestock and short on grass. You may need a soil and water conservation plan on your land. Inquire at your district office.

THE TATTLER

Well the time is soon coming when I will retire for about three months. Yes, the summer is a time when I prepare myself for the next nine months.

This school of ours has sure been a live one for about two or three weeks.

The girls down at the gym have been yelling about loosing their shorts and blouses. From what I've heard they have lost over 30 pair of shorts. You can tell they must have lost their shorts because of the wild clothes they have been wearing.

The boys—rather one boy—seems to have lost something too. Yes, T.P. can't seem to keep up with his shoes. They couldn't have found his shoes except that Mr. B. happened to look in the drawers of his desk and there they were. Of course the only thing that could be said was—R.B. did it.

Right before the Senior play there appeared quite a few little signs on the walls and of course, again we say—R.B. did it.

Talking about the Senior play, it surely was cute. Those Seniors sure know how to put on a good play. Mrs. Matchett was a swell type teacher. S.P. was very well suited to that part. In fact, all of them seemed well suited to their parts.

One freshman showed how smart she was by sticking something in her foot while she and a real smart Soph were wading in the river. Be careful P.W., you know what M.P. can get you into now.

Talk about wading in the river ask some Sophs and Juniors about last Tuesday night. Some didn't wade; they went swimming, clothes and all. Right, B.R. and R.G.?

Friday night there was a big gathering at the lunch room. I went over to investigate and found that the band was having a banquet. The food looked real good and everyone looked real cute. Some of the girls went wild over the entertainer. I don't blame them—he sounded pretty good.

A new old face was around town about Friday and some more Tuesday. The Army has released some of their buck privates and

IT HAPPENED . . .
HERE OR NEAR
By E. E. DAWSON

Let's just call him Amos and her Zena for I certainly would not use their real names in this true story of life. I have known them a quarter of a century. I am a friend of each of them, and I believe they are my friends. Why tell it then? Because it shows some things that ought not be true of any wedded pair.

He is an outstanding business man, honest, liberal, fairly friendly, successful. She is a talented woman of good appearance and useful in community affairs, and having part in sectional organizations that serve humanity.

Their home is a well-built and well-proportioned house in which they have reared their children, well-trained and with families now of their own, and with a good report among their fellows wherever they have lived and served.

For years husband and wife have lived apart, she in the family house and he in a shack in the side yard of the the home. He cooks his own breakfast and eats his noon meal at a cafe. On rare occasions he may eat the evening meal with his wife. I have no idea what brought about the breach between them: I just know that it is here and is most regrettable.

The unfortunate disturbance has had its effect on the two souls that becomes evident upon association with them. She is comely in face and dress, but this trouble has had its ill effects. If a soul should stand too near an intense heat until it burned her face and caused it then to shrink and distort her features, she would always wear the scars. So it is with Zena. On one side of her life seems shrivelled, shrunken; the other seems swelled beyond its normal size and shape. Now imagine one in such a state: one side emaciated, the other swelled. That's how Zena appears today as she approaches life's final days.

Now let your imagination see Amos in the same way: badly undersize on one side and oversize on the other. He limps through life in its final phase. Of course I never discussed the situation with either husband or wife, nor with children or kindred. You just don't talk about such regrettable things to men and women. You just sorrow that such conditions exist and hope that in a final happy hour the estranged may be able to resolve their differences and become wedded in heart again as well as in outward relations.

How did the estrangement come? One does not have to know details in order to know the reality of the situation. He is strong-willed; she is strongwilled. Each is unwilling to give an inch. After many clashes they just ceased their associations as husband and wife in reality, though never formally separating. Each had his own way. And with what results. He has been unhappy and she has too. The price is too high. The children and grandchildren cannot escape the sorrow of the situation.

Strong-willed people ought to do some strong thinking and see the result of their selfish desire to have their own way in all the relations of life. It is far better to be good Americans and let everybody else enjoy the same privilege of thinking that you enjoy. And to be real Christians and know that showing concern for others is a thousand times better than driving rough-shod over the wills of all other folks. "As you do it to one of the least of these—you do it unto me."

After writing the above I read the article in May Reader's Digest entitled "Women Should Not Play Dumb." It will do you good to read it.

they decided to pay a visit to their old homesite. It was good to see them and hear them too.

Well, I guess that's all for this week. I'm going to be on the lookout for the next few weeks to find some exciting news. I always like to go out with a bang!
